Thus the Sand Man guides the student through the night, hringing him hack to his study, and when the night is gone he reviews himself awakening from a refreshing sleep, the window open, the morning light shining in on his face, and he realizes that the night's experience was all a dream—hut what a lesson was that dream!

As a production, this is, without exception, the most novel ever produced in motion pictures, and with Kinemacolor it possesses heauty that will rarely he excelled, comprising sets of extreme picturesqueness, with novel light and dissolving effects. The rising and setting of the sun is an effect never before attempted in moving pictures of any sort, and with this Kinemacolor suhject it is most heautiful and convincing.

"101 BISON"

THE STARS AND STRIPES FOREVER (3 reels) (May 20).—Sepulveda leads a douhle existence. By day he is the trusted clerk to the general commanding the American forces. By night he is the dreaded and unscrupulous leader of Manil's Secret Order of Filipinos. He has a valuahle ally in Madam Revier, with whom he keeps in close touch. Madam has a maid, Mestizo, who is one day approached and insulted hy a drunken Filipino. Captain Smalley, of the American army, hears the scuffle and, interfering, rescues the girl, and therehy earns her undying gratitude.

One day General Wilson hands Sepulveda an order to typewrite, addressed to Smalley. It tells him to report to Colonel Ketchum that the Filipinos plan to surprise the American trenches on the morrow. After the day's work, Sepulveda hastens to the secret council and sends a note hy a memher of their hand to the Filipino general, telling him that their plans are known and to hasten the attack.

Smalley goes to a dance, which is purposely attended hy hoth Sepulveda and Madam Revier. They watch Smalley, who, in the course of the evening, receives the order from his general. Smalley prepares to go, although he dislikes leaving Madam, who has fascinated him. She feigns a slight sickness and persuades Smalley to at least see her home. He, unahle to refuse her, agrees, and they go. Sepulveda follows.

Smalley accepts her invitation to enter her home for a few moments, and is recognized hy the maid. Sepulveda watches them from a mirror, and when Smalley says he must go, after he has had a proffered drink, Sepulveda drugs his wine, and Smalley would have drunk it but for the fact that he sees something peculiar ahout Madam's attitude with the mirror, and takes the opportunity to look into it himself. when he is surprised to see the maid heckon him not to drink the glass of wine hy his side. He feigns heing affected hy the heat and mops out his glass with his handkerchief and pretends to drink the wine. He follows this hy feigning stupor. Sepulveda enters the room, delighted with their ruse and, ordering more wine, he goes to the window and drops out some instructions to he taken to the Filipino forces. The maid, Mestizo, hrings the wine and the man and woman lapse into unconsciousness, for the maid has drugged their wine in turn. She tells Smalley he is now safe, and he, after showing deep gratitude, hastens for the front. He arrives too late to save many of the trenches where the unfortunate holders are holoed. He raises the main hody of the defenders, however, and after a brisk fight the Filipino army is routed and dispersed.

Sepulveda and Madam recover their senses and he accuses her of trapping him. He will not listen to her, and she is dragged to the secret council place, where the news of the overwhelming defeat is hrought to the enraged men. The maid follows her mistress, and the old allegiance makes her go for help. She thinks of Smalley and goes to him when he is reporting his victory. He gets permission to take a body of men with him, and hreaks in upon the meeting as the hrutes are branding Madam. The council is arrested.

From his prison Sepulveda manages to get a note to Smalley through one of his hand. It purports to he from Madam Revier, and asks him to call at once, when he will give him news of the Filipino plans. Smalley tells the messenger that he will go to her, and goes to her residence. As soon as Smalley is in the house, one of the secret society men throws a homh and Madam is huried in the ruins. The maid manages to protect Smalley from a falling heam and he is unhurt, while the hrave girl loses her life.

PLAYING WITH THE FIRE (May 23).—Harry Rever, a young artist, searches in vain for a suitahle model for a picture which he is painting. He meets Lady Wilson and she consents to sit as a model. Two months pass happily, and the picture nears completion. Meanwhile a great love has heen awakened in the hearts of the young artist and his fair young model. Hadji, Rever's Hindoo servant, has also conceived a wild passion for the white woman—a passion tainted with all the lustfulness of the Oriental. It is part of Hadji's duties to take care of the lion which Rever uses in his picture.

Rever and Lady Wilson are happy in the possession of each other's love, and finally Rever asks Lord Wilson's consent to his marriage with his daughter. The proud old nohleman refuses his consent, and the lovers are parted.

In the meantime, Hadji hecomes more and more jealous of his master. At last he decides to put into execution the wild plan that has frequently occurred to him. He lets the lion loose upon his master, and then listens with joy to the sounds of the dreadful struggle which follows. Having felled its prey, the lion is attracted hy the slight noise which Hadji makes, and it turns upon him. Hadji has played with the fire, and is now powerless to defend himself against the onslaughts of the infuriated heast. Thus he pays the penalty of his jealous crime with his life. In due course, Rever's picture secures for him great fame. He gradually recovers from his injuries and, now that he is a famous man, Lord Wilson consents to his marriage with his daughter.

SHE NEVER KNEW (May 22).—Hector Ainscourt was idolized hy his old mother. She had not seen him for a long time, hut he had never failed to write. His last letter was penned under extraordinary circumstances, and, although it was dated from a hospital, where, he informed her, he was convalescing after a slight illness, the truth was that he was an inmate of the death cell and the day set for his execution was not far distant.

The immediate memhers of his family knew of his crime and the sentence, hut all had agreed to spare no pains to keep the dear old lady in ignorance. As she fondled the relics of his innocent hoyhood, her kind old face glowed with pride as she thought of her nohle and handsome son and of how well he was getting along in the world.

She was very feehle and the doctor had warned them that her death was not far distant.

As the day of the execution approached, the unfortunate son wept hitter and unavailing tears as he thought of her.

The fatal hour arrived, and as he was led toward the little green door, the spirit of

FRONTIER

THE RANCH STENOGRAPHER (May 17).—Two orphan girls, not supplied with wealth, will find it rather hard to succeed in this busy, heartless world of ours, even if they are of sound health. Our little story deals with Dorothy and Lillian Farley.

Lillian Farley has been somewhat of an invalid all her life, and since the death of their father and mother, Dorothy has acted the part of the little mother, working as a stenographer, getting barely sufficient salary to keep the wolf from the door and to supply the necessary medicines and care for her sick sister.

The Y. W. C. A. has been interested in her case and they assist when they find it necessary, which sometimes occurs. One morning, after Dorothy had departed for her daily work, Lillian was taken with a bad spell. The Y. W. C. A. nurse is with her and a doctor is called. He orders her to New Mexico for pure air. It is very hard for the sisters to part, but Dorothy has to stay in the city and work hard to furnish the necessities for Lillian.

We next see Lillian on the ranch. Her health improves and she falls in love with one of the boys. She wires to Dorothy that she has a serious heart affliction, but tells Dorothy not to worry. Dorothy misunderstands the telegram and feels that Lillian must be very sick.

We next see Dorothy getting off the train in a little town in New Mexico. She inquires the way to the ranch from two cowboys who are standing at the station. She starts to walk to the ranch, and in trying to get through a barbed-wire fence gets caught. The cowboys decide to have some fun. They scare her almost to death by chasing her over the hills, until a manly cowboy comes to her aid. He assists her to mount his horse. She reaches the ranch just in time to see her sister coming back from the morning ride with her sweetheart. Explanations are in order. Dorothy, seeing she has been tricked, decides to go back to the city.

The two cowboys who have fallen in love with the two sisters decide to keep her there. One of them goes to the village, gets a typewriter, and they set her up in business. All of the cowboys of the ranch suddenly remember that they should have written many letters and they crowd around awaiting their chance to dictate to the pretty stenographer. Later, Dorothy realizes she loves her hero cowboy. A double elopement to the parson's home is planned.

The cowboys get onto the scheme. They decide to show them a trick or two. Just as the couples are coming out of the minister's home, the boys come up with a carriage, force the newly married couples in and rush away with them, which ends up in their riding the couples into a river and leaving them there to get out in the best way they can. This they succeed in doing, after getting a thorough ducking. They reach the shore in a badly mixed up condition, but decide to forgive their enemies, and feel that a bad beginning of their married life should allow them future happiness, and, realizing the joke is on them, laugh heartily at the prank and start for home.

VICTOR

GOOD FOR EVIL (May 23).—A toymaker engages a young girl to work as a servant. She is little more than a child. The toymaker is very harsh with her and with his son, forbidding them to touch the toys, which they love.

The slavey and the boy are sent to deliver some toys. The boy loses the money he has collected for them. On his return the father beats him and discharges the slavey.

A kind-hearted woman, a customer of the toymaker, takes the slavey home, and there, with her benefactress' little daughter, the girl is very happy.

The toymaker falls ill, and his son comes to the rich home and gets the slavey to return with him and nurse his father. The old man becomes convalescent. The rich woman goes to the shop to take the girl back home. The slavey turns to the father and son and asks them if they wish her to remain. They eagerly say yes, and the girl decides to stay with her poor friends. Touched by her sacrifice, the toymaker's nature changes and he treats the children affectionately and generously.

TOODLEUMS (May 25).—Chester is in love with Pearl. Pearl is very fond of him, but spends most of her time fondling and caressing Toodelums, her wee little dog. Chester has absolutely no use for Toodleums and is insanely jealous of him. He visits Pearl and she persists in paying more attention to the dog than she does to him. Chester conspires to get rid of Toodleums and hires a tough to steal him. The tough lies in wait outside Pearl's home and at the first opportunity he steals Toodleums. He runs away and sells him to a stranger for a dollar. The stranger afterwards meets Chester and Pearl, and Chester claims Toodleums and demands his return. This the stranger refuses until he is paid thirty dollars. Pearl compels Chester to pay this amount, despite Chester's protestations. Meanwhile, the tough who had stolen the dog anxiously awaits his pay and demands payment. Chester refuses and the tough vows vengeance. He decides to tell Pearl that Chester put him up to steal Toodleums, and Pearl confronts Chester with this information. Chester, of course, denies it, but the tough appears and he cannot deny it. Pearl orders him from the house and he leaves, lamenting his loss of both the girl and the thirty dollars.

On the same reel:

SUPPER FOR THREE.—Wilkins loses his pay envelope. He comes home and his wife, who is a shrew, refuses to believe him. She refuses to give him anything to eat and orders him from the house. Wilkins, disconsolate, goes to the home of two of his friends, who are actors out of work. They suggest a scheme whereby they could all get a meal. The actors get out their trunks, and one dresses as a woman, the other as a prosperous gentleman, and they give Wilkins a high hat. They then go to a restaurant and have their fill. The proprietor judges that his patrons are prosperous and never imagines that his bill will not be paid. However, they ask him for their check, the actor who is masquerading as a millionaire pretends to faint, and the proprietor goes out to have a policeman call an ambulance. The plot is to run out while the restaurateur is calling help. However, Wilkins' wife sees her husband with a supposed woman She rushes in and immediately starts breaking things up. She tears the actor's hat off, together with his wig, and then takes Wilkins home, there to treat him with more dispatch. The proprietor returns with an officer and the two actors are arrested, being unable to make the damage good.

NESTOR

A MINE AND A MARATHON (May 23).—W. E. Todd is owner of mining properties in Deerfoot Valley, which are undeveloped and are thought not valuable. The Consolidated Properties Company, who own adjoining properties, have secretly had Todd's holdings investigated and found them very valuable. They make Todd a reasonable offer for so-called unvaluable lands, saying they want to increase their holdings. Todd does not accept, but sends Gray, a young mining engineer who is in his employ, to test the property. He also invites his nephew, Dean, who is an aspirant for honors in the Marathon at the coming Olympic games, to go out with Gray and get a few months' training in the mountains. Gray and Dean arrive on the property, where Dean trains and Gray puts a crew of men at work and, with one workman, goes for a walk to look over the ground. They see likely rock and Gray puts a workman at digging.

Lee, the agent of the Consolidated company, and the man who made the offer to Todd, arrives on the lands. Gray visits the crew, who have found nothing, and then visits the lone workman, who has struck it rich. On his way to the office, Gray meets Lee, who immediately sees that Gray has discovered that the property is valuable. Lee very smoothly humors Gray and soon makes an offer to Gray to keep mum. Gray is insulted, but when a larger offer is made, gradually accepts Lee's terms. A few days later a telegram is received by both men from their New York offices that Todd will accept the terms of the Consolidated company on a specified day if he does not hear from Gray to the contrary. At the end of Lee's message his company writes, "Keep the lid on tight," and Lee, while in conversation with Gray, absently tears his message in pieces and drops it in the waste basket.

Just after they leave the office, Dean comes in. His spiked shoe has been hurting him, on account of unevenness inside. He goes to the waste basket to find pasteboard from which to cut an insole. From the folded pasteboard pieces of Lee's telegram fall out.

One piece attracts Dean's attention, as it reads "—e lid on tight." Curiosity prompts him to match the pieces of the telegram together and put them in his pocket. On the day on which Todd will sell, Dean, on his morning run, attired in track suit, rounds a bend and comes upon Lee, Gray and the workman, and overhears Lee, who is boasting loudly. Dean now understands the telegram and their scheme. Just then a stone slips and the conspirators turn, to see Dean, who feigns having just run up. He salutes and goes on. Gray and Lee are suspicious and wonder if he overheard. The three follow and talk to Dean, who has just jumped into an auto standing before the office. As Dean drives off he answers Gray's question and they know he is going to foil them. Gray and Lee get horses and start in pursuit. Twenty miles to go and two hours to do it in, when, after going fifteen miles, the auto breaks down. Dean, determined, grits his teeth and starts out fast for the five-mile run. He just makes the railroad station ahead of Gray and Lee, and succeeds in getting the operator to send a message to Todd, telling him not to sell at any price, before they appear on the scene. After the pursuers are sent back, enraged and disconsolate, Dean borrows an overcoat and overalls and catches the next train homeward.

POWERS

BLACK JACK'S ATONEMENT (May 23).—The sailor returns home from a voyage and is met by a letter telling him to hurry, for there is a new baby to be seen and a sick wife to be cheered up. His companions insist upon drinking to the newcomer's health and, in spite of his protests, the sailor is forced to join them. Unused to liquor, the fumes enter his head and the seamen leave the young fellow sleeping.

A schooner is short of men and a professional shanghaier sees the sailor, and, getting him into an inner room, opens a trap and drops him into the waiting boat and takes him aboard the schooner.

In the meantime the poor wife, unable to work, grieves over his nonarrival and worries, while the little, lame boy goes out and sells newspapers to hold the home together and get enough to eat.

The shanghaier returns and, while fingering the gold earned by his nefarious transaction, is asked to buy a paper by a little, lame boy. The man's one sensitive spot is children. He asks the boy why he is selling papers, and learns all about the sick mother and the new baby. He asks the boy's name, and starts when he hears it and takes the papers from his pocket which he took from the sailor. He reads the pathetic letter and the right chord is touched. He tells the boy to go home and inform his mother that Father will be there soon. He also gives the boy some money and sends the little fellow away with a glad heart.

Stirred to action (for the schooner is departing), the man, with new resolutions in his heart, secures a launch and overtakes the schooner. He gets aboard and, offering the money back to the captain and making an explanation, he asks for the return of the sailor. The captain laughs at him. The sailor comes up, there is a desperate fight, and the two men go overboard, the crook being badly wounded. They are picked up by the launch and the sailor takes the wounded man home with him. Jack leaves the money paid him by the sea captain on the table and goes out, wounded and alone, a better man, determined to give up the nefarious trade forever.

REX

THE TRIFLER (May 25).—Thomas Lloyd, an old-time friend of Mrs. Willis, a widow living in a small village, writes her that he has an opening in his city office for one of her two sons. Ed and Joe, both of whom are in love with Ellen, a village belle.

After a family council, it is decided that Ed is to have the position in the city, while Joe is to remain on the farm and care for his mother and Ellen, who has just accepted him in preference to his brother Ed.

Ellen is bitterly disappointed with Joe's decision, as she is anxious for city life, and after Ed's departure she slights Joe and eventually breaks her engagement with him.

Ed finds city life very alluring. He becomes interested in Flossy, a gay young person whom he meets at his boarding house. As the months pass, Ed finds it requires more than his salary to meet Flossy's demands for a good time. He is weak and the inevitable follows. He helps himself to his employer's funds. When his shortage is discovered, his employer, Lloyd, on account of his friendship for Ed's mother, refuses to prosecute the boy, on the condition that Ed return to the farm immediately. Flossy, when she learns of Ed's trouble, quickly throws him over.

Ed is welcomed home by Ellen, who tells him of the broken engagement. Ed promptly forgets Flossy and makes love to Ellen. They return to the house in time to hear Lloyd, who has followed Ed home, tell Mrs. Willis of her son's dishonesty. Ellen upbraids Ed, who sinks repentantly to his mother's side. Lloyd then offers to give the widow's other son a chance, so Joe prepares to accompany Lloyd to the city.

Joe goes in search of Ellen and finds her at their old trysting place, the old hollow tree, where, after a pretty little love scene, Ellen and Joe forget all their differences, happy in the thoughts of their future.

BOOSTING BUSINESS (May 15).—Jim Barratt, a baking powder salesman, arrives in the town of St. Charles and discovers that business is miserably slow. Barratt originates a clever scheme by which he will not leave empty-handed. He writes a note stating that Charles, the grocer, has not found the $100 bill that had been packed in one of the cans of baking powder. This Barratt accidentally drops on the street. One of the villagers picks it up. The news spreads fast. In an hour both grocers are completely sold out of the celebrated baking powder. Barratt "happens" by and is given a splendid order by Charles, the grocer, and Joseph, his competitor. Barratt enters the hotel bar, where he informs several of the men seated about of the clever ruse and how it worked. The tables turn, however, when the men discover that their wives have been "stung." Just see what happened to the baking powder salesman.

THANHOUSER

BARRED FROM THE MAILS (May 11).—The young matron lived in the Bronx, did her own housework, had a baby to look after, but still found a way to enjoy a day's uninterrupted shopping. She sent her baby by parcel post to her mother in Jersey City, meaning to drift over there in the evening, have dinner and reclaim the child. It was a very ingenious plan, and because the letterman whom she accosted on the street was a new member of the service, she induced him to take the baby. Then she went cheerily on her way.

The letter-carrier had his own troubles with the baby, but he got it to the postoffice and turned the youngster over to the superior. He found, to his horror, however, that "live animals" could not be sent through the mails, and the package was returned to him, neatly marked "Returned to sender." Under orders, he tearfully located the woman's house, but the place was locked and there was no one in sight to accept the unwelcome package. The postman tried to leave it on the doorstep, but a stern policeman convinced him he was wrong, so again he wandered back to the postoffice.

By this time the mother had discovered that there was something wrong with the parcel post, for her baby had not arrived in Jersey City. She made frantic search, and finally heard the policeman's story and rushed around to the postoffice just in time to save the little one from a journey to the dead-letter office.

Any postal official who religiously lives up to the rules will tell you that this is exactly what would happen when a "live animal" barred from the mails is turned in and the owner thereof cannot be located.

THE MARBLE HEART (May 15).—The young sculptor was happy in the love of his mother and the success which his work had brought him. He was single, for he had never met a woman for whom he cared enough to ask to be his wife.

One bitter winter day a young girl, friendless and homeless, fainted outside the sculptor's door. The young man and his mother tenderly carried her into their home and cared for her. The girl was pretty and attractive, and the mother soon grew to regard her as a daughter, looking forward to the time when the girl would become her son's wife. But, although the girl secretly loved the sculptor, the young man felt only a brotherly liking for her.

At a reception the young sculptor met a celebrated beauty. "Cold as marble" a critic had once characterized her, and the statement was just, for the woman had no heart. The young sculptor, utterly indifferent to women, at first paid her scant attention, and this piqued the beauty, accustomed to abject adulation from her admirers. She determined to bring him to her feet, and she succeeded.

The beauty offered to pose for a statue, and the sculptor, with so splendid a model and spurred on by her praises, produced a figure which was acclaimed by the critics as a masterpiece. The work completed, the young man neglected his home and his life work and devoted his entire time to wooing the beauty, who was as cold and impassive as the statue which she had inspired.

A friend of the sculptor, an editor, warned him that the beauty did not care for any man and that unless he gave her up he would only meet with the fate of her other admirers, but the sculptor laughed at him scornfully, for he felt sure that she was true.

The sculptor, thinking of his friend's accusation, which he believed unfounded, fell asleep and dreamed that he was a sculptor in ancient Athens, when Diogenes, the philosopher, lived. A rich citizen came to him and intrusted him with a commission to create a wonderful statue for him. The sculptor, poor and unknown, undertook the work with enthusiasm, but as the statue neared completion, he fell in love with his own handiwork and did not care to surrender it. The rich man arrived to claim the statue, but the sculptor refused to give it up. Soldiers were summoned by the rich man and they were about to carry the statue away, when Diogenes, the philosopher, entered and suggested that the two men submit their case to the statue and let her decide. Each, confident of his own case, agreed. The sculptor addressed the statue, telling her that he had created her and that he loved her, but she gave no sign. Then the rich man came forward, displayed gold and jewels, and the statue smiled and stretched her arms toward him. The sculptor, grief stricken, sank to his knees and covered his face with his hands. Then he awoke to find himself in his studio in Paris and realized that what had seemed so real was only a dream.

The sculptor was happy in the beauty's society until he discovered that she had pledged herself to another and richer man and cared nothing for him. The realization drove him frantic. Rushing back to his studio, he smashed the marble likeness of the beautiful woman to atoms, and then sank dying to the floor. The woman herself, hearing of his illness, hurried to the studio to find him dead. The friend who had vainly warned him, turned from sad contemplation of the sculptor's face and, pointing to the fragments of the marble statue and to its human model, indignantly exclaimed, "Marble hearts, ministers of ruin, misery and death," and sternly ordered her from the home she had wrecked.

THE BIG BOSS (2 reels) (May 14).—Bascom, very worried about business, decides to apply to Morgan, the big boss, for help. Morgan offers to throw the aqueduct contract in his way if he will influence his young daughter, Nell, to marry him. Bascom agrees, but later finds that Nell has engaged herself to Dick, a young reporter, and will have nothing to do with the boss. Morgan, furious, tells Bascom that now he will be ruined, indeed. By accident, Dick wanders into an East Side saloon where, in a private room, the boss meets his constituents.

Dick overhears Morgan telling Hart, a contractor, to meet him in the saloon at 9 sharp, as he is going to open all bids submitted, so that Hart may make his lower than the others.

Dick rushes back to his editor and tells him that he can secure a great graft story—but how. They hit upon the dictagraph. Dick plants it in the saloon, and that night at 9 is busy in a little upstairs room with the receiver at his ear, busily jotting down notes. Nell is with him. The bids are brought to the boss by the commissioner's clerk—one of his henchmen.

Bascom's bid is discovered to be the lowest of all, and just as Hart is about to reduce his, the dictagraph wires are discovered and the boss dashes upstairs. Jumping upon Dick, he almost kills him, when Bascom enters and saves the young chap's life. He takes the two young folks home and Dick is preparing his article for the press, when the boss, who has experienced a change of heart, enters and tells Bascom that his bid will get the contract. Nell thanks him, and Dick, for her sake, flings his "graft scandal" story into the fire.

MAJESTIC

BILLY'S NEW WATCH (May 11).—Philip Rand, on the way home from a dance, where he has met and fallen in love with a beautiful girl, Marion Lang, is jostled by an unknown man and, upon recovering his balance, finds his watch is missing. He immediately gives pursuit and, overtaking his assailant, grabs him suddenly from the rear and demands the watch. It is handed over to him. He pockets it and continues on to his chambers. Upon his arrival there he finds, to his amazement, that his own watch is lying on the dresser, where he had left it. He has unconsciously become a highway robber. Luckily, the watch he had taken from the stranger bears its owner's name on the case and he realizes that the only thing to do is to return it without delay and explain the unfortunate mistake. In the meantime, the man who has been robbed has appealed to the first policeman he meets and told his story. Pursuit is started and Philip tracked to his rooms. Hearing the cry from his window and realizing the difficulty of making an explanation during the excitement, Philip escapes by the fire-escape as the officers break into his room. They follow him to the rooftop, he finally eluding them by ducking down an open skylight. He goes to the nearest drug store and looks up the address of the owner of the watch and goes there at once to explain his position. To his surprise, the door is opened by the girl of the dance, and he learns that he has robbed her uncle. Her uncle returns irate, and Philip is hidden until she has appeased him, though at first sight he wants to ring for the police. Donaldson's humor is finally aroused, and the unfortunate mistake proves to have had a fortunate side, for Marion has revealed her interest in Philip during the mix-up and he parts from her with every indication that wedding bells will soon chime.

MY LADY'S BOOT (May 13).—During the Civil War, young Lieutenant Graham, from the North, is housed with his men in the beautiful Southern home of Virginia Fairmont. She hates him, as she does all Yankees, despite his consideration and courtesy. One day a peddler comes to her home. He is her brother Randolph, a Confederate spy. He manages to give her a note which must be conveyed to General Lee before sunrise. Virginia, who has been permitted to ride wherever she pleases, starts off. At the turn in the road she manages to slip the message in her boot. Graham sees this and follows and demands to know what it is. She holds out the wrong foot, and as he pulls off the boot, she rides away and he is unable to catch her. She delivers her message to General Lee safely, and the Confederate army is thus enabled to make an advantageous move.

After the war, young Graham calls upon Virginia Fairmont to return her boot—and takes her heart in exchange.

PATHE

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 20 (May 12).

A WOMAN OF IMPULSE (May 13).—On the Countess Cherneh's estate a farmer named Solman employes one Gaston Larue, an old man who is supporting his three motherless children by driving for Solman. Larue was making a hurried delivery of a heavy load one day, when the Countess, happening past, rebuked him for whipping his horse. Impulsively, the Countess drives to Solman's farm and instructs him to discharge Larue. This is done and the old man, unable to find work, is starving with his children, while the Countess, decrying cruelty in others, is hunting deer with friends. On a lonely road one day the horse the Countess is riding shies and throws her and, painfully injured, she is found by Larue's children. Her timely discovery by the youngsters saves her life. When she has recovered, the Countess goes humbly to the home of the driver to reward the children and beg Larue's forgiveness for her inhumanity.

A REDSKIN'S MERCY (May 14).—Silver Cloud and Yellow Bear, two Indian warriors, in search of a token of their bravery to bring back to their chief, come upon Marion Watkins, the wife of a white settler in the neighborhood. Her plea for mercy melts the heart of Silver Cloud, but Yellow Bear is not so affected. A fight between the two braves ensues, and as a result of it, Silver Cloud hurries with Marion to the paleface camp, while Yellow Bear, mortally wounded, struggles back to his tribe. Hearing Yellow Bear's story, the chief calls his men together and the Indians set out to annihilate the pioneers. After a stirring battle, strength of numbers tells and the white settlers are forced to flee. Silver Cloud again helps Marion to escape, but his own life is the forfeit.

AN ITINERANT WEDDING (May 15).—The widow Woods has a beautiful daughter, Gwendoline, whose hand is sought by Charley Arloss. He sends a rather ambiguous note to the widow, which gives her the impression that it is her hand he is seeking. At the widow's reception the next day Arloss finds himself in love with Gwendoline but loved by both Gwendoline and the widow. Fearing that should Mrs. Woods learn the truth she would forbid the banns, Arloss presses a clergyman guest into service, but before the ceremony has been even started the widow is heard approaching. The lovers and the witnesses hurry upstairs, where the ceremony is continued until Mrs. Woods is heard hurrying up the stairs. The party is on the roof of the house when the knot is finally tied, and in the excitement the bride falls through a chimney that is being repaired, Hubby goes to the rescue and, man and wife, they tumble out on the hearth before the assembled guests.

THE JELLY-FISH (May 16).—This film deals with the jelly-fish that inhabits the Mediterranean Sea, and the species is more richly colored and more beautiful than that of any other part of the world. Some of the specimens examined are a yard in diameter. The jelly-fish has introduced himself to practically every surf bather, and they should take this opportunity to study the innocent-looking creature at close range.

On the same reel:

ALONG THE BANKS OF THE RIVER EURE.—A scenic film that includes views of the ruined aqueduct used to carry the waters of the Eure to Versailles and several examples of fifteenth century architecture built at the instance of Louis XIV, and the whole handsomely colored.

On the same reel:

SARAGOSSA.—The capital of the ancient province of Aragon and a reminder of the golden age of Spain, when she was the greatest power in the world.

A WRECKED LIFE (May 17).—Three miners stop at a country inn for refreshments and become interested in the story of an idiotic woman servant in the place. The owner of the inn tells the story of the woman's life. Deserted by her husband, she searched for him for years in vain, and after she had given him up for dead and had become engaged to the son of the narrator, she found her husband—and her dead lover at his feet. The next morning she was found stark mad. At the conclusion of the story one of the visitors rises, white with terror, and, calling the woman, announces that he is her husband. The inkeeper turns upon him savagely and avenges at one stroke the death of his son and the wreck of the woman's life. The story within a story is faultlessly acted, the "dissolve" scenes are accomplished without a flaw and, all in all, the film is exceptionally gripping and compelling.

SELIG

IN THE LONG AGO (May 15).—In the busy, workaday age of slap-stick comedy, melodramatic pathos and business complication plays, it is cheerful to observe a return to the poetic primitive. Such is the gentle spirit and picturesqueness of "In the Long Ago." In this, Dreamer comes wandering down a canyon toward the sea, playing softly on a reed pipe, imitating the wildwood note of the thrush. Starlight and a group of maidens are picking flowers. They have no thought for him, as he is too soft-handed to he a warrior, and too soft-headed for meeting the hig urge of life; but the low sweet music moves Starlight mightily and draws her from the vacuous gayety of her companions. In the lodge of her father, the great chief, she sits moodily unanswering the suit of the painted warrior lingering in the shadow of the big tepee, and ignoring his gifts, to the disgust of her doughty father. Dreamer sits by the moonlit waves, playing a sea tune. Here comes Starlight, drawn thither hy chance and the magic of his melody. The love motif holds them in its spell; hut it is hroken by the rude song of warriors, drawing their war craft on the beach. He hides the shrinking girl behind him and plays, in order to disarm the suspicions of the grim savages as they pass, reviling him for his gentle weakness. The desperate wooer of Starlight and the medicine man make an evil compact to win the girl through a love potion. Dreamer is hrought hefore the chief and scoffing warriors. For the nonce, weakness leaves him and he combats with the greatest warrior and overcomes him. The medicine man sneaks into the chief's lodge and casts Starlight into a trance. After the victory, Dreamer demands the hand of the chief's daughter, hut finds her as one dead, owing to the mischievous incantation of the medicine man. He would play her hack to life, but his flute was broken before the hattle; so he flees helpless to the loneliness of the woods. The medicine man smugly comes to restore the maiden, but fails ignominiously. In his solitude, Dreamer recalls the legend that a flute shaped from the thigh-hone of a rival will weave the spell that restores life. As Starlight is about to be laid away in dreamless sleep, her true lover comes running with his flute of rigid bone that has cost him such effort to secure. Playing, he enters the village, and his music lifts from the midst of wailing lamentation the dead. Starlight arises from her bier, the color of life is restored to her cheeks, and she follows Dreamer away beyond the horizon, to happiness.

ITALA

THE DREAD OF DOOM.—Sacrifice and sorrow and the grim evil rising from the chance bite of a captive monkey are the primal elements of the tragedy, "The Dread of Doom." How a man hides from those whom he loves, endeavoring to shield his sister from a horrifying suspicion, is the narrative.

For twenty years Ermete Zacconi, who, with Novelli, has shared the honor of heing Italy's premier actor, has by his art been adding to his name and fame. In his portrayal of the part of Dr. Guido Altieri, he is shown in the quintessence of his consummate talents. His delineations of the death of a man under the effects of strychnine piosoning are histrionically masterful. Men of medicine agree that this depiction is graphically accurate.

The element of suspense which keeps the spectator ever wondering what the next foot of film will reveal is skillfully sustained. It brings home to the mind of everyone who sees it the issue which confronts Doctor Guido. Is the man to oe greater than the lover? The Christ long since said that there is no greater love than that love of the man who lays down his life for his friend.

In this instance Dr. Guido, on the eve of marrying the woman he loves, discovers that into his body there has been introduced accidentally the germs of a deadly disease. He could not manfully go on with his marriage knowing the physical price of such a predestinedly woeful alliance. It is for him to disappear and wait for the death soon to come. His lot would be alleviated if he could but tell his fiance why he could not marry her. But there is one reason why he must leave her unknowing that his reason for hreaking off the match was because he loved her more than Love itself. That reason is that his sister is betrothed to the hrother of the doctor's hride-elect. If Dr. Guido lets it be known that he is consumptive, his sister's fiance may suspect that she, too, has tuhercular tendencies, which suspicion might separate them. It is, therefore, necessary for him to seal his lips and go away under a cloud, leaving it to be thought that he had backed out of his prenuptial agreement.

A powerful story and one whose issues revert again and again to the spectators' minds long after they have seen the picture play.

THE PROFESSOR'S TRAVELING ADVENTURES (May 19).—Professor Miller is so completely wrapped up in his books that he is threatened with illness, but, in spite of the urgings of his friends, he refuses to take a needed vacation. It is not until the family doctor appears upon the scene and announces that unless the man of letters takes a rest he will have but a short time to live that Miller consents to go on a journey. His faithful old housekeeper packs his valise and the professor boards a train for his destination. In the same compartment is a young woman and an elderly matron, and the latter removes her shoes for hetter comfort. When the young woman alights from the coach, she realizes that she has forgotten her overshoes, and the professor gallantly throws from the window the shoes belonging to the matron. There is an exciting scene, but the professor makes due apologies and supplies the price of a pair of new shoes. A journey in a stage coach is next in order, and the professor manages to get mixed up in all sorts of complications in his desire to he helpful to his fellow passengers. Upon arriving at an inn, he collides with a bicycle and is thrown into a ditch and is rescued in a sadly battered condition. After signing the register, the professor is shown to a room in which the only furniture is a hard cot and a chair, but as he is weary, he retires, and is about to drop into slumber when a noise under the hed attracts his attention. He investigates and finds a dog. The animal is ejected, hut finds his way hack to the room by means of a hole leading from the courtyard. Again the intruder is ejected, but when he returns a third time, the professor suspects that he is sleeping over a kennel and makes a protest to the landlord. On the following morning, thoroughly fatigued and wishing for the comforts of his own home, the professor boards an early train and arrives at his house in time to find his faithful housekeeper entertaining a number of her female cronies at luncheon. They are dumfounded and attempt to beat a hasty retreat, but the old gentleman is so overjoyed at being home and the prospect of a good meal and his own comfortahle bed that he shows no signs of resentment and enters into the spirit of the occasion.

HIS LIFE FOR HIS EMPEROR (May 16)—The schemes of certain English merchants and politicians require that the Emperor Napoleon be unseated, whether by fair means or foul. Hearing of ex-Captain Lacroix, who has been degraded by Napoleon, they send an emissary to arrange with him for the emperor's assassination. Lacroix accepts their money and plans with his cronies to lure the object of their hatred to an empty house, where they intend to kill him. The plot is hatched in the secluded corner of a wine shop, but the conspirators neglect to notice an intoxicated man who is sleeping there. The man is Pierre Duchesne, on official who has been discharged from a government bureau for drunkenness, hut who, nevertheless, realizing that he has only himself to hlame, hears no malice.

Lacroix writes a letter to Napoleon, telling him that valuahle maps may he ohtained from a disgraced English officer then in Paris, and hidding him to come alone to fetch them. A youth is despatched with the letter and further details of the plot then arranged. Meanwhile Duchesne has remained silent in his corner, hut has heard every word of what has passed. He rushes to the place and unfolds the plot to Napoleon, who has just decided to go to the meeting place. Duchesne pleads with the emperor to allow him to go in his stead, disguised to resemhle his sovereign. Napoleon consents and, after testing Duchesne to see if he can carry out the part successfully, sends him to the rendezvous, ordering that a band of soldiers shall follow him and insure his safety.

Duchesne enters the house and is slain as he enters, before the soldiers can come to his aid. Napoleon, "The Scourge of Europe," who has followed the soldiers, kneels and kisses Duchesne's dead hody reverently as it is laid upon the divan.

THE AMATEUR HIGHWAYMAN (May 21).—Deacon Winkle reads of frequent hold-ups in his neighborhood, arms himself and goes out to a deacons' meeting. A stranger on the street asks directions of him. As he leaves, Winkle finds that his watch and fob are missing. He orders the stranger to halt and holds him up and, as he supposes, gets hack his watch and foh. He vaingloriously recounts his adventure to his hrother deacons and his wife at home. She produces his own watch and foh, which he had left at home. Consternation.

Winkle reads that the town is aroused over this fresh outrage, and proceeds to try to return the watch to his victim, a Mr. Shivers. After the deacon tries the registered mail, a messenger boy and the plan of concealing the watch in a loaf of bread, he gives up in despair. Shivers is now thoroughly frightened, helieving that someone is trying to kill him with an infernal machine.

Winkle decides to force his way into Shivers' house. He does so and is about to leave the watch when he collided with and smashes a piece of statuary. He hurriedly and hopelessly leaves. The following night he disguises as a night watchman and goes to the Shivers home. Shivers, his wife and his friends are sitting up, variously armed, waiting for a highwayman, a homh or a hurglar. The supposed watchman is welcomed, and when they are all asleep in their chairs, he rigs an ingenious arrangement of pans in the kitchen so that they will fall when filled with running water. When the racket arouses the sleepers, Winkle volunteers to investigate alone.

He does so, and creates a terrihle combat with a chair that, through the closed door, appeals to their imagination. As they finally rush in, he points to a shattered window and holds forth Shivers' watch and foh. His man escaped, but he has captured the lost booty. Tableau, and gratitude of all.

THE MAN WHO FAILED (May 23).—Alicia, the daughter of a poor man, is very ill and needs to he sent away for expensive treatment. The father appeals to his wealthy employer for aid. The rich man, seeing a picture of the girl, becomes infatuated with her and agrees to save her if the father will give his word of honor that she will marry him when she recovers. The promise is given, and when Alicia returns cured, she learns of the pledge. She marries the man without love, but he wants her heart and assures her that he will demand nothing of her until she comes of her own free will. He sets out to win her love, hut fails, even by giving her fine gifts and making her the queen of society. To get honors to lay at her feet, he

The wife knows the stand her husband took and begins to honor him. During the campaign the political bosses incite the employees of his factory to strike; the men get desperate and blow up the factory. Counting himself a failure, he determines to go away, and tells his wife that she can get a divorce in time. But Alicia has come to love him and he finds that it is not riches and power that win a woman's heart.

PILOT

TONY, THE TENOR (May 15).—On the swaying girders, high above the street, Tony sang at his work, his fellow workers listening in rapture to his sweet tenor, which made the workday pass rapidly. One day a great impresario, passing along the busy street, heard the voice from above and stopped. He investigated, and thus was Antonio Bolino discovered. But Tony would not give up his humble quarters and his Italian sweetheart, much to the disapproval of the impresario, who was compelled to let him have his way, and Tony and Mercedes talked and sang of sunny Italy and looked forward to the day when they should be able to return. His first appearance was one grand ovation, and the papers lauded him to the skies, but Tony was not vain over his prosperity, and daily he visited the men on the skyscraper and sang to them as of old. The once little bank account now grew rapidly, and when the year came round in which his contract with the impresario ended, he came home to Mercedes, threw off his evening dress and sent her for beer, and over the little lunch they laughed and talked and tore up the expired contract. Next day a big ocean liner received on board two Italian passengers, who looked back from the gangplank at the great city, smiled and made their way on board, bound for sunny Italy. The impresario, with a new contract, and visions of fame and wealth, went to the Italian tenement and in the window saw a sign, "To Let." He inquired and learned that his find, with his sweetheart, had returned to Italy. Sorrowfully he tore up the contract and wended his way home. Thus passed a great singer, but two souls were happy.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster

In the chat of May 3, 1913, you have read about the successful man and the successful organization. This week I am going to ask you to give your mite for the benefit of all mankind. You know your surroundings and the conditions you are working under. This is regardless of what organization you may belong to; or if you don't belong to any organization it does not alter the situation in the matter which I am putting before you in this chat. How much longer are you going to tolerate living tombs for operating booths? Are you not aware that you are grinding out your lives, just like a chopping machine in a meat establishment grinds up beef into chopped meat? Every minute that you work in one of those disease-breeding cells means one year less on this earth for you. Count the minutes and then the years you sacrifice, and you will realize something must be done. If the state should put you on trial for your life you would put up a great battle and defend your life. You men upon whom wives and children depend for bread and butter are actually on trial, and your lives are being ground out like chopped beef is ground. Are you going to fight for your lives and the lives of your loved ones who depend upon you? The germs which accumulate in your booth and have no way to escape, owing to lack of ventilation, find roosting places in your clothing, and are then carried to your home. You wonder why your folks are stricken down with disease, and should you happen to be a married man, you cannot understand why the baby is always troubled with various diseases.

You get home late at night, tired out, seldom seeing the family when you do arrive home. In the morning, when you dress, and after breakfast, you might lift the child into your arms to pass a few moments, and during this time the child innocently rubs its little face on your clothing and inhales the germs which your clothing collected in your operating booth the day before. Finally your child is stricken, and if there are more children in the family, they likewise are picked off like a sharpshooter picks the clay pipes in a shooting gallery. And so on, brother operators; you actually make a plaything of death, and you little realize what you are doing.

At the conclusion of this little item, which means much to you, I ask that every operator in this city of New York read the letter printed in this chat, sign it and mail the letter to the Health Department of the City of New York. Do this, regardless of organization. It is an act of humanity, and do it, for God's sake, and stamp out this dreadful white plague.

Department of Health,
City of New York.

Gentlemen:—I am a licensed moving picture operator and am working in New York City. The sanitary conditions of the operating booths in theatres showing moving pictures are a disgrace and a menace to the general health of the operators therein employed. While there are sufficient laws governing these operating booths as to fire prevention, to see that the lives of the public are safe, there seems to be no laws of the health department to protect the picture machine operator or to prevent disease from spreading in picture theatres or operating booths where the operator must work without any fresh air facilities. The records will show that these booths are breeding places of tuberculosis germs, and that the greater percentage of operators employed in this city are affected with this dreadful plague. Lack of ventilation facilities is only one of the many causes of the disease spreading in operating booths. There are two small holes in the booth, one for the projection and the other a peephole, and the fetid odor as the breath of the people in the theatre rises upward to the booth enters through these small holes; germs are carried along as well. The booth has no windows, no fresh air, and the operator must breathe this foul air into his lungs along with the gas fumes of the carbon used in the lamps of the picture machine. The foul air in the theatre not only harms the operator but spreads disease among the patrons.

There are many married men operating picture machines, and others who are single men are main supports of their families, and should prevailing conditions continue, the whole plague will be carried from the operating booths in theatres to the various homes and families of the men employed in this profession. I beg that the Board of Health of this city will take up this matter and do their utmost to prevent the spread of tuberculosis in moving picture operating booths as well as in the theatres.

Yours truly,

The Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York held their regular meeting last Monday, May 5, 1913. It was quite a large gathering, as all were anxious to take part in the nominations for delegate to the I. A. T. S. E. convention, which takes place at Seattle, Washington, this coming July. There will be two delegates at this convention to represent Local No. 1 and to see the great wrong of the former mother local righted. During the month of June there will be two open meetings and all operators are welcomed. The open meeting will be expressly for operators to avail themselves of the opportunity of joining the union at $5.00 initiation fee, and it positively will be the very last chance, for then the price to join will be $50.00. For other information and applications apply at the office of the Union, 133 Third avenue, near 14th street, New York.

ADDRESS: CARE OF MOVING PICTURE NEWS
30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City

Washington, D. C.

A comprehensive idea may be gained of the high esteem in which the Board of Education of the District of Columbia hold the motion picture from the fact that this body has made arrangements on a percentage basis for the use of the Moore's Garden Theatre on Saturday mornings from 10 to 12 o'clock. On these occasion a programme of reels personally selected by the teachers will be presented for the instruction and amusement of the school children, the proceeds being devoted to various school funds. The exhibitors generally have done much to promote just such a movement and at one time the Pastime offered a free educational exhibit on Saturday morning. Many of the theatres have co-operated with the teachers in presenting programmes suggested by them. The fact that the school board is conducting such performances bespeaks the educational value of the motion picture.

The first of these exhibitions occurred on April 10 when The Garden was filled with more than one thousand eager children and interested teachers and supervisors, as well as Superintendent Davidson of the schools, educators, and other prominent people. The programme included "A Tour Through the Canadian Rockies," "Opening of the Baseball Season with President Wilson Throwing the First Ball," several comic reels, and "Pandora's Box," which was enacted by the local public schools. Manager Moore took a motion picture of the crowds going in and leaving the Garden with good views of members of the Board of Education. This will be thrown on the screen next Saturday.

A philanthropic feature of this exhibition was the placing of many automobiles of social and official folks at the disposal of the school, so that the children could be brought to and from central meeting points. Mr. Moore's machine did heavy duty in this capacity, carrying thirty-five happy school children on its final trip. The Herald chartered two large sight-seeing cars for this purpose. This movement has the hearty endorsement of those who know and appreciate the educational value of the motion picture.

HER INNOCENT MARRIAGE
(Release Monday, May 19, 1913)

Deprived of happiness through a drunken husband, she leaves. In the years that follow she hears of his death and remarries. Then some unexpected things happen—events that stir the blood and pique the interest to the breaking point.

CALAMITY ANNE PARCEL POST
(Release Thursday, May 22, 1913)

You've seen that funniest of women, "Calamity Anne." Louise Lester never was better in that difficult role. Calamity this time becomes a parcel-post carrier with extraordinary funny results. It all ends by a successful stroke on Calamity's part that nets her a cozy little nest egg.

THE MODERN SNARE

The newly appointed sheriff unwittingly creates the dislike of his predecessor. Result: the ex-sheriff tries a dangerous game to discredit him. When all lose faith, the wife of the youthful sheriff shows a bit of wit and a whole lot of confidence in her huhhy. How she hrings right from wrong makes a thrilling and wholly satisfying picture.

NOTE.—Handsome lithos of Jack Kerrigan and Jack Richardson for your lobby. Dandiest sort of husiness attractors. Better get a couple of each. See your exchange.

WANTED.—Scenarios; not the trite and commonplace, but rather stories with a kick—something new and out of the ordinary. We are now equipped to make any and all classes of picture plays. Hence we want one, two and three reel stories, and as we want the unusual in stories, so will we pay the unusual in price.

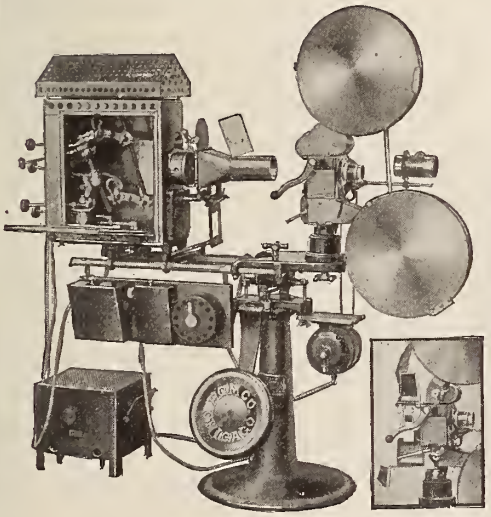
Reasons

FOR MOTIOGRAPH SUPREMACY

You Know



SOMETHING MAKES THE MOTIOGRAPH DIFFERENT—WHAT IS IT?

All machine specifications read much alike, yet YOU KNOW all machines are not alike in the service they give extending over a period of years. There lies the difference, plus—the way the MOTIOGRAPH makers DO things. IT IS STANDARD. The MOTIOGRAPH standard has always been simply this: Make every part of the machine the best, buy only the best material; make it the right way; put it together with skilled labor; test it with utmost care, and then sell this product in a standard high-class way. THIS HIGH MOTIOGRAPH STANDARD IS EXPENSIVE, YET, WE THINK, MERELY GOOD BUSINESS POLICY. It has established the reputation of the MOTIOGRAPH. We are proud of that reputation, and jealous of it, too.

WE INTEND TO MAINTAIN THE MOTIOGRAPH REPUTATION BY MAINTAINING OUR STANDARD.

MOTION PICTURE MACHINES HAVE BEEN SELECTED BY MR. GEORGE KLEINE FOR THE PROJECTION OF

QUO VADIS

Never has there been such a superb photo-drama.

Never have the New York newspapers been so sincere in their praise of motion pictures as in their comments on Quo Vadis.

Never, in the opinion of experts, has there been such perfect projection as at the Astor Theatre.

We wish to call your attention to the statement appearing on page 21, May 3 number of the "Moving Picture News," as follows:

"The Quo Vadis pictures have been so successful that six Power's No. 6 have been purchased for other companies of this concern."

ASK THEM TO PROVE IT.

We are pleased to quote the following letter from Mr. George Kleine:

Mr. H. B. Coles,
Precision Machine Co.,
317 E. 34th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Coles:—

I wish to thank you and Mr. Cannock for your personal assistance in the installation of the two Simplex machines at the Astor Theatre for the Quo Vadis production. I was particularly solicitous to obtain the best possible projection for this extraordinary photo-drama, and have never seen a better film picture than the Simplex machine is giving at the Astor.

I shall be well satisfied if your machines give us equally good results at the Garrick in Philadelphia and the Academy of Music in Baltimore to open next Monday, May 12th.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) GEO. KLEINE.

WE CAN PROVE OUR STATEMENTS.

Buy the machine which is selected by the best men in the business and you won't go wrong.

We don't try to pull the wool over your eyes with misleading statements.

Write today for catalogue B describing this wonderful projector.

EX-CATHEDRA

TO BE, OR NOT TO BE?

PARAPHRASING Shakespeare in Hamlet's soliloquy I want to say "To Be or Not to Be." That is the question, whether it is easier to build continuous moving machines or to use those already on the market, to experiment; ah, there's the rub. From this experimentation what vast sums of money may be lost gives us pause.

I have on my desk several letters, asking my opinion regarding the utility of a continuously moving film projecting machine. I have also received visits from several men who have been approached to put money into an invention of this kind. I have received inquiries from two banks asking the possibility of such an invention on the market. Talking with some prominent manufacturers in the industry with a view to obtain their ideas of such a machine, they all agree with me that such an invention to-day is absolutely useless for any practical purpose of projection. Why? Simply because it would create chaos out of order.

Joseph Bianchi in 1901 obtained a patent on a continuously running film using prisms and reflectors in the projection, and this patent will cause an interference of any other like device that manufacturers may try to make, or inventors try to invent. Not only is such an invention useless at the present day, but anyone investing money in such a scheme is bound to lose the same in experiments which will practically come to naught.

Let me pause a minute and argue the point. The main object of such an invention is to get away with any patent that may be in existence on the projecting machine, doing away with the Prosch shutter, the Latham loop, the sprocket wheel, and all such like devices. The film runs in a continuous band and the prisms do the rest. Not only is there a great loss of light by this process, but there is also a blur in the continuously running picture; and while some of the flicker may be eliminated, the result is not worth the extra work entailed upon the machine, or the operator and the manufacturer.

Again, every camera with the exception of the Bianchi camera is made to take pictures intermittently, each picture being divided by a white line of space, or it may be a black one. This, with the shutter, causes the intermittent flicker and cannot be eliminated entirely with the present type of machines, but at the same time the machines have been made almost flickerless, acting in conjunction with the camera that takes the film, and further every film made by any camera on the market is capable of being projected on these machines. Films cannot be made to project on a continuous running machine that are taken by such cameras, and those who are trying to invent a continuously running film projector must also build a continuously running camera, and I very much question if any manufacturer is going to be so foolish as to revolutionize his own manufacture for the sake of getting a continuously running film; this would be an isolated instance, and rather Don Quixoticlike, butting against a windmill, or, in other words, butting against a condition that has grown up with the industry, and for which condition every camera, and every projecting machine, has been designed for the sole purpose of giving clear pictures and steady projection.

To the investors above I have said, "Do not waste money on such wildcat schemes for the simple reason that it will never be returned, unless every manufacturer adopts a camera to take the film for such projection. Again, how extremely foolish for an inventor to think that he is going to put every camera at present in existence and every projector now manufactured upon the shelf or the junkheap. The industry is not ready for any such radical move, and so I caution my readers, as well as any of the investing public against such losses.

Having disposed of the projecting end, I want to touch upon a very moot point troubling the exchange man to-day, and as it would be an exceedingly difficult matter to get an exchangeman, or an exhibitor, to adopt such a scheme as the above, why not look at the regular releases of film of to-day in the same light? Why should an exchange be compelled to buy certain films, on a certain day, and bind himself to accept "a pig in a poke" as the manufacturers at present compel them to do. They would not buy machines simply because the manufacturers said they have got to have them. Why should they be compelled to buy films simply because certain manufacturers have certain days on which to release certain subjects, and the exhibitor or the exchange man knows nothing whatever about the quality or the subject of the picture. Every exchange man ought to be free to choose for himself what he ought to buy, and I am strongly opposed to the narrow grooves in which the trade has fallen.

The business is tremendously hampered by the release day and standing order system, as fixed by the various bodies responsible for the product, and the foolishness of placing standing orders for releases by manufacturer's name, title of film, and day of release, doing away entirely with the quality of the particular film which they purchase, which in my opinion is of the greatest importance to-day. The feature film is coming to the fore, and will be a solution of many difficulties, in-as-much as the exchange man can always see the feature film before it is released or the state rights sold.

Let us take such subjects as "The Good Little Devil" that is shortly to be produced. The quality of the actors in this film has already a world-wide reputation, and the quality of the Famous Players Film Company has made a reputation under the able management of Adolph Zukor, Ed. Porter, Ben Schulberg, and others connected with this firm. Even their reputation is not sufficient guarantee that the quality will be good, until it is seen on the screen, then it is judged, and ordered or bought accordingly.

"Quo Vadis" has obtained a world-wide reputation as a feature film, a film which I stated once before is practically the last and greatest word in Cinematography. Edison is putting out "Marie Stuart," a feature film that will be seen and exploited, and will be in the hands of every wide-awake exhibitor who wants to show his patrons something of English history. Take the run of other feature films such as Gaumont, Itala, Ambrosio, Famous Players, Pilgrim's Progress, all of which have had, and are still having, a wonderful run, and then ask the question, Mr. Exhibitor—To be, or not to be? Ask the question, Mr. Exchange Man—To be, or not to be? Whether it is wiser to select your feature that will appeal to the public or still hold to the mediocre daily release film, which in many instances is so poor I wonder why the manufacturer has the audacity to exploit upon a long-suffering public.

Alfred H. Saunders.

MOTION PICTURE MAGNATE AIDED BY DUMB ACTOR

During the recent visit of W. N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, to his Los Angeles properties, he had occasion to inspect a tract of land lying east of the Selig Wild Animal Farm, on the outskirts of the city. He was traversing the land in a heavy touring car when the machine became mired in a soft spot. The united efforts of a number of men and horses failed to extricate the car. Finally a hurry call was sent to the animal farm and "Toddles," the famous elephant who does such clever work in Selig wild animal photodramas, was brought post-haste to the scene of the disaster. "Toddles" sized up the situation in no time, wrapped his trunk around the rear axle, and with a pull that seemed to cost him no more effort than doing a "turn" before the camera, raised the automobile onto dry land. A crowd which had been attracted by the novel salvage scene applauded "Toddles" vociferously as the sagacious animal waved a farewell with his trunk to Mr. Selig, when the car sped safely off toward town.

THE MODERN HISTORIC RECORDS ASSOCIATION, employing the inventions of our age, purposes to preserve in imperishable form the records of History, heretofore "writ on water," in order that future generations may know the exact measure of our wisdom and our ignorance, our achievements and our failures.

The Modern Historic Records Association

In the spirit of its work of preserving for posterity the records of our contemporary history, by the best methods known to modern science, The Modern Historic Records Association, with the courteous co-operation of Mr. Thomas A. Edison, invited the Hon. William J. Gaynor, Mayor of the City of New York, with some of his heads of Departments, to make a talking-picture record of their views on vital phases of the administration of New York, the greatest city of our nation.

The record, made by Mr. Edison's latest invention, the Kinetophone, was taken on April 17, 1913, is hereby certified by all those represented, in the original record, and on this first day of May 1913, was committed to the care of the Modern Historic Records Association, for preservation, with this attesting parchment, in its archives, as a part of our civic history, for future generations.

CENSORSHIP BILLS

President M. A. Neff writes his views on this important question:

Owing to the many editorials and misleading statements made from time to time in regard to the Censor Bill passed in Ohio and the reasons for the same, I desire to make a statement. First, it is absolutely necessary to have either a national or a state censor board with legal authority to censure the pictures in the State of Ohio, otherwise, by reason of the passing of constitutional amendments in the State of Ohio, each city and town in Ohio would have the right to establish a censor board, and if we had not had passed a State Censor Bill in the State of Ohio, the moving picture exhibitors of Ohio might just as well have closed up their theatres, as possibly every town would have established a censor board, and anyone acquainted with the situation can well imagine what this would mean—that every film would not only be censored once in the State of Ohio, but possibly one hundred times, and this censor board would become a political asset controlled by little narrow-minded politicians, that would destroy the moving picture business in our state.

The Ohio Censor Bill passed, provides that the members of the Ohio Censor Board may act with any other legally constituted board and establish a National Censor Board, which could censor the pictures for every state in the union, but would not be supported by donations from those directly interested in having pictures passed.

In the various reports that have been made by the various writers opposed to the censoring of pictures, not one of them has ever yet explained the position in Ohio thoroughly, but they have condemned all censor boards unless they were supported by contributions, as is the National Censor Board in New York, which has no legal standing and is supported practically by the New York manufacturers. Now, what the exhibitors want are facts, and here are a few of them: We first tried in every way possible to secure a legal National Censor Board, but found it impossible to do so by reason of the fact that the National Government has no authority whatsoever to establish a censor board to censor pictures for the individual states. We then turned to the state for relief, and after more than a year's hard work and planning and asking for advice from manufacturers, newspapers and others, no one could suggest a plan whereby the emergency might be met. It was then that I proposed that a few states pass a censor bill creating a censor board, and that these few censor boards get together and form a National Censor Congress and censor the pictures for every state in the union by securing the endorsement of all of the states to accept the censoring of the pictures by the censor congress, which would be a very easy matter. Ohio has passed such a bill, and it will soon become a law; and we are ready to work with other states in forming a National Censor Board, and are ready to do our best to secure the endorsement of the censor board so established and which will be legal in every respect; and once a picture is censored by the censor board so created, every state that endorses this board may have its services without the cost of a cent, and the exhibitor and manufacturer will know that there will be no interference whatsoever with the pictures when they are sent into the various cities to be exhibited.

There is a vast difference between a self-constituted censor board with no authority and a National Censor Board created as heretofore stated, with absolute legal authority. The pictures now being censored by the National Censor Board are in many places being re-censored, whereas if there were a censor board as provided by the Ohio State Censor Bill, no one would dare interfere with the exhibition of pictures that were censored by this board. It is not proposed to have forty-eight states represented on this censor board, because it is not necessary; the other states would not wish it. I believe that all the people and the states want is to be secure and protected from suggestive and immoral pictures, and this would increase the picture business from 15 to 30 per cent in every state. It is a step upwards and in the right direction, for we must have supervision for pictures that are manufactured, not so much in this country, but in foreign countries, and that are shipped to us.

The censor bill proposed in Michigan was outrageous; it provided that one man and one woman should constitute the board, and that they should be paid $2.50 not only for each film censored, but for each slide. I did all I could to kill the bill. The bill in Kansas was almost as bad, and I did what I could to kill that bill. The bill in Wisconsin I have not read; but I was opposed to the bill in Iowa because it was not properly drawn and did not make the proper provision; it was vicious, misleading, unconstitutional and a detriment to all concerned. The bill in California I am opposed to most bitterly; also I was opposed to the bill offered in the State of Indiana; in fact, I have been opposed and am opposed to every bill I have seen so far, with the exception of the one in Ohio.

I am in favor of a National Censor Congress composed of broad-minded, honest citizens who are paid a stipulated salary and are under the jurisdiction of some authority who has the right to ask for their resignation if pictures get by that should not or if pictures are condemned that should have passed. I fail to see where any conscientious person can object to the exhibitor having representation upon this board, and I am sure that the exhibitors are willing to have the manufacturers and press represented.

What we want is a censor board that means something and that will last and will uplift the business, that will not be too exacting or too liberal, that will have not the least taint of politics connected with it, and that will not be for any class of classes but that will discharge its duty fearlessly, honestly, and to the best interests of everybody. We are forced into a position that we must meet, and up to date there is not one of those who are opposed to the censor board that has offered, in my opinion, any relief to the exhibitor or the manufacturer, and I, in my opinion, believe that if there is not some kind of supervision for the picture manufacturer, that the business will deteriorate instead of advancing, and I believe that everybody will concede that the National Censor Board up to the time it was discovered that it had no legal authority was doing good work, and if it had been possible, I for one would have endorsed the National Censor Board and let it go on with the good work it was doing; but they had no legal standing and could not enforce law, and when it became known, the various cities took advantage of the situation until it has become such a danger to the exhibitors that we are forced to do something, and the only thing possible to do under our form of government is to establish the National Censor Congress created from a few of the states, and show the other states the wisdom of endorsing the congress.

I am open for conviction, and anyone that can show me a better plan I assure that it will be hailed with satisfaction and relief. My first consideration is for the exhibitor, but to be for the exhibitor one must of necessity be for the people and look to the interest of the people, that the exhibitor may continue to do business and prosper.

There is one thing that impresses me in all of the writings that I have read, and that is, that the National Censor Board established in New York seems to be indorsed by the various writers. If someone will kindly explain how the censoring of pictures by the National Censor Board will assist the exhibitors and cause other boards to discontinue, we will then agree that the National Censor Board can handle the situation; but so long as pictures must be re-censored after the National Censor Board of New York has censored them, why waste the time censoring these pictures in New York? If the State of New York will pass a law legalizing the National Censor Board, Ohio will be only too happy either to work with them or to accept the pictures they censor without further question.

I have just read the bill introduced in Illinois; I am absolutely opposed to the bill because it does not provide that the Illinois Censor Board may co-operate with other states in forming a National Censor Congress, and there are other parts of it I object to that are too numerous to mention.

NOTES

The big convention to be held in Baltimore at the Hotel Emerson on the 3rd and 4th of June, will be a very large and enthusiastic convention, and possibly may surpass the Philadelphia Convention in importance and attendance, although Philadelphia is assured a big convention. Mr. J. Bennett and the committee at Baltimore are showing marked ability in organizing the State of Maryland.

At the convention to be held in Wilmington, Delaware, 26th of May, it is confidently expected that every exhibitor in the State of Delaware will be present, as very favorable replies are being received from them.

President Neff has called a state convention for Virginia, to be held at Richmond at the Jefferson Hotel on Friday, May 23rd. Mr. R. H. Thomas of Moundsville, W. Va., is now in Richmond assisting the local committee in making the Virginia Convention a grand success. R. G. Stradsford, of the Orpheum Theatre, Richmond, is one of the live wires, and is giving his personal attention to the Virginia Convention. Every exhibitor in the State of Virginia is expected to attend. Nothing will stand in their way, and all roads should lead to Richmond on the 23rd of May. The convention will be held just one day; there will be sight-seeing and a banquet given at night.

The Louisiana Convention will be held in New Orleans, May 12th; the date has not yet been definitely settled.

The Indiana Convention will be held on May 27th at a place to be designated later.

The convention will be held at Birmingham, Alabama, probably on Monday, June 9th. President Neff has sent an organizer into the State of Georgia to bring that state to life, and the Georgia Convention will probably be held on the 10th or 11th of June.

The convention held at Jackson, Miss., on the 8th, was a splendid success. About twenty-five new members were added to the list, and an organizer will be immediately started in the field to secure new members. There was much enthusiasm. A photograph of the members was taken, and an automobile ride through the city, sight-seeing, was provided. The delegates were entertained at the different shows, and at eleven o'clock at night one of those good old-fashioned southern Dutch lunches was served, where everybody enjoyed himself immensely. Harmony prevailed throughout the convention. The next convention it was decided to hold for two days, and it will probably be held next March or April; the date has not yet been decided. The State of Mississippi is thoroughly organized, and has a nice little fund in the state treasury. The officers of the Mississippi State Branch No. 26 are hustlers in every sense of the word, and while they are a new organization, they are right there with the goods and propose to secure every exhibitor in the State of Mississippi, and at all times are ready to protect their own interests.

The M. P. E. L. of the District of Columbia sent a check to President Neff for $105 to assist the members of the M. P. E. L. who suffered from the recent flood. Although the members of the league in Washington, D. C., had contributed over one thousand dollars previously to the general fund, they felt that they wished to contribute something direct that would reach the members of the league. The Washington, D. C., exhibitors are to be congratulated upon the large amount that they have contributed through the general fund and also for the contribution of $105 to the exhibitors' fund for the direct benefit of the exhibitors.

The itinerary of President Neff is as follows:—Leaves Cincinnati over the C. & O. at noon Thursday, May 22nd, arriving at Richmond on the morning of the 23rd. Will stop at the Hotel Jefferson. Will be in Washington, D. C., at the Willard Hotel on the 24th of May. In Philadelphia at the Continental Hotel on the 25th, and in Wilmington, Delaware, on the 26th of May at the Dupont Hotel. Back to Philadelphia on the 27th and 28th at the Continental Hotel, attending the big convention. On the 30th and 31st at the Imperial Hotel, New York City.

Several reports from those who do not understand the Censor Bill passed in Ohio, have given out that the exhibitor will have to pay for the censoring of pictures. There is nothing in this report whatsoever; furthermore, any picture censored in the State of Ohio, other laws to the contrary notwithstanding; this is the opinion of the ablest lawyers in the state who have looked the matter up. It is desired that the public fully understand that all this talk about political machines, simply comes from those who possibly would like to serve on the censor board, but have found that it is not a political machine and can not be subsidized. Furthermore, the politicians of the State of Ohio fought the Censor Bill, knowing that it would not become a political asset, and the only people in the State of Ohio who were opposed to it were a few film exchanges and others whose political influence will not serve them in securing a position on the board. Every exhibitor in the State of Ohio that belongs to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League is in favor of a censor board, and the president of the German Catholic Society, which numbers over 40,000, endorsed the censor board. And by reason of the censor board, many exhibitors find that people are beginning to attend picture shows that never attended them before. It is confidently believed that the Censor Bill will increase the business in Ohio from 15 to 30 per cent. If anyone has letters from any exhibitor who is a member of the M. P. E. L. in Ohio, where they can show that they have written that they are opposed to the censor board, it would be conferring a favor upon the exhibitors of Ohio to produce these letters. The only opposition that was ever offered came from Cleveland and originated from the film exchanges.

We hope the people and the exhibitors will not be misled by incorrect statements coming from those who do not understand the situation or know the real facts in regard to the censor board in Ohio. The exhibitors were forced to do something for their protection, and the agents were thick and many around the Capitol at Columbus, trying to kill the bill, and the politicians worked with them for the purpose that the municipalities of Ohio might each establish a censor board, whereby the exhibitors would suffer, and that there might be municipal boards established in every town in the state.

There will be only three appointments to the censor board in Ohio, and it will be impossible to furnish jobs for all the knockers to keep them quiet, and this is the time when politics and schemes will not work. Ohio promises to give the manufacturers, the film exchanges, and everybody concerned a square deal, and Governor James M. Cox has stated that the censor board will be made up in such a manner as will convince everyone that there are no politics in it, but that it is constituted with a view to promote the best interest of the highest functions of the moving picture business. The moving picture exhibitor of the State of Ohio has absolute confidence in Governor Cox, notwithstanding the unjust criticism of the board, and the insinuations that it was created for political preferment.

EXPOSITION NOTES

It is remarkable to notice the interest that the different manufacturers that have already taken space in the coming Exposition of the Motion Picture Art are taking in the progress of the work at the New Grand Central Palace.

During the past week a large number of those who will exhibit spent some time at the New Grand Central Palace with Mr. Samuels. The Exposition is still some time off, but it is quite unusual to see so many taking such active interest in it at this time. So much of Mr. Samuels' time was taken up at the Palace last week, that it has been decided that after the first of June he will make his headquarters there so that he may be right on the job to furnish information or help to any of those who are to make an exhibit there during the Third Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

The American Seating Company have had their architect at the Palace to draw plans of the "model" theatres and to figure on seating capacity, etc. These theatres will be laid out in as thorough a manner as if they were to be permanent. The American Seating Company have already ordered from their factory the different styles of chairs that are to be installed in these model theatres.

The H. W. Johns-Manville Company, who will instal asbestos booths in all theatres, have had their representative at the Palace to figure on the size of the booths.

Several projecting machine companies have had representatives there to figure on the distance of the throw, height of the booths, size of the screens and other details which go to furnish perfect projections. New machines are to be used by all.

Screen companies who have taken space have ordered special screens from their factories so that a clear picture is sure to be seen.

Several of the film manufacturers are now taking special pictures for the week of July 7th to 12th. These companies will show only pre-released pictures, and they are sure to be of the highest quality.

At the offices of the Exposition, German Bank Building, Fourth avenue and Fourteenth street, it is getting very busy. Mr. Tichenor, Chairman, and Mr. Samuels, Secretary of the Exposition Committee, are now devoting practically all their time to the perfection of the plans for making the Exposition the biggest trade show ever seen in this country.

Mr. Richard G. Holloman, Vice-President of the International Exposition Company, who is taking an active interest in this Exposition in an advisory capacity to the committee, is now on a trip to Bermuda. Mr. Holloman has no peer in the Exposition business, and upon his return will devote much of his time to assist the general committee.

During the last week a number of the big men in the motion picture business returned from Europe. All of these men are interested in this Exposition and have been in touch with the committee regarding space; it being only a matter of how much and in what place. Within the next couple of weeks the entire main floor will have been taken. All the model theatres planned for have been taken, there being only the open theatre left. Two of the feature play manufacturers are arranging to take one-quarter time in this theatre, so that half is all that remains not contracted for.

Special arrangements have been made by the committee with the International Exposition Company so that these theatres may be installed in the New Grand Central Palace by the first of July, thus to a great extent lessening the usual rush and hustle of the few days preceding the opening of an exposition.

There is a great deal of interest being taken throughout the country in the $25 prize scenario competition. Mr. Samuels is surprised and delighted with the number of scenarios coming in every mail. This competition does not close until the first of June, and for the benefit of those who have not already heard of it, the following are the rules: The competition is open to all. A comedy scenario, suitable for either a man or a woman, single, in one scene, not taking more than five minutes in acting and portraying the different emotions, such as joy, anger, sadness, etc., is what is wanted, and a prize of $25 will be paid to the author or authoress of the one selected by competent judges. Send all manuscripts to Secretary of the First International Exposition, Second Floor, German Bank Building Fourth avenue and Fourteenth street, New York City.

Dewitt, Neb.—C. Cawley has bought out Claude Wheeler's interest in the picture shows here and in Western.

PROGRESSIVE NATIONAL SERVICE TO USE FILMS IN PARTY PUBLICITY WORK

The education committee of the Progressive National Service, at a luncheon meeting held in the Hotel Manhattan, decided to adopt moving pictures as a device to spread Progressive doctrine. William Gillette, the actor, probably will be chairman of the committee.

The committee will work up a series of dramas, as true to life as possible, showing the results of present abuses and the advantages to be gained by following Progressive lines of action. For the important service of arranging these dramas Will Irwin, Franklin P. Adams, Samuel Merwin, Stephen French Whitman, Arthur B. Reeve and other writers who have espoused the Progressive cause will be called on.

To define the relation of the Progressive party to the present system of education in high schools and colleges and to propose steps for the proper inculcation of ideas of social justice and industrial reform into the minds of the young a special public education committee was organized, with Professor John Dewey of Columbia as chairman and Thomas A. Edison as a member.

An exhibit in the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco in 1915 is another scheme to promote publicity which the committee heard with favor. Director Paxton Hibben will arrange the exhibit.

Colonel Roosevelt, Gifford Pinchot, Jane Addams and Carl Kelsey were decided on as speakers at the National Progressive conference to be held at Newport on July 7th.

THE MIRACLE INJUNCTION VACATED

Judge Lehman on May 6th vacated the injunction obtained by A. H. Woods and the Miracle Company against the New York Film Company some time ago, and the New York Film Company is now free to use the title "The Miracle."

It is well known to our readers that "The Miracle" when brought over here some twelve months ago was praised by everyone present at the first exhibition for its excellent photography and the technical details carried out to make "The Miracle" perfect to the mythological story as told by the author.

Another version of "The Miracle" was made, then purchased by A. H. Woods, who sought to enjoin the New York Film Company from using the title "The Miracle." On the failure of A. H. Woods to furnish bonds of $20,000, to indemnify the New York Film Company against loss and damages, the judge held that the injunction should be vacated with costs to the New York Film Company. This now ends the litigation as far as "The Miracle" is concerned.

"The Miracle" has been passed by the censorship boards in New York, Chicago and San Francisco.

MARY STUART

(Mary, Queen of Scots)

Adapted from the drama by Frederick Schiller—in three parts—Edison Release

The tragical story of the ill-fated founder of the English House of Stuart, adapted in part from Schiller's romance, "Maria Stuart."

In the first scenes we are shown the fatal event that alienated Mary from her husband, Lord Darnley, and incited her, as some say, to assassinate him, two years later. Darnley, jealous of his wife's affection for Rizzio, an Italian musician, brings cloaked noblemen into Holyrood Palace. They wait in the hall by the Queen's chamber, and as Rizzio leaves, stab him to death with their daggers. Mary is overcome with grief, but her fiery spirit is shown by the scornful wrath with which she treats her triumphant and sneering husband.

Ten years later Mary is a prisoner in Fotheringay Castle where she has been placed by her cousin, Queen Elizabeth, because of the widespread sympathy among English Catholics with Mary's not entirely unjust pretensions to the English throne.

Edward Mortimer, nephew of Sir Amias Paulet, the warden of Fotheringay Castle, has fallen in love with Mary's picture and manages by a pretended animosity to the Scottish Queen, to be made her personal jailer. Lord Burleigh, the Lord Treasurer, arrives at the castle and Mortimer overhears him trying to persuade Paulet to stab Mary. Mortimer immediately warns the Queen, and she sends him with a letter of appeal to the Earl of Leicester, Queen Elizabeth's favorite.

At court Mortimer is presented to Elizabeth. She evidences an immediate liking for him, and indicates that to win her favor he should assassinate Mary. Mortimer pretends to accede to her wishes, and secretly gives Mary's message to Leicester. Leicester, divided between two loves and two ambitions, fails to give him a satisfactory answer. Mortimer leaves in disgust and goes to the secret council of noblemen who are working in Mary's behalf. He flings the dagger

MARY STUART
At the place of execution. Leicester asks forgiveness from Mary.

Elizabeth has given him on the table. The noblemen in great alarm make immediate arrangements for Mary's escape. In the general confusion Saurag, a monk, seizes the Queen's dagger.

Meanwhile Leicester has succeeded in persuading Elizabeth to visit her royal cousin. Their meeting is a stormy one with Mary at first suppliant and later angry, and Elizabeth cold and scornful throughout. The English Queen refuses to allow Mary to return to Scotland. Shortly afterward Saurag, the monk, makes an unsuccessful attempt to stab Elizabeth with the dagger she had given Mortimer.

Lord Burleigh attempts to implicate Leicester in this affair by producing the letter Mary had written to him. Leicester clears himself by denouncing and imprisoning Mortimer who stabs himself. Elizabeth finally signs the warrant for Mary's execution.

Mary, white and cold, walking between guards to her death, is met by Leicester, who sinks to the ground before her ashamed. She is visibly affected but collects herself and continues on her way. The axe is poised and the film fades on Leicester desolate and inconsolable, prostrate on the stairs before the execution scene.

EXHIBITORS' ADVERTISING & SPECIALTY CO.

Wide-awake exhibitors are always on the alert to secure good advertising specialties for their theatres, and a judicious selection of posters, heralds, photos and other drawing novelties is made to stimulate an otherwise dull box office showing. Many concerns have been organized to exploit these neccssities to the exhibitor and one of the men to grasp the needs and conduct a successful company is Mr. Arthur D. Jacobs, president of the Exhibitors' Advertising & Specialty Co., with offices at 30 Union Square, New York City. Starting in a small way three years ago in the rear of Wm. Steiners Film Exchange, at 110 First avenue and moving to larger quarters at 105 East Fourteenth street; remaining about a year they were compelled to secure larger quarters, and to-day they occupy two floors, or about 5,000 square feet of space, giving them spacious show and stock rooms where their large stock can be shown to the best advantage. Their slogan is, "If there is anything to advertise a picture theatre, we have it," and exhibitors are invited to call and get the glad hand of welcome Mr. Jacobs will extend to them.

* * * *

The doom of the dramatic atrocity, the "Number 2," "3," and "4" company, the cheaply engaged and poorly staged aggregation that has been accustomed to circle the smaller cities, with presentations of sad versions of the big successes of the New York season, has happily been sealed. Score another victory for cinematography. No longer will the theatre-goer of the little one-night stand have to pay good money to see a group of bad actors who might have been grand as plumbers or hod-carriers. The death-knell of these money-grabbing companies has been sounded. All the big dramas and comedies are to be filmed from the original New York companies and the first of these films is promised in September. Thus will lovers of high-class theatrical productions, not fortunately located to enjoy the originals, be permitted to witness the best there is in stageland.

THE PROFESSOR'S TRAVELING ADVENTURES

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Great Northern Release)

"MY dear sir, you must take a rest. I insist upon it. You are wearing yourself out. You must get away from your work."

It was Dr. Swan who spoke most emphatically.

"But I can't," insisted Professor Miller. "You know, Doctor, I have so much work on hand I cannot leave it just now. Perhaps later, but really I could not go now."

"No, you must go now."

"But my classes. You know I must not neglect my students. It is nearing examination time and I would like to be with the boys during their trials."

"Oh, hang the students!" thundered the doctor.

"Oh, no, no!" protested Professor Miller. "I am most fond of my young men. And then, besides, there is my book, you know. I want to have it in the publisher's hands in a month. Perhaps later, Doctor, but I really couldn't go now."

"Perhaps later may be too late, Professor," answered the doctor significantly.

"May be—Why, what do you mean, Doctor?"

"Just what I say. You need rest so badly that if you don't take it you won't live six months."

"I won't—why, Doctor Swan, you don't—you can't mean that."

"Absolutely I do!" insisted the doctor. "If you stop now you will soon be all right. You are on the verge of a nervous breakdown that a man of your temperament could not stand."

"But my students," urged the professor weakly.

"Your assistant can take care of them, can't he?"

Professor Miller acknowledged that he could.

"All right, then."

"But—but my book?"

"Let it rest. It will do it good."

"We-ll, do you want me to go away?"

"It might be best, but the main thing is rest. If you can take it here, all right, but it would probably be better to get away from your present surroundings entirely."

Professor Miller sighed.

"Very well, I'll go."

That night at the table he looked very dejected and ate sparingly.

"Whatever is the trouble with your appetite, sir?" asked his housekeeper.

"Well, Mary, I suppose I might as well tell you the truth. I'm a sick man."

"A sick man? Where do you feel bad, sir?" asked Mary, concerned.

"I don't feel bad at all, Mary, but I'm a sick man."

"Well, if you don't feel bad nowhere, how do you know you're sick?"

"Doctor Swan says so."

"Good Lord! What you got?"

"I haven't got it; I'm going to have it if I don't rest."

"There!" exclaimed Mary, "ain't that what I been tellin' you for years, sir? You ain't had a rest for I don't know when. I didn't need half the letters of the alphabet after my name to tell me you needed one."

"Should I go away, do you think, Mary?" asked Professor Miller, meekly.

"What did he say? He's supposed to know," replied Mary with a touch of scorn.

"He said I didn't have to go, but it would be better."

"Well, I'll change it a little and say that it would be better and you got to go. I been your housekeeper for a good many years, sir, and I've took care of you. I know you pretty well and I know that you wouldn't get any good out of a rest here. You'd be thinkin' of them books all the time and of them rascally students. I know."

"I guess you're right, Mary. It would be best for me to go away. But you must not call my students names. They are nice boys."

"Well, where do you want to go?" asked Mary, ignoring the professor's latest remark.

"It really doesn't matter. I'll leave that to you. I'll have to see to a few other things to-night."

"Very well," assented Mary, "I'll have everything ready for you in the mornin' and tell you where you are goin'."

The professor and Mary went about their respective tasks. It is hard to say which had the hardest; he, trying to nerve himself to go, or she, trying to find a place for him to go.

"Ah, I've found you a nice quiet place to go," she informed him the next morning.

"Where is it, Mary?"

"It is in the mountains, sir, very nice and quiet."

"Have you ever been there?" he inquired anxiously.

"No, I can't say that I've been there, sir. But I'm sure you will like it," she hastened to say. "It's away from the swarms, sir. You don't like the swarms, now do you, sir?"

"No, no. I like quiet. Tell me how I am to reach the place."

"Well, first you take the ten-thirty train," explained Mary enthusiastically, "and don't get off until you get to Cartersville."

"Yes."

"And then you take a stage there and go to Ford's Inn. I thought 'Inn' sounded so romantic. Don't you think you'll like it, sir?"

"Yes, yes, I daresay," answered the professor nervously. "When do I start?"

"The train goes at half-past ten. I don't think you'll need more than a half hour. It's only half-past eight now, sir."

Professor Miller went into his beloved library to bestow what seemed to him his last look upon his dearest possessions.

When the time came for him to leave the house, he closed the library door reluctantly, almost tearfully.

On getting on the car, Professor Miller found that he had two traveling companions sitting very near him. One was an elderly lady and the other young and good-looking.

"I hope no one will mind," remarked the elderly lady, when the train had started, "but I must take off my shoes. My feet are burning very badly and I think it would ease them. Do you mind, sir?" she inquired of the professor.

"No, madam, by all means make yourself comfortable. I trust my presence will not disturb you."

"By no means. I don't mind you at all."

While Professor Miller was busy trying to puzzle out just what the lady meant by the last remark, he was disturbed by something being held towards him. He looked up to find the young lady offering him some candy.

"Do have some," she urged. "It is delicious. I made it myself."

She was smiling so sweetly that the professor's heart gave a queer little jump. He just couldn't help taking a piece of candy.

This opened the way, and in a short time the professor found himself enjoying a most pleasant conversation.

After a few stations were passed it was time for the young woman to leave the train. Professor Miller told her how glad he was to have met her and then leaned from the window to catch the last glimpse of her.

Just as the train was about to move the young lady called to him:

"I've left my overshoes. Throw them, please!"

The professor, anxious to do her a last service, scrambled frantically around under the seat, and just as the train left the station threw from the window the old lady's shoes.

"Oh, what have you done?" cried the old lady.

"Why—why—I don't know. What have I done?" stammered the poor man.

"You've thrown away my shoes, and I have no others.

What are you going to do about it?" quarreled the lady.

"Well, I beg your pardon most profoundly," apologized the professor. "You see, madam, I thought the shoes were the young lady's overshoes."

"I must say that apologies and explanations don't do me much good," said the lady. "Men are all alike. Just let a pretty face come before them and they don't know what they're doing. Crazy as loons—every one of them."

"Well, madam, what do you wish me to do?"

"There's only one thing you can do," assured the old lady, "and you better do that pretty quick. Pay for my shoes."

"Why, surely—of course—why didn't you say so before?" stammered the professor.

"I wanted to see if you had sense enough to suggest it. You haven't, so just hand me five dollars, please."

He handed her the money, murmuring again and again, "I am sorry—so very sorry."

When the professor's station was reached he found the stage-coach waiting. There were others in it beside himself, and the journey was full of troubles, more or less. The professor was beginning to think that he might have rested as well at home.

"I want to get out at Ford's Inn, you know," he informed the driver, when they had gone some distance.

"Well, the next turn's the place for you," he was told. "You'll have only a mile to walk from there."

"Oh, thank you, thank you so much for bringing me this far."

At the turn the professor left the coach and proceeded on foot. He walked leisurely along, picking his way among the loose stones. Suddenly he heard a whirring noise behind him and turned to walk straight into a bicycle. In a minute he and the bicycle and the rider were lying in the gutter.

When the two picked themselves up they found they were only dusty and bruised.

"I am looking for Ford's Inn," explained the professor. "Will you kindly show me the way?"

"Just keep on this road; you'll get there all right," the man assured him.

The professor kept on and he did reach the inn, but alas, it was not what he was hoping for. The place was small and untidy looking, but it must have a bed, he thought. Anyway, there was nowhere else.

"We got just one room now," he was informed. "It is on the ground floor, and there ain't much in it, but maybe you won't mind."

The professor longed for a bed of any kind, so he asked to be shown to his room at once.

The bed was hard—very hard and narrow, but the poor, tired man was soon in it and fast asleep.

When he awoke it was with a start. Everything around him was dark. Directly beneath his bed was a sound which seemed a cross between a grunt and a sigh. Then a low, knocking sound.

Cautiously and silently Professor Miller crawled from beneath the covers and struck a match to look beneath his bed.

There, just preparing to settle down again, was a dog about two feet long. He sat up again and began to scratch. Then came the knocking of his hind leg against the bare floor.

"So that is it?" muttered the professor. "Why are you sighing so? Is that fleas too?"

The dog stared.

"Come, doggie, doggie," he urged softly.

Doggie did not move.

"Come, doggie, or I'll be compelled to assist you out."

The dog made no move, so the professor reclined upon his stomach and gently but firmly drew him forth, and having opened his door, ejected him into the hall.

Then the professor went to bed again—and to sleep.

Before the morning dawned the same sound reached his ear again.

"Surely I shut my door, and the dog would not come in the window," meditated the professor.

Again he got from his bed and again he dragged the dog gently to the door and put him in the hall.

But this time the professor did not return to bed. He stood in the middle of floor thinking deeply.

"Mary must have made a mistake. It is the first time I ever knew her to make one, but I am afraid she did. I think I shall return."

Visions of his own bed at home and Mary's well-cooked meals floated before his eyes. "I'll go," he said aloud. "But first I must reprimand the man for letting the dog into my room."

When Professor Miller reached the office the dawn was just breaking. The clerk had just made himself visible.

"Up to see the sun rise?" he asked the professor.

"No, thank you. I have had a little trouble. A dog keeps appearing under my bed. I put him out, but he does not stay. It is quite uncanny."

"Oh, that's all right," the clerk assured him. "Somebody must have kicked the board off the hole. There's a hole under the bed that leads to the yard. That's all right. If you don't like him there I'll stop the hole up."

"Well, never mind now," answered the professor nervously. "I am leaving by the next stage. I am anxious to get back."

The man went away murmuring something about "people not knowing what they want."

As the professor traveled back home he breathed a sigh of relief at every stage of the journey. How foolish he was to go, he kept thinking.

"Won't Mary be surprised," he said to himself as he entered his own gate. "And she'll be glad to see me, too, I am sure."

He went straight to the dining-room door, and there he stopped. He dropped his bag and stared. There before him sat Mary and six of her friends at luncheon.

Mary and her guests arose and stood waiting for what they knew they deserved.

"Well, sir, what have you got to say?" she asked finally.

"I realize, Mary, that you have done an unbecoming thing," answered the professor, "but I must say I am very glad to find a good meal on the table. Go right ahead and have a good time, but first make a place for me, for I have not had a good meal since I left. When I have eaten I shall go to my bed. I have decided to take my rest at home."

ITALA FEATURE FILMS IN DEMAND BY PHILADELPHIA EXCHANGES

Eastern Pennsylvania must surely be the Eldorado for feature exchange men. In Philadelphia, according to the confession of one man who happened in the Itala Film Company's office the other day, this city has only twenty-eight feature film exchanges. In quest of state rights on Itala films from this territory in the last few days have been Morris Keene and A. I. Feigenbaum, of the National Features; Robert Theulon, of the Gorman Feature Film Company, and T. A. Luechese, of the European-American Feature Film Company.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

The Joyful Ending

ONE of our friends asks: "Why must a plot end happily?" Plots are not obliged to end happily. We have long been of the opinion that many a strong story had been materially weakened because of the presumed necessity of the lovers' embrace at the ending. However, the directors hav a good argument on their side of the proposition. One stated this to us: "We must please the public, must make our brand popular. You should not blame directors for the usual endings—blame the public." It is true that the majority of lovers of moving pictures like the happy ending. However, we think the minority should be more frequently remembered. An editorial in the National Magazine puts the question thusly: "All stories cannot end happily—the fates forbid it—but the greater part of all popular stories must end happily; and a story of life is seldom true, if its hero or heroine from the beginning to the end finds no one great joy or satisfaction to compensate for many heartbreaks." As one writer puts it: "All lives end in the tragedy of death, but we love to see the bride's wreath, the hero's laurel, the industrious man's success—gilding life's pathway before it begins to descend into the Valley of the Shadow." Nevertheless and notwithstanding, we think the writer of a play, be it pictureplay or otherwise, should be permitted to end it according to his best inspiration. If he submits to commercialism, sooner or later the light of his inspiration will be dimmed; he will be writing his plots and stories by yardstick measure; and his work will deteriorate from the unusual appeal to the "pot-boiling" methods.

American Pays High Prices

The American Film Manufacturing Company sends the following statement: The recent changes occurring at the Santa Barbara studio of the American Film Manufacturing Company have necessitated an urgent demand for one, two and three reel scripts. Higher prices than ever before paid are offered gladly for acceptable scripts, which seem to be remarkably scarce. All Chicago companies have been complaining of the low average of excellence and, in an effort to induce the best class of pictureplay authors to submit their efforts exclusively to the American, that company is offering splendid inducements. Here is a rare chance for the author who "knows how." Scripts should be sent direct to Santa Barbara and not to the Chicago headquarters.

Raise the Standard

More than one editorial department has been complaining lately of the unusual slump in the standard of scripts submitted. Some are inclined to attribute the reason for the large number of hastily prepared and unoriginal stories submitted, to the fact that would-be authors are misled by the "correspondence schools." The false assertions in advertisements that "no education is necessary," that "a child can write them," and "make $1,200 a year for spare time work" have attracted many incompetents to the fold. We sounded the note of warning previously. If the rain of drivel, fostered by the "schools," and now showered upon defenseless script editors, does not cease, sooner or later the "open market" will be a misnomer. Be your own schoolmaster, be original, and do not drink in everything some school faker tells you. You are hurting your own chances, and also the opportunities of others who depend upon their own talent.

In Answer to Objections

Mr. A. W. Thomas, formerly editor of the Photoplay Magazine script department, informs us that he is doing his best to straighten out the difficulties of those writers who submitted scripts to that magazine to be criticized, after the magazine suspended publication. He says he is writing personal letters to all inquirers, but that it will take some little time to reach everyone.

Good Luck to You

Several readers inform us that after some successful pictureplay plotting, they have discovered markets for magazine fiction. Three we know of are going to try for a "slice" of the Collier's Weekly prize money. All stories must be submitted to Collier's on or before September 1, 1913. Dramatic or book rights to successful stories will be released to authors on request, according to editors of Collier's. The sum of $7,500 will be distributed for best stories. Script writing is a better schooling for would-be writers of fiction, than fiction writing is for would-be pictureplay authors.

Three Cheers!

A San Francisco lady writes the following:

> "Thanks to your Department, I appeared this morning in all the glory of a fine, new spring suit. Three scripts sold paid for it. Thank you."

You are entirely welcome! Now earn a new spring hat!

Save Your Money

What is the use of spending money to get your scripts typed? You can rent a typewriter for $2 monthly or, better yet, you can buy a new machine in instalments of $5 a month. Why pay a dollar a script to some typist?

Not with Essanay

A Chicago journal announced recently that Miss Maybelle Haikes Justice will represent the Essanay Company of Chicago, at the Middle West Pictureplaywrights' dinner at Hotel Euclid, Cleveland, June 28. Miss Justice writes that she is not a member of the Essanay staff. However, she has written some good stuff for Essanay, Selig and Lubin, despite the fact that nearly every popular magazine contains one or more stories from her versatile pen.

A Fortunate Author

A well-known English author of society fiction also writes pictureplays. Recently he made a big hit with a story. He writes:

> "A New York dramatic agent wishes to dicker for the dramatic rights and a well-known American film concern wishes to dicker for film rights. I'm in a quandary."

Why? Tear up the ground in making a contract with the well-known New York dramatic agent. If that fails, then interview the film manufacturers. If the story is good enough for a legitimate dramatic play, and it is a success, why, imagine the royalties!

From Militant Mereness

Mr. Matt Mereness, the Schoharie, N. Y., Captain of the Regiment of Pictureplaywrights who build the military "dope," steps forth with the following epistle:

> "I see you are subtracting the military plot from the list. I believe I could pass away to-morrow and yet say: 'during my lifetime I have written some mighty good military stories.' Take a good plot swung along military lines, with plenty of action, and omitting the two men and a woman, and I still believe they have a right to vote. The market is getting smaller and I have been endeavoring to switch to something else, but it seems I cannot get the action in to suit the taste of the editors. Plots of western and military pictures are growing in sameness, I notice."

Now here is the horrible example of a successful writer who has specialized for some years past. He has seemingly arrived at the point where he is not successful nor happy unless wading in the gore of a stricken battlefield. No matter how successful one may be in a special line of literary work. 'tis always wisdom to branch out occasionally and foster versatility. If successful in writing military plots, write 'em, and get the market. At the same time do not lose the knack of writing plots of other kinds.

No Successor as Yet

Acocrding to latest advices, no editor has been appointed by the Universal Clearing House, New York, to succeed Richard Goodall, resigned. However, all scripts are being duly entered, it is said. It is rumored that Theodosia Harris, late of the Pacific Coast, may become editress. Another report has it that Mrs. Lillian Rubinstein, dean of a correspondence school, is to take the helm. There is no likelihood of Hal Reid again becoming editor.

Laemmle's Letter

A well-known author has a statement signed by Hal Reid and dated last August in which Reid informs the author that his script "is being held." The author wonders who is holding it. He asked President Laemmle of the Universal, after fruitless efforts to strike a lead. Laemmle wrote to the author recently that the Universal is not responsible for any mislaid scripts, but that if the author will send on a duplicate they will make another copy free of charge!

Pertinent Pointers

Learn the art of condensation—and it is an art.

Because you have sold maybe a dozen scripts, kindly remember that you do not know it all.

Avoid writing letters to script editors, or to editors of trade journal departments, boasting of your successes. The most successful authors are invariably modest.

Just when an editor shows a disposition to take an interest in you and writes encouraging words in ink on the margin of rejection slips, do not start an avalanche of scripts his way. Give him your best.

Editors don't like to receive a script a day from writers. They know the best work is not the script-a-day work. Send a script a week, or one every two weeks is better yet.

This department is for the beginner, but we strive to make it interesting for the general reader, and we have cause to think we are succeeding in both attempts. We do not like to receive letters from writers scoring editors who do not accept certain work. It you sit into the "game," be broad enough to observe the amenities.

The Ammex Motion Picture Company is not in the market. Mr. H. K. Eakle states that the company will not be responsible for scripts received.

Several editors tell us that some of the advanced authors are neglecting their typewriter ribbons. Don't work a ribbon overtime; a dim ribbon is as bad as a script written on "flimsy."

Unimportant facts ofttimes give rise to important plots. Many good plots are gleaned by watching the omissions of some other writer. Train observation to spot the little things that may be developed into unusual things.

Avoid deeds, mortgages, hidden wills and forged paper. This stuff has been worked overtime and was used when Noah was a mere youth. No matter how bright the plot, the appearance of the lost will or the mortgage spoils the story for the cynical one who will be found in every audience.

Editorial Etchings

Editor A. H. Saunders was born and reared in England.

E. V. Brewster, editor of the Motion Picture Story Magazine, is an attorney.

Betta Brueil, editress of Vitagraph, is a writer of short stories, and she writes good ones.

Epes Winthrop Sargent has a tool chest in the basement and makes funny things for Epes Sargent, Jr.

T. E. Letendre, editor of The Photoplay Author, also runs two or three weekly newspapers.

H. G. Plimpton, manager of Negative Production, Edison Company, used to dabble in amateur theatricals. He recently returned from a European business trip.

Thomas Inch, director-in-chief of the New York Motion Picture Company, was once a well-known actor in theatrical stock companies.

Looking into Show Windows

Did you ever gaze into a show-window? Of course you have. But try this. Walk quickly past a well-arranged show-window. Then stop and note down the articles you noticed. Go back, now, and check up. It's a ten-to-one shot that you named only a minority of the items shown. Try this frequently and soon you will be surprised at the things that you formerly had seen but did not really see. It is just training your power of observation—a power that must be well developed for successful authorship.

The New York End

Many successful literary workers who claim New York as their natural habitat, seek the green fields and running brooks whenever possible. Other literary workers, maybe not overly successful as yet, hurry to New York, when they can, so as to be "in the center of things," as they express it. We know of several pictureplaywrights who hurried to New York and then hurried out again. To those who have asked us about the New York idea, we will say this: It is well to visit New York once or twice a year to keep in close touch with the New York producers. However, if your means are limited, stay away from Gotham. Miss Zona Gale, the noted contributor to most all magazines, writes: "I used to think that one could not well live elsewhere than in New York, and enjoy the best opportunity for newspaper or magazine or any other kind of literary work. After a while I found out differently. You get the material, but you cannot make the best use of it; things go too quickly, there is not time for developing your best work. I would rather do it in a smaller town. I love the little towns." And so, you would-be New Yorkers, if you are succeeding in your home town, do not pull up stakes and enter Gotham. You may find disappointment.

How It Resulted

The discussion has waxed warm for many moons and so we decided to try it out for ourself. In April we wrote a 1,500-word special feature for Munsey. We had the material at our fingers' ends and the story was completed in 50 minutes. A week later we cashed a $35 check. The next day after the Munsey story was mailed we wrote a pictureplay script on special order. We struck a snag in scene 8 and "finis" to that script was not chalked up until an hour and fifteen minutes had passed. Our check will not arrive before thirty days. We have found by experience that to the author who is in touch with both magazine and film markets, the magazine field often affords quicker pay and shorter hours. We know of others who agree with us.

Charles Hoyt's Plays

Selig has secured moving picture rights for Hoyt's series of farce comedies; American has contracted for selected stories owned by Street & Smith; Universal has been filming the Lincoln Carter melodramas; Cosmopolitan has been approached for moving picture rights to certain stories; Edison is filming a Ladies' World serial; Jack London will act in his own stories before the camera; E. P. Oppenheim is now writing 'em. Rex Beach, Maibelle H. Justice, Bannister Merwin, Opie Read, Conan Doyle and the rest have taken up the work. One film concern, we know, recently forwarded letters to all the fiction writers of prominence ofiering $50 for plots and agreeing to a release for short story rights. The fiction writers are coming into the fold, and they must be successful, judging from the exploitation the film concerns are giving them. We are of the opinion that fiction writers will help save the day, because they sympathize, very frequently, with beginners in literary work, and will aid in offsetting the discouraging situation fostered by correspondence schools.

The Day Is Coming

The day is approaching—is nearly here, in fact—when the director of moving picture plays will not be the sole arbiter of what is and is not to be produced. In certain companies this was never the rule, and the releases prove the fact. The director is really an expert who tries to visualize the real meaning of the author. The director should not have the power to distort a playlet into a favorite groove. Writers complain, and often justly, that they cannot recognize their own work on the screen. The fault cannot invariably be attributed to the script. The director is not infallible. Some of these days, some courageous manufacturer will ignore market requirements and release reels of 1,200, 1,400, 1,600 feet. Then the development and climax of the plot need not be chopped off and the story will be measured by merit and originality, and not by feet and inches.

JUST GOSSIP

By The Mahoney

Someone is filching my thunder.

"What do you think of this?" said a friend of The Mahoney's, with some measure of asperity, exhibiting an anonymous postal card with a covert invitation to drink.

"What do I think of it? None but a base, puerile minded, parsimonious craven would ask a man to 'liquor up,' without disclosing his identity, and naming the time and place," I replied. "And further, these picayunish qualities in the human composition are greatly to be despised, as they are very much on the 'Fritz,' and strongly suggestive of 'Slip-me' Patsy of vaudeville fame."

Isn't it just quite too jolly lovely to be in demand?

Willie Norris, of "A Good Little Devil," grew quite recalcitrant recently when asked to lend himself to the vulgar photoplay, and, it is reported, imposed his own conditions.

In fact, all of the members of the company demanded individual cars for transportation to the necessary locations, some, it is said, even going so far as to name the make and style preferred. While a few expressed a preference for Buick, others favored Peerless and Premier.

Willie's car arrived at his luxurious apartment, and it so happened it was an open one. When he saw it, he grew quite peeved, and with a gesture of extreme impatience exclaimed:

"Oh! deah! deah! My word! I cawn't weally think of making a vulgah exhibition of myself in an open cah! Must have one with a limousine body!"

Ed Porter (in an awful hurry) expostulated, but in vain. Willie threatened to slap him, when Ed said, if he did, it would most likely lead to international complications, as he would appeal to the Secretary of State.

The matter was finally amicably arranged, Willie got his closed car, and Ed thought his troubles were at an end. But it was not to be. Another serious contretemps occurred on the return from Fort Schuyler.

Mahoney Charley DeForest, the one ray of extraneous genius among the company, seeing how easy it was for Willie, demanded a closed car for the return journey, so Ed mollified him by handing him two bright shining dollars, and sending him home in a trolley, in charge of the children.

S. S. Hutchinson, president and active head of the American Film Manufacturing Company, has just returned from an extended tour of observation, his itinerary embracing the Pacific Coast, Honolulu, and other points of interest in the Hawaiian Islands.

Mr. Hutchinson is without a peer in the cinematography industry. Keen, far-seeing, energetic and capable, with a faculty for grasping opportunity when presented; and withal, a quiet, unobtrusive manner, in every undertaking, no matter how intricate, he has placed the American product among the best in the market.

No one is better qualified to speak of the rapid and successful advance the American has made, since its inception in the fall of 1910, than The Mahoney, for he was one of the earliest visitors to the old plant, in Orleans Street, Chicago, at the time Mr. Hutchinson was taking his novitiate as a manufacturer, and it is refreshing to recall his dignified bearing, and unruffled calm, in instances where the average man would have lost his head and become demoralized.

Cool and temperate, courteous and affable to all, in the most trying moments, with an expenditure of close to the one hundred thousand dollar mark before any results of a tangible nature were even in sight, he moved cautiously and observantly, never flinching, until at last he saw his opening and took a "Jiu Jitsu" hold (metaphorically speaking), throttled all barriers that crossed his path, and landed the American Film Manufacturing Company in the front rank of the independents.

The Universal Studio at Coytesville has recently been a scene of great activity. What is reported to be one of the most pretentious offerings in the career of the Universal, a Nihilistic subject, has occupied their attention for more than a week past.

For the development of the story, Jacob Adler's Company of players in its entirety were especially engaged, together with the services of several well-known artists, prominent in the world of filmdom, and a vast ensemble of supernumeraries.

Charles G. Graham, who has recently been in great demand for characters of strength and virility, was placed under contract for what in the beginning appeared to be an unimportant part, but his rugged aggressiveness and adaptable personality, coupled with his earnest methods, created such a profound impression that several changes were made in the original theme, and the part padded and built up, until it finally became the pivotal point of the story.

Speaking of Graham recalls an incident The Mahoney witnessed in a picture house in Eighth avenue recently, much frequented by Italians.

A film in which he played an important role, with several changes in make-up (one of which was an Italian), at a critical and exciting moment in the action, an over-enthusiastic auditor cried out: "Zacconi! Zacconi! Questo e lo stesso, di Zacconi!"

Since Bob Broderick and Hale Hamilton seceded from the Kinemacolor forces at Los Angeles, a few of their fellow members of the Clover Club have grown prosperous.

It is reported that Mal Macquarris has acquired a Buick, and Guy Oliver a Peerless.

Prior to Bob's and Hale's secession it was a hustle, it is said, for the other members to meet their most trifling obligations, while Bob and Hale were piling up bank accounts that made John D. Rockefeller's fortune look like a shoemaker's savings, and annexing bungalows and lemon groves.

The accompanying illustration shows Mal and Guy after a particularly strenuous "tilt" for the possession of a grove.

Bob and Hale got the grove, while Mal and Guy got the "juice," as can readily be seen by the acidity of their expression.

Itala Will Produce a 3-Reel Tuberculosis Film Story

Exemplar of how motion picture manufacturers make capital of big events of the times is the enterprise of the Itala Company, in putting into film drama the battle against tuberculosis, news of which battle has been swept into universal print through the alleged cure of Doctor Friedman. The Itala Company directors deciding that here was the opportunity for an excellent scenario, they forthwith engaged an able writer who put into three strong reels the story of a physician who finds within himself the enemy, the Great White Plague.

Assisted by the publicity attendant upon Doctor Friedman's treatment of consumptives, this film contains possibilities of box office significance.

Chairman Entertainment Committee.

William Hilkemeier, Chairman of Entertainment Committee, Says:

That the preliminary steps of the entertainment committee of the Third Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America to be held in this city July 7th to 12th is well on its way.

We are working in co-operation with the various manufacturers and tradesmen in arranging a very extensive program, consisting of moonlight excursions, sight-seeing in the Great White Way, a trip to Hempstead Plains with the airmen who have extended an invitation to all for a trip through the clouds, a day at the studio and a trip to dear old Coney Island.

Messrs. Kessell and Bauman of the famous Kay-Bee Film have placed at the committee's disposal their private yachts for a trip to West Point and Fort Lee.

The ladies' committee will be composed of the leading picture players who will take charge of the visiting delegates' wives and friends during the entire week, and a general good time is assured to all.

"THE DREAD OF DOOM"
A Silhouette of Sorrow

Sometimes we read a book, see a play or a picture that, wedging into a corner of our brains, its recollection echoes through the memory cells with haunting persistence. Such is the strangely hypnotic influence on even the most unreceptive intelligence of "The Dread of Doom," the new Itala three-reel feature film. The writer is no stranger to the unusual and his working days and nights have been spent in avoiding the commonplace, in peering into strange byways of experience. But even upon his satiated senses the potent motives of the "Doom" picture thrilled and ever widened upon his consciousness, to recur again and again even in moments of activity, fleeting fugitives of fancy.

Behind the dramatic framework of the tragedy there is a silhouette of sorrow which stands out grim and ghastly against the sheen of the sable night. There is a force that projects one into the simulated emotions of the actors; in sympathy one can cry with the bereaved, suffer with the man of malediction.

Dissection of feeling is a matter for analytical minds only, and to enter upon the almost occult mesmerism of these gripping events would be playing with vocabular fire in which there would be more obscuring smoke than illuminating flame. Sufficient be it to say that this photo-tragedy is a subject of importance too deep to be praised in terms of the ordinary nomenclature. It is a film whose greatness is intrinsic, inherent. It produces an effect that lingers and impresses with the conviction that these actors have penetrated to the regions of the oversoul, have transcended mere stagecraft.

No review of this film could be written without mention of the marvelous acting of Ermete Zacconi, whose sobriquet, "the Mansfield of Italy," will not cause the real Richard to writhe in his grave at the comparison.

MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

Monopoly under Letters Patent is clearly and broadly differentiated from that created by the combination of a plurality of industrial enterprises into a "trust," but it is apparent that even our national law-makers have little or no conception of this fact. With the uses or abuses of the so called "Trusts" we are not directly concerned in this connection, except in a negative sense. For the inventor does not deprive anyone of anything enjoyed before,—he does not utilize nor segregate in his invention and Letter Patent anything taken away from other people. He comes as near to solving the paradox of creating something out of nothing as is possible for mortal man,—himself a paradox. In fact in these, our present days of scientific achievement it is practically impossible for him to even conceive let alone preempt an absolutely new mechanical movement, for in a broad fundamental sense none such has been discovered or produced in many generations last past. He may and does use old mechanical parts and principles, but he reproduces them in new relations, achieving new and useful results which are beneficial to humanity. In other words he originates a new combination of mechanical elements, each of which may be old in the abstract, but the specific arrangement of which as related to the others produces a unitary operative device by which a new and useful purpose is attained. Taking these extenuating circumstances into consideration, and in view of his invaluable contributions to prosperity and enterprise, it is obvious that the inventor is entitled to the full measure of governmental protection, and should not be classed with, nor be hampered and restricted like other monopolists.

Compagnie Generale des Etablissements Pathé Freres (Phonographe and Cinematographe) of Paris, France, applies for registration of "PATHEKOK" as a trade-mark for apparatus for taking kinematographic pictures, kinematographic projection, projection-lanterns, kinematographic films and packings for said films. Claims use since January 10, 1913.

An odd illustration of the use of motion as a means of rendering obscure things intelligible is contained in an issue of the Mechanics Magazine as far back as 1829, and may be exemplified by a simple and interesting experiment with a sheet of opaque paper placed over a picture or reading matter. If the design or lettering is barely perceptible through the paper when the latter is at rest the indistinct matter may be rendered visually readable by imparting a circular motion to the paper. Presumably variations in the thickness and texture of the paper are responsible for the result, the thinner portions moving rapidly over the printed matter revealing the same by persistence of vision as in cinematography.

An invention which is designed to afford improved processes for the production of a yellow tone in prints of photographs and to provide a method of producing color photois set forth in Letter Patent No. 1,059,867 issued to Aron Hamberger, of London, England,—a feature of the invention consisting in bleaching an image obtained on a silver chlorobromid medium and toning it by the action of a mercuric iodid solution. The invention also consists in a process of obtaining color photographs in which a print is obtained on a silver chlorobromid medium from the negative corresponding to the yellow color, is then bleached and then toned by the action of potassium mercuric iodid or alkali mercuric iodid, e. g., by the action of a solution obtained by mixing solutions of mercuric chlorid and potassium iodid, whereby a yellow color print can be obtained having a key or foundation of practically panchromatic gray. The invention is based on the discovery that if a silver print be bleached by a solution of potassium bromid and potassium ferricyanid and then developed or toned with a solution obtained by mixing mercuric chlorid and potassium iodid a yellow print of good quality is obtained. Further if the print so treated be one obtained from the negative corresponding to the yellow of a three-color photograph the resultant photograph is of particular brilliance and accuracy in color reproduction. This is apparently due to the fact that the print obtained from the negative corresponding to the yellow color is more or less panchromatic and that the yellow toning method above described produces the yellow tone irrespective of the faint practically panchromatic gray image which remains as a key or foundation to the print. When red and blue prints are superposed upon this yellow gray key, the result is apparently a four-color photograph obtained without specially producing a panchromatic gray, and by utilizing this feature the production of color prints is considerably simplified. The invention may be applied to prints on transparent or translucent media as well as to prints on an opaque base.

For the purpose of producing X-ray kinematographic pictures, plates of films of considerably greater dimension and bulk are needed than for ordinary kinematographic pictures, and hence means employed for the production of the latter would not serve for producing the X-ray pictures. In the ordinary kinematographic picture the size of exposure does not exceed one-half sq. cm., whereas in producing X-ray kinematographic pictures the exposed surface is at least one hundred times greater. Hence the means used in producing ordinary kinematographic pictures, i. e., perforating the film length laterally or centrally and using the ordinary Maltese cross arrangement, would not be feasible for X-ray kinematographic pictures, as practical difficulty would be encountered in feeding the single film length forward at sufficient speed and causing its momentary stoppage at the proper time, and in addition to make a length of film of such magnitude would be exceedingly difficult and costly. Therefore it is advisable to employ a plurality of plate holders, each adapted to contain an individual plate or film of a size suited to the requirements of the occasion. Such individual plates or films cannot, however, be used for taking X-ray kinematographic pictures in the same way as they would be used in an ordinary magazine camera, wherein they are placed one behind the other, the foremost one of the series being exposed and quickly removed, and the succeeding plate treated in the same way. In the use of X-rays the treatment would not answer because the rays would penetrate the first plate, and affect one or more plates to the rear thereof. Josef Rosenthal, of Munich, Germany, in his Letters Patent No. 1,059,488 arranges a plurality of plates or films held in plate holders in a row and through the action of spring pressure acting thereon, each plate or film is subjected to the action of the X-rays for the requisite period of time. The row of plates is arranged in the exposure chamber, the foremost plate being exposed to the action of the rays and quickly removed to make way for the next succeeding plate to be exposed. The plates are provided with means for preventing the X-rays from affecting more than one (the foremost) plate in the exposure chamber, and the best method of accomplishing this is by placing a lead backing plate on each plate or plate holder. The accompanying views show apparatus wherein electro-magnetic means are employed for actuating mechanism designed to release the plate holders successively from the exposure chamber. Further synopsis is beyond our limit of space. The drawings are numerous, and the specification and claims are for the specific structure.

Cinematographic producers and manufacturers interested in the trade of the West Indies ought to take notice of the fact that among Cuba's population of approximately 2,500,000 people, there are many unscrupulous enough to pirate unregistered trade marks under the sanction of a law recognizing only priority of registration. For instance, the trade-mark of one of the oldest piano firms in the United States was registered by a Cuban dealer and thereby became his indisputable property to the exclusion of the morally rightful owner. In such cases, practically the only recourse is to purchase from the registrant the right to use your own trade mark, or abandon the field. Many manufacturers have suffered from the consequences of this iniquitous law, the amendment of which has been sought many times without success. Aside from the danger and injustice of legalized blackmail, there is the possibility of permanent injury that may be inflicted on the commercial value of the mark by the exploitation of inferior products thereunder. The same obnoxious conditions prevail in Paraguay.

Under present trust aggregation and business concentration, inventive enterprise properly protected by patent monopoly is in most commercial activities the chief, if not the only, way of attaining independence in business. This is one reason why the United States leads the world in invention, averaging 40,000 patents a year, equalling all the patents issued in Great Britain, France and Germany for a like period, our more liberal patent laws and practice being largely responsible for this result. Considering the tremendous growth of industries entirely dependent on patented inventions, their contribution to the prosperity of the United States is obvious; the inventor adds mainly to the wealth of the whole community while developing and protecting his own business and industry.

Gustav Cramer, of Chicago, Ill., has applied for registration of "ALPHA" as a trade-mark for sensitized photographic papers, etc., claiming use since "about the middle of February, 1911."

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of The Moving Picture News.

Orange, Tex.—Mrs. H. J. Lutcher, who is arranging to erect a moving picture theatre, received word from her New York architect that he will be here to start the work immediately.

Des Moines, Ia.—Elbert & Getchell will erect a moving picture theatre here, and will manage same when completed.

Hermosa Beach, Cal.—J. E. Walker has taken out a permit for the erection of a $3,000 theatre, to be erected at Hermosa Beach, Cal.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Two noted lights of the dramatic world have recently visited the city in counterfeit through the motion camera—Mme. Sarah Bernhardt and James K. Hackett. These have afforded many who have never seen these artists an opportunity of viewing them and their work through the eye of the camera. And each one made a week's engagement, like any other theatrical production, drawing big houses at each presentation. This is one of the signs of the times in filmland. Mme. Bernhardt was seen in her favorite role, that of Adrienne Lecouver, in the play of that name. The wonderful vitality and easy movements which she displayed in this drama showed that time has not diminished the artist's ability to counterfeit youth. This film came to Moore's Garden Theatre, which exhibited to capacity houses during its entire engagement.

James K. Hackett appeared to the photo fans in the role that has done much to make him famous—that of the daring hero in "The Prisoner of Zenda." His acting was at all times characterized by a naturalness and spirit that charmed the spectators. Mr. Hackett was in Washington in person during the season just closing, and his return so soon in motion pictures brought his many local admirers to the Casino to view "The Prisoner of Zenda."

About the finest piece of child acting that has been witnessed in that of the "Thanhauser Kidlet" in the role of the Doll in the film, "A Spoiled Darling's Doll." Her mechanical movements were wonderful, while her naturalness and complete lack of self-consciousness when she became the counterpart of the spoiled child in the dream was little less than marvelous for such a baby. "The Spoiled Darling's Doll" also gave excellent opportunity for the Thanhauser Kid, who is always fine, while the moral of the plot gave food for thought to both old and young.

Dr. Mary Walker, a local physician who has become conspicuous on account of wearing male attire, gave a short talk on "Votes for Women" at the Garden Theatre recently. Dr. Walker served the country most ably during the Civil War as physician and surgeon, and it was then she adopted man's attire for convenience. The Garden has had several return engagements of the several on the Suffragette parade in this city on account of requests, and it was on the occasion of one of these exhibitions that Dr. Walker talked. In producing pictures requiring explosions many camera men have escaped death by a fraction of an inch. None, however, ever came closer to the happy hunting grounds than Albert Heimerl, of the American Film Manufacturing Company, while the second company was making a scene last week. A temporary shelter of heavy planking was erected over Heimerl and his camera. One hundred pounds of black powder and thirty sticks of dynamite were too much for the short 150 feet which separated Heimerl. A 300-pound boulder struck the top of his shelter, smashed his camera and buried Heimerl under the debris. He was unconscious when extricated and will be laid up for several weeks.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO. NOTES

Robert Gray and "Billy" West joined the American forces at Santa Barbara last week. Mr. Gray comes from fresh honors with Kalem, Edison and Pathe. Miss West is a charming ingenue in whom much confidence is expressed. They will play opposite each other in the second company. Miss Vivian Rich, who has been playing leads in the second company, has been transferred and hereafter will play opposite Warren Kerrigan.

Director Hale, of the American forces at Santa Barbara, went to Venice, Cal., with a party made up of Kerrigan, Richardson, Louise Lester and the famous burro. An argument between Kerrigan and Richardson as to whether a burro would drink wine ended by Richardson feeding a bottle to the burro. What happened to the burro demanded a neighboring veterinary surgeon and a twenty-four hour lay-over at Venice before the company could leave. Director Hale has issued orders that hereafter spirituous drinks and arguments will not be allowed to interfere with picture making. The company finished six scenes in a "Calamity Anne" picture before returning.

Some time ago the American Film Manufacturing Company announced "Her Big Story," by Richard Washburn Child, as a two-reel subject. This was in error. The picture is an exceptionally splendid single reel for release May 31. This is about the date that The Popular Magazine will first publish the story.

The week of May 26th will see the release of two splendid stories by famous authors now writing for the American Film Manufacturing Company. The Monday release is "Ashes of Three," by Stewart Edward White, a two-reel subject. The Saturday release is a delightful newspaper story by Richard Washburn Child. Thus theatres and exchanges using "Flying A" stories are assured an unusually good week.

The success which greeted the appearance of the handsome lithographs of popular American players, has induced the American Film Manufacturing Company to issue a new batch. These will include a splendid lithograph of Louise Lester in her famous role of "Calamity Anne."

The American forces at Santa Barbara were particularly lucky in obtaining the use of the beautiful Arlington Hotel for the making of a negative entitled "A Husband's Mistake." Owing to the wonderful lighting facilities of this beautiful hotel, some magnificent interiors were obtained. In fact, practically all the action concentrates in these delightful interiors. Lovers of pretty pictures will be charmed with the remarkable results obtained. Jack Kerrigan was never better than in his part of the husband. It is the first picture in which Miss Vivian Rich plays opposite Kerrigan since her promotion to the first company.

LUBIN OPENS BALL SEASON WITH VICTORY

The Lubin base ball team opened its season on Saturday, May 10, by defeating the Electric Storage Battery by the score of 5—0.

Stillfield, of the Lubin team, pitched a splendid game, having 18 strike-outs, not even allowing his opponents to reach beyond second base.

The game was largely attended and Florence Hackett acted as rooting master for the winners.

BREEZY ITEMS FROM UNIVERSAL STUDIO

James Dayton and his scenario staff at Hollywood Studios are busy on a new grist of scenes that will keep the directors employed for some time. Besides Mr. Dayton the scenario staff includes Misses Cannon and Krueger, Mrs. Glessner and Messrs. Woodly Whitecomb and Willis.

Gwendolen Brooks, who recently made her debut in moving pictures as a member of Lincoln J. Carter's company, has for the past few years been playing ingenue parts with Douglas Fairbanks, and under the Savage, Harris and Brady managements. Miss Brooks is a daring rider, a skillful swimmer, and an all-round athletic girl.

Francis J. Grandon, who has just started his first picture, "The Partners," as director of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, served in a similar capacity with the Lubin forces for some time. Three former members of his staff, Clara Williams, Franklin Hall and Clarence have come over to the West Coast organization with him. They will be seen in a new series of Western and Southern pictures that will be taken at Universal City in the near future.

* * * *

Miss Johnny Johnson, who has spent the greater part of her stage career in musical comedy, is at present a member of Phillips Smalley's company. Miss Johnson has played some of the most important roles in "The Wizard of Oz," "Babes in Toyland," "King Dodo," and "The Prince of Pilsen." She recently appeared with Lois Weber and Mr. Smalley in their new picture, "The King Can Do No Wrong," and her acting won for her the praise of all who beheld her.

Major H. Stuart Raleigh, general manager of the Victor Company of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has an honorable war record as Surgeon-Major of the United States Army. As a reminder of the Philippine campaign, he carries in his body two bullets received in warfare with Aguinaldo's forces.

* * * *

Major Raleigh for twenty-five years was identified with the theatrical profession, as player, house manager and impresario, and is one of the pioneers in the motion picture game. His special preference is for the scientific end of the business, and he is credited by motion picture authorities with having constructed and conducted one of the best equipped motion picture studios that America has ever seen.

INDIANS ENTERTAINED AT N. Y. MOTION PICTURE COMPANY'S NEW YORK OFFICES

The New York Motion Picture Company entertained a very queer party of guests at their offices, Broadway and Forty-second street, Thursday afternoon, May 8th, in the shape of fifteen full-fledged Indians and their squaws from the Buffalo Bill Wild West and Pawnee Bill Far East Show, which has been playing at Madison Square Garden for the past two weeks. The party accompanied by Mr. Miles, Indian agent and interpreter for the show, and in charge of the general manager, numbered ten proud and haughty Indian chieftains, who were closely followed up by their squaws, and all were costumed in various colored blankets, feathered head-dress and war paint.

This strange gathering were shown about the offices, entertained with coffee and cake, and were then shown several photographs of the Indians who are working for Messrs. Kessel & Baumann in their Kay-Bee and Broncho companies at the Coast. They expressed much surprise and pleasure in looking over these pictures and recognized among the group several friends of various tribes.

A photograph of Miss Anna Little was shown them in Indian make-up, and the party was divided in opinion as to whether Miss Little was a genuine Indian girl or a white girl masquerading as such.

Before their departure, they were prevailed upon to perform an impromptu Indian war dance around the large library table in Messrs. Kessel & Baumann's office, and did so, much to the edification of all those present.

In leaving they expressed their pleasure and appreciation of the visit through their interpreter, Mr. Miles, and cordially shook hands with all the employees of the company, extending in a jargon of half-Indian, half-English, an invitation to visit them at the Show in return.

AMERICAN

ASHES OF THREE (May 26).—Born in shame, knowing no father and only an indifferent mother, Bud Halworth sat about the little cowtown of Center Gulch, stupid, sullen, despised of men, accepting the jibes and insults of both man and woman with like taciturnity, a thing of shame with every vestige of manhood long ago dead. Such was Bud Halworth, neither quite man nor quite beast.

But a short distance from the charity cabin in which his mother eked out a tiresome life, stood the home of good mother Brown, whose only son, Ed, was a straight, manly boy, the apple of his mother's eye, the pride of Center Gulch. He was the idol of men. Two types of humanity more opposite could not exist.

A time came when a man rushed frantically into the one street of the town, coatless, breathless, with the tale of the murder of a villager in the mountains by that much-feared "Terror," who now for three weeks had taken life and property on every side. Center Gulch in all its wild career knew no character whose name and deeds were blacker than the "Terror." The town assembled in the roadway. The village "boss," with star in hand, headed a delegation that went to Ed Brown and pinned the star upon him. Then, with revolver handy, he headed for the dreary hills which hid the human viper, more deadly than its many rattlesnakes. And Bud Halworth, despised of men, sat sullenly by the open saloon door, neither seeing, heeding nor caring.

Out into the hills went Ed, and they brought him back with a bullet hole through his heart. And the mother of Ed grieved as few people grieve and live. Her mind tottered—she threw herself upon the prostrate form and babbled into the silent ear of her beloved dead.

That afternoon Bud Halworth went home to see his mother die. It was his first contact with death and the horror of her white features unnerved him, stirred his sluggish brain and gave him a peculiar numbness in the region of his heart. He did not understand its significance. He went back to the saloon and brooded dully in the sunlight by the open door. Then, actuated by some strange impulse, he hurried to the cabin where lay the body of the idol of the town. Again, in the presence of death, he felt a strange stirring in his breast as though a long dormant emotion moved him. On his way back he passed an aged cripple whose particular delight was to taunt Bud. This time Bud stopped and gave more heed to the ancient masculine Mother Grundy.

Grief had shattered a mother's mind and the mother of Ed wandered alone to the great precipice on which the town was built. Bud, strolling dully through the hills, saw her, followed her and caught her in his arms just as she toppled dizzily over the brow of the mountain. She rested in his arms and her confused brain thought him Ed, her beloved son. And in the days that followed, the motherless son lived with the worshipping mother and she thought him, in her crazed gentle way, her Edward. She showered love upon him, and a mighty change came over the dull and stupid brain. One day he arose quickly from the doorstep and rushed into the room, hearing news of the "Terror." In a confused way, hardly knowing what he did, Bud tore the guns from the "boss's" belt and rushed away into the zone of death. From the high top of a tree Bud fell with terrific force on the "Terror," bound him and brought him in triumph into town, his won brain buzzing, his heart beating in response to a new feeling—pride. And then they pinned the star upon him and he rushed hurriedly home to show the badge to his mother. That star stirred vague memories in the shattered mind of the woman—she reeled and fell dead in bis arms. When he had buried her the villagers saw, silhouetted against the setting sun, the beautiful form of Bud Halworth, despised among men, standing at the brow of the dangerous precipice. The stoop in his shoulders was gone—fire had come into the big, handsome eyes—a new being had been born—from the Ashes of Three a Man was Made!

ON THE BORDER (May 29).—Chiquita danced merrily to the sound of her tambourine and the soft twanging of guitars. The dance finished, a rippling clapping of hands greeted the performance.

Bill Reeves, a handsome cowboy, fresh from the range, applauded with extraordinary fervor and then called the matron. An introduction followed and between intermissions the young couple chatted gaily.

But tragedy hovered over them. Pedro, the dark-skinned Mexican waiter, nursed a hatred of all "gringoes" and a deep love for the gentle Chiquita. As he passed to and fro beside the table, his eyes glittered with hatred and he swore an oath that the handsome ranger should not have his Chiquita.

In the days that followed Reeves was a daily visitor at the Mexican cafe. Love sprang up between them and blossomed rapidly. One night Pedro traced them home and witnessed the good-night kiss. The next day Pedro plotted. A bottle of poison, carefully tucked into his sash was poured into Reeve's drink. Then, panic-stricken, he sneaked down an alley, chattering with fear. The hand of fate held Reeves' in its grasp. Only the continued dancing of Chiquita prevented the draining of his glass. And then she came and sat beside him, and he, forgetful of everything, even forgot to drink.

The keen-eyed sheriff, strolling leisurely about, spied the slinking Pedro. On his knees fell the craven wretch until the sheriff jerked him to his feet and rushed him to the cafe. And then Reeves, with cup raised to drink Chiquita's health, was stunned into speechlessness by having the cup dashed from his hand.

GAUMONT

A PASSING CLOUD (June 5).—Dickie Dear and his Duckie Darling, newly married, are in blissful happiness. Dickie is an inveterate smoker. This offends the sensitive nerves of Duckie Darling and one day, when he happens to blow a particularly large cloud of smoke in her direction, she coughs and waxes cross. This leads to hard language, which couldn't be broken with an axe. They become distant, distant in manner, inasmuch as they forsake their common bedroom, each going to separate rooms.

Duckie Darling, in going to bed, had left loose some candies. These candies attract mice. They proceed to nibble Duckie Darling's corns and they have a little bunion Pilgrim's Progress of their own. Duckie's screams arouse Dickie Dear, who chases the marauders. They have a fine little chase which leads to the discovery that they cannot happily be separated.

THE HONOR OF LUCRECE (June 10).—Collatinus, a Roman noble, leaves his wife, Lucrece, to join his emperor, Tarquin, the Superb, at the siege of Ardea.

During a lull in the siege, Sextus, son of Tarquin, suggests to several companions that they should ride to Rome and surprise their wives. They find their wives in the midst of revelry, wining and dining and disporting themselves hilariously. They are evidently not thinking of the perils of their honorable husbands at the scene of war. Lucrece, of all the wives, is absent. They find her amongst her maids, busy at her spinning wheel.

Her calm and serene beauty deeply impresses Sextus. Her image so preys upon his mind that, after the men have returned to their camp, Sextus rides back to the home of Lucrece. He pretends to bring news of her husband. It is necessary that Lucrece show hospitality to her regal guest. He wines more than he dines and becomes riotous and insulting in his familiarities, whereupon Lucrece leaves him and goes to her honorable couch.

In the night Sextus arises from his bed. His mind, inflamed with wine, he steals to the door of Lucrece's room. Before daybreak Sextus flees from the house. Later in the morning Lucrece, having sent to her father's house for Brutus, one of her husband's kinsmen, tells him of the visit of Sextus. With life then no longer holding sweetness for her, her honor taken from her, she takes her dagger and plunges it into her ravished breast. Snatching the dagger from the wound, which still flowed red from the cold bosom of the dead and outraged wife, Brutus calls upon the crowd to follow him. They raise a revolt to restore the republic and do away with the monarchy.

KINEMACOLOR

HER SON (2 Reels).—A strong story told in a simple, direct manner that grips and holds. The mother, with her baby in her arms, discovers that her husband is a thief. For the sake of their child she begs him to reform. He is finally arrested and sent to jail, but his loot is undiscovered. The wife leaves her baby on the doorstep of a rich, childless couple, and the baby is adopted. They advertise for a nurse, and the mother secures the position.

Years pass; the child shows all the bad traits inherited from its father, but the motber shields him as much as possible. The father is released from prison and meets his son, not knowing it is his boy. Soon the son is partner in his father's crimes. The adopted father places a large sum of money in the safe in his library; the boy sees this and tells his real father. The boy opens the window, the thief enters and, while breaking open the safe, is caught by his wife.

Horrified, she tells her husband it is his own boy he is ruining. The rich people enter. To save her son the woman says she let her husband in. Out of regard for this woman so long in their service, the pair are allowed to go. The boy overhears the confession and later tells his adopted parents the truth. They hasten to the thief's house, but it is too late; the mother dies with her secret safe, the husband having sworn the boy shall never know who his real parents were.

Full of fine acting, heart interest and beautiful Kinemacolor photography.

MADRAS, MYSORE AND GOA.—Three historic and important cities of Southern India are visited in this attractive Kinemacolor subject.

The film opens with a view of the main street of Madras. The most notable buildings of the city are shown, including the Government House, the High Court and the Cathedral.

An interesting section depicts the statue of King Edward VII. Street scenes in Georgetown, the native quarter of the city, afford the Kinemacolor cameraman excellent opportunities.

Bangalore is the next city visited. Here are seen many interesting street and market scenes. Excellent views are given of the Mabarajah's palace, which is the most remarkable building in the city from a visitor's point of view. Bangalore is the chief town of the state of Mysore, which is itself the third largest state in all India.

The final section contains some attractive pictures of Goa, the old-time capital of the Portuguese territory, and in the province of Bombay. Here native methods of procuring salt are shown. Salt is, of course, an absolute necessity in India, owing to the climatic conditions, and is often very difficult to obtain, besides being very costly. The salt beds are shown in the film, and natives are gathering up the precious mineral into bags. A group of native girls forms an interesting conclusion to the subject.

LUBIN

LOVE AND WAR IN MEXICO (2 Reel) (May 28).—James Hudson, a young civil engineer, is engaged in surveying land in Southern California when he meets and falls in love with Pequita, the daughter of Don Jose Alvarado, a Mexican farmer. Pequita learns to love Hudson and they are eventually married. Two years pass and Hudson has become addicted to the use of liquor and has grown tired of Pequita. One day, while in a drunken rage, he strikes his wife and, as she falls unconscious and he is unable to revive her, he believes her dead. He runs from the house and, after a long journey, he falls exhausted at the door of a mission. The padre finds him and takes him inside, where he is nursed back to health and eventually becomes a monk. In the meantime Pequita has been found by her father and taken to his home, where her little son is born. Twenty years elapse and the son, grown to manhood, has joined the insurgent Mexican army and is selected to do duty as a spy. He enlists in the Federal forces and in the execution of his duties as a spy he is discovered and tried by court-martial. He is condemned to death, but when the commanding officer visits him in his cell the boy overpowers him and escapes by donning the officer's cloak and hat. A detachment of soldiers give chase and overtakes him at the door of the mission. The padre protects the boy and requests that he be allowed one hour for confession, after which the padre promises to deliver the prisoner to them. The officer consents and the boy is led inside. He requests that his mother be sent for and a monk goes to bring her. When she arrives she immediately recognizes the monk as her husband and tells him that the boy is his son. At the expiration of the hour the officer demands his prisoner and the men are waiting outside the mission gate to carry out the execution. As the boy and mother are kneeling in prayer, the father dons the cloak and cap in which the boy escapes and goes out. As he opens the gate and steps forth, he is met by a volley of bullets from the guns of the soldiers, who march away believing they have done their duty. The mother and son rush from the mission and fall weeping across the body of the father who, with his life, atoned for the suffering he had caused them.

LUX

BY THE AID OF WIRELESS (June 6).—Doctor Ratray is living out in the Far East with his two daughters, in charge of a military hospital. One day he makes the alarming discovery that one of the men in the district is stricken with cholera. He is brought into the hospital, which is then isolated. There is a wireless installation in the building, and the doctor soon learns that the disease is rapidly spreading. Naturally anxious as to the safety of his daughters, he willingly accepts the offer of two officers, who are about to proceed into the interior to experiment with wireless telegraphy, to take charge of the girls, who will thus be removed from chance of infection. The caravan starts on its journey and reaches its destination in safety, and the doctor is glad to receive a message that every one is in good health. But alas! the germ of the disease was lying dormant, and the younger of the officers is soon dangerously ill. Captain Dancy, the leader of the expedition, implores the girls to leave for home, in charge of his solitary white manservant, but they refuse, preferring to stop and nurse the sick man. Very soon Captain Dancy is also stricken, and the two girls have their hands fully occupied in nursing the sufferers. Mary, the elder of the two girls, has learned the Morse code and communicates the sad news that both the officers are at death's door. This terrible news is, however, destined to be followed by still graver. A man-eater, attracted by the signs of human beings in the neighborhood, makes an assault on the little party. The girls and the devoted manservant fire upon the beast repeatedly, but do not succeed in seriously injuring him. Whilst the man-servant is keeping the ferocious animal at bay, Mary wires the hospital that death is staring them in the face, for soon their last cartridge will be spent. A messenger is dispatched by the agonized father. But alas! he falls into the hands of the bandits, and it is only after passing through a terrible experience that he is able to free himself from their clutches. He arrives on the scene just as the lion is springing on his defenseless prey, and with an unerring aim he is able to stretch the savage beast in the dust. Turning his attention to the suffering men in the tent, he injects a lifegiving serum in their forearms, and we have little doubt that they will thus be snatched from the jaws of death. In this film there is a scene in which a man is wrestling with a full-grown lion, not an imitation, or a fluke, but the real article, and for realism of the most sensational order this picture has never been surpassed.

ECLAIR

THE FAITH HEALER (2 Reels) (May 28).—Robert and Louise marry and are very happy, but the finding of a Bible in their room at the hotel while on their honeymoon, develops the fact that Robert "does not believe." His wife expresses her regret at this but it does not lessen her love. Two years later the panic catches Robert and he is suddenly ruined. His brave little wife offers to seek employment, but Robert is manly enough to go ahead as a laborer.

Dissolute, careless Helmar is married to a sweet little woman, who can abide him no longer. Becoming desperate she writes to a friend asking him to take her away, saying otherwise she will kill herself. Helmar surprises his wife writing this letter. She attempts to conceal the note, but he forces her to show it.

Helmar offers his wife a revolver to carry out her threat but her nerve fails. Picking it up, Helmar leaves the house, intent on suicide. He goes to the river when the thought comes of a better way to drop out of his wife's life. He leaves his coat and hat on the bank and buries himself in the army.

Helmar's wife, believing him dead, welcomes the attentions of her friend. Helmar sees her in an automobile with him. Helmar exclaims, "I wish to God I were blind, so I might never again see the face of a woman." A few weeks later in battle, Helmar is blinded by the explosion of a shell. This terrible visitation of the wrath of God makes of Helmar a strong believer, and he devoted his life to the poor, opening a small mission, to heal the feeble and sickly by prayer.

Meanwhile Robert and Louise have been struggling through the years, unable to regain their lost position. Then came sickness to their little Clara. On her way to the drug store to have a prescription filled, Louise slipped quietly into the little meeting house and stood for a moment until the gathering began to disperse—then—when the Faith turned toward her—she recognized—Helmar, their former friend. Rushing forward, she made herself known to the blind man and then led him away to their little home, where her child was lying ill. Taking the beautiful little girl by the hand, Helmar prayed with a fervent power, and his message was heard. Clara regained her strength. One of Robert's former business competitors died and his will had bequeathed his entire fortune to Robert. Helmar now went to live with Robert and Louise and Clara. One joyous day the unfortunate man regained his sight. When wealth came again to Robert and Louise they began a search for Helmar's wife. They found her, repentant and unhappy.

The day Helmar regained his sight his wife was brought to the home and there was a happy reunion.

THE HONOR OF THE REGIMENT (2 Reels) (May 31).—Jack and Frank, both captains, love Jane, the daughter of an American general. Jane favors Jack. Frank is a dissolute character who has compromised Mollie, the sister of a sergeant in the regiment. She firmly believes that Frank will wed her. Her brother discovers Frank's perfidy and would kill him, but is prevented by Jack, who persuades all parties to keep silence for the honor of the regiment. The contretemps is responsible for Jack's missing an appointment with Jane. She is very angry at his tardiness, and going out passes near the spot where Jack is comforting the miserable Mollie. Frank takes advantage to point out the compromising scene to Jane, who is convinced that Jack is false and refuses to even say good-bye. Molly accompanies her brother to the Islands as a nurse. Jack believes Frank's assertion that he is engaged to Mollie. Nita, a native girl, is rescued from insults by Molly and Jack. The American soldiers are ambushed by Filipinos. Jack prevents Frank from running away and is hit on the head by the coward. Frank commands the troops to retreat in disorder. He escapes the general slaughter. He is court-martialed, but says that Jack gave the order and is exonerated, while Jack's name is dishonored. Jack is found by Molly, and later Nita saves them. Jack is taken to their cabin and tenderly nursed by Molly. His mind is a blank. Her pity turns to love.

Jane hears of Jack's disappearance and, heartbroken, goes to the Philippines to act as nurse. She is told that Jack is dead, and will have nothing to do with Frank, who tries to court her. The sergeant, Milly's brother, escapes and, knowing that he will inform American headquarters of their whereabouts, the Filipinos surround the Americans. Jack wanders off and, seeing a cave, enters it. It leads him through the hill to the basin beyond. The excitement clears his brain and memory returns. He reaches the troops and, leading them through the secret passage, they turn defeat into victory.

Jack, wounded, is found unconscious by Jane. Molly finds them and, overhearing Jane's impassioned words, knows the truth. The sergeant finds them all there and Frank, knowing his end is near, shoots at Jack, the bullet killing poor Molly instead.

SECRET SERVICE SAM (2 Reels) (May 26).—The chief of the secret service warned his detectives to watch for Mme. Trehillic and two noted spies, suspected of shadowing diplomatic attaches. Secret Service Sam was given charge, a congenial assignment, as it enabled him to see Mayre, the girl he loved.

Secret Service Sam had a non-commissioned aide in a boy who looked upon Sam as a composite of all the great detectives. The lad determined to do a little shadowing. One night he saw a scrubwoman enter the diplomatic building. The flash of diamonds on her white fingers convinced him she was a spy.

The head scrubwoman suspected the newcomer, but a large bribe silenced her. As the watchman locked the doors the spy got busy with the safe.

The boy climbed the fire-escape, to better watch the spy. Suddenly looking up from her work, the woman spy saw the boy through the windows. Covering him with a revolver she dragged him into the room. She bound and gagged him and thrust him into the wardrobe.

Something was wrong, however, with the combination, so she waited until morning to overpower the girl who opened the safe.

In the meantime Mayre arrived, and opened the safe. The vigilant spy silently stole away with the portfolio. When the chief arrived he accused Mayre of the theft. She protested her innocence.

Sam, the first to arrive, was shocked to learn that his promised wife was suspected. Mayre was taken away to await action of the grand jury.

Sam remained behind to gather clues. He summoned the scrubwoman and noticed the diamond ring of the female spy upon the rough finger of the head scrubwoman. He at once put her through the third degree, but could learn nothing.

The female spy telegraphed her success to her comrades, and tickets were engaged for a European steamer, but their auto broke down almost at the sailing hour.

Sam heard the bound boy writhing in the wardrobe. Unlocking the door he liberated the boy, who fainted before he could tell of Mayre's innocence. The spies reached the wharf, but the steamer was gone. They hurriedly hired a motorboat to overtake it, and hastened full speed down the bay.

When the boy regained consciousness he told of the disguised spy, and the scrubwoman was put under arrest. Then Sam, who had obtained a line on the spies, set off with the boy in a taxi. Hiring a tug the detectives set out in pursuit of the fast-disappearing motorboat and, overhauling it, shots were exchanged.

One of the spies jumped overboard with the papers. Secret Service Sam leaped after him. There was a rough struggle in which Sam was victorious, and he arrested the spies.

Returning to the city Sam reported to his chief, who gave orders for Mayre's release. Sam got a promotion and the boy promised a great future as a secret service man.

THE END OF THE TRAIL (2 Reels) (May 30).—Bruce, a cowboy, loves Dolores, the elder daughter of Ranchman Hicks. Hicks' foreman would like to claim Dolores, but she does not fancy him. He awaits his chance to get even with both of them. Dolores goes to town to study singing. Hicks is worried because the drought has decreased his bankroll and borrows money of Ridgeway, who takes the ranch as security. Hicks tells Ridgeway to call upon his daughter in the city, and this he does, finally taking advantage of her.

Time goes on and Dolores returns to find her father worried over money conditions. She hears that the man who loaned the money will come to claim the ranch. She surprises Ridgeway and her young sister together and, sending the girl away, she confronts Ridgeway. Their talk is overheard by Carlos, a half-breed, who owes a debt of gratitude to Dolores and the foreman. Bruce would kill Ridgeway, but Dolores begs him not to for her sake and her father's. Carlos goes secretly after Ridgeway after picking up Bruce's gun. Bruce whips the foreman, who sneers at Dolores, and the foreman arrives at the ranchhouse at the same time that Ridgeway does. Ridgeway sees the half-breed after him with a gun and hastily persuades the whipped and tattered foreman to put his coat on. The half-breed kills the foreman, thinking it is Ridgeway, and Bruce arrives in time to pick up the gun and he suspected of the crime. He is jailed.

The half-breed rescues Bruce, and a providential happening enables Hicks to pay Ridgeway off. The latter goes to some Mexicans and persuades them to help him try and get Paquita, the young girl. They succeed in this, but circumstances cause the sheriff, Bruce and Carlos to arrive in time to save her and to arrest the Mexicans. Ridgeway leaves the others to their fate, but is tracked by Carlos and meets his deserts.

A ROMANCE OF THE RAILS (May 29).—Charles Blake, the young engineer, passes on his daily run the home of Kitty Burke, and flirts with her. At last Charley stops his engine in front of Kitty's home and speaks to Kitty while she is arranging flowers in the yard.

Charley wears Kitty's picture in his watch fob. Lingering over it he hesitates too long and rushes to the roundhouse. The superintendent, finding him late, places another engineer on his engine. Charley is discharged for hack talk.

Meeting the engineer who took his engine he quarrels with him and throws him from the cab. Thinking the engineer dead he rushes into hiding. Evening comes, he starts for Kitty's home by a circuitous route and comes upon a burglar. The police had been watching and come upon the scene, thinking Charley one of the burglars. A fight ensues. Charley gets away, leaving his watch fob in a policeman's hand. The policeman falls and the thief gets away. Charley comes to Kitty's home and he explains all. A detective opens the locket and, recognizing Kitty's picture, starts on the trail. They find Charley at Kitty's house, but he breaks away. The thief, who has been wounded by the policeman, crawls along the fence by Kitty's home and she sees him. Later the thief exonerates Charley.

Some time passes. Kitty received a letter from Charley, who has secured work on a stock ranch in California. In her joy she rushes to telegraph him to come back; that he has been vindicated. One week later Charley's old engine, decorated with ribbons, forms a background for a wedding party of which Charley and Kitty are the principals.

THE TOURIST AND THE FLOWER GIRL (May 29).—Harry and Lee are college chums. Lee proposes to his cousin Lois, but she puts him off. Harry, who is spending some time in California as a tourist, one day takes a walk. Lois sees him and, taken with the handsome stranger, throws him a rose. He wonders where it came from. Later he buys some flowers. Lois is determined to know Harry, and pays a flower girl to let her assume her coat, hat and flowers.

Lois sees Harry and offers him her roses. He is vastly attracted to her. Lois induces the flower girl to let her take her place for several days, and Harry and Lois get quite chummy. Harry discovers the deception, and bribes the real flower girl to show him where Lois lives.

Bribing the butler, he dons his uniform, telling the maid that he has taken the regular butler's place as the latter is sick. Lois and the pseudo butler meet in the garden and, observing that Lee is jealous, Lois asks Lee to go shopping for her.

Harry's awkwardness at serving tea causes Lois mother to scold him. The demands of the real butler for money to get drink causes a delay, and Harry is scolded again. Lee comes back and recognizes Harry through his disguise. The two college youths then set upon the tipsy butler and trounce him, and explanations clear the way for Harry's formal introduction to mamma, who looks amiably upon Harry's suit.

BILLY'S HONEYMOON (May 27).—Billy Quirk and his sweetheart, Dolly, plan to elope, and get away with it. However, troubles follow fast and furious. Dolly refuses to leave her pet dog behind. This causes a number of complications that sorely tax the groom's devotion. They are put off street cars, out of hotels, and forced to climb trees and fences, while Billy's friends, who have got wind of the affair, track them in hot pursuit.

While the young couple are trying to elude their friends the bottom falls out of the box in which the dog is concealed and the pup runs away. Finally, after many ludicrous happenings, the baggage is collected, the dog returned, and amid a shower of rice and old shoes the Quirks start on a real quiet trip.

WHERE CHARITY BEGINS (May 27).—Helen, daughter of Mrs. Morris, a wealthy widow, devoted her time to teaching at St. James' Settlement House, helping the sick and needy in the tenement district. Helen's mother, at home alone, longs for companionship while her daughter is in the Settlement. Mrs. Morris becomes seriously ill and is attended by Dr. Gerald, Helen's ardent admirer. Helen neglects her mother and lover to devote herself to the care of Mrs. Dawson, whose daughter is entertaining her beau, another of Helen's proteges.

The trained nurse neglects Mrs. Morris while her patient cries in vain for a drink of water. Helen returns home to find her mother unconscious on the floor while the nurse is flirting with the butler. Fully awakened by the incident Helen resigns from the Settlement Club and vows to devote her time and companionship to her own mother and lover, thereby realizing the truth of the old adage, "Charity Begins at Home."

A DOUBLE SACRIFICE (May 28).—Jim and John Marsh, twin brothers, are totally unlike in nature and appearance. Jim is healthy, while John is sickly. Their father is a ranchman. May, the daughter of Ranchman Holt, has grown up with them. May is much attached to Jim and pays a good deal of attention to John from sympathy. He is hopelessly in love with her but refrains from showing it.

On their birthday Mr. Marsh gives the boys each one thousand dollars. John banks his, but Jim embraces the chance to see the outside world.

Two years pass and Jim has had a good time, but no money. He receives a letter from May telling him that his brother John is failing fast and asks for him. Jim returns, and his father berates him for squandering his money. Jim is astonished at the change in his boyhood sweetheart, May. It is not long before they are deeply in love with each other. Jim proposes and is accepted and asks Mr. Holt for his daughter. Mr. Holt tells him that when he can show him one thousand dollars that he has earned he can have May.

Upon his return home John notes his downcast demeanor. He persuades Jim to tell him what is the matter, and upon learning the truth he persuades Jim to take his thousand dollars. Mr. Holt is puzzled but is a man of his word, and Jim rides away to buy the ring.

Marsh has bought a bunch of cattle from Holt and has to deliver his thousand dollars the same day. During the night one of the cowboys steals the money. Marsh comes to the hasty conclusion that Jim has taken it. He goes to Holt to explain the delay and learns that Jim had one thousand dollars, and their suspicions become certainties. They ride off for the sheriff, for Marsh intends to punish Jim. May overhears them and runs to John for advice. He tells her of the money he gave Jim and hands her the check stub. She gives him a good kiss and hurries off and intercepts the sheriff. They return to thank the sick man but find that he has peacefully passed away.

THE NOISY SIX (May 23).—Dick Carter, aged six and an orphan, lives with his grandparents. The only resource of the family is the army pension of the old man. Just when the money is needed most it is lost by the old veteran. The little boy, impressed by the magnitude of the job, writes a letter to heaven for help; but, as he cannot reach the mail box, puts it into the slot of a hitching post. "The Noisy Six," the chief mischief-makers of their college class, on a night raid, drag away the hitching post and are much sobered when they intercept the letter of the orphan boy to heaven. They return the post to its original location with a letter of reply enclosed. Then they follow the boy home and surreptitiously slip in the amount of money that was lost. The boy and old Carter are led to believe that the money came straight from heaven. "The Noisy Six" stopped their mischief-making for an errand of mercy, and impressed youth in the faith of the higher power.

A BUSINESS WOMAN (May 20).—When a wealthy manufacturer died he left all his property unreservedly to his widow, and his choice was a good one. The woman had excellent business ability, ran her late husband's factory herself, and year by year made it a better paying proposition.

She had two children, a boy and a girl, and they had all the luxuries that they could desire. Both graduated from college, returned home, and calmly permitted their mother to struggle with life's burdens alone. More than that, they were not grateful, and were constantly lamenting because they were "wasting time" in the dreary little town when they might be leaders of business and fashion in New York. On numerous occasions they urged their mother to let them go out into the great world and finally she consented, making each a liberal allowance. The boy secured a position in Wall Street, and dreamed of the time when he would call J. P. Morgan by his first name. The girl had talent as an artist, engaged high-priced instructors, and made many friends of whom she was extremely proud.

Some months later the widow, who had been engrossed in business, awoke to realize that her children needed attention. The girl had a suitor, a foreign nobleman, who, as she said, "was willing to overlook" the lack of social position. The boy had become the favorite of his employer and was offered a partnership for the trifling sum of $50,000.

The business woman was a real business woman, and her suspicions were aroused. She hired detectives and made investigations. The count was a plebeian barber and a fortune hunter; the "business man" was a crook. The widow carefully collected evidence, unmasked the barber and drove him away, then communicated with the postal authorities and had the satisfaction of furnishing conclusive evidence of the crookedness of her son's "friend and employer," after which she told her children she was tired of their foolishness, compelled them to return to their home town and became her aids at the factory.

If these two young people had had a foolish mother they probably would have been penniless before many years. But as she was a business woman she showed them their errors and they grew up to be good members of society.

IN THEIR HOUR OF NEED (May 23).—Some of the influential members of a little country church were dissatisfied with their minister. They pointed out that he was old-fashioned and growing more and more feeble, forgetting the fact that he had spent all his life in their service. The leaders got the rest of the congregation into line and finally a committee broke the news to the old pastor that his services were to terminate, "a young, active minister" having been secured to replace him. The old man grieved hitterly, but was of too kind a nature to hold resentment against any man. He greeted his successor courteously, admonished him to take good care of his flock, and then wearily departed. A relative offered the minister and his daughter shelter, but forced them to work like laborers on his farm, while all the time he took credit to himself for his self-styled charity. The minister's daughter had been engaged to the young village doctor, but returned his ring, telling him that her father needed her undivided attention.

The new minister was a great success in the village. His sermons were bright and snappy, he took an active part in the social side of the church, and for a time the general opinion was that the change made was most successful. Then trouble came. The village was smitten with cholera, quarantined, and practically became a detention camp. The doctor stuck to his post loyally, the young minister, in cowardly fear, vanished during the night. And thus was the flock left without a shepherd. It was not for long, however, for the old minister in his place of exile heard the sad news and returned with haste to the village. He was not afraid of death while his people were in peril. He nursed the living and cared for the dying, then was stricken himself. For a time it seemed that he, too, would pass away, but he recovered, and one day there was an interesting ceremony in the little village church. The trustees who had driven the old minister away now escorted him into the building in triumph, led him to the pulpit, and told him that his place was with them, now and always. Thus were his latter days as peaceful and happy as they deserved to be.

RELIANCE

AFTER THE MASSACRE (May 17).—Dick Martin and Sue Brown are sweethearts. With many others they start for the Golden West in a wagon train.

Before leaving, Dick presents Sue with a locket with his picture in it. He puts it around her neck. Later, the wagon train is chased by a band of Indians and the whole party massacred except Dick, who is left for dead, and Sue, who is carried away by Red Arrow, the son of the tribal chief.

Dick rises from the ruins of the wagon train. He has been struck on the head and all memory of the past is gone. He wanders away on the prairie and finally falls unconscious. He is picked up by a couple of cowboys who take him to a roundup camp where he is treated kindly.

Meanwhile, Sue has been taken to the Indian village. Red Arrow, her captor, is beloved by the Indian maid, White Fawn, but he has no further use for her now that he has seen Sue. He demands of the chief that Sue become his squaw. The old chief consents. Sue is indignant. Red Arrow sees the locket Dick has given her hanging from Sue's neck. He appropriates it to himself and hangs it around his neck. He then tells White Fawn to keep Sue a prisoner until she consents to be his squaw. Both girls are indignant, but White Fawn dare not refuse.

A few days pass. The girls have become great friends. One day the Indians learn that a large party of palefaces are within a few miles. Red Arrow is sent in the guise of a friendly Indian to learn how strong they are. He goes to the roundup camp and begs for food, which is given him. Meanwhile, he is sizing up the camp and sees there are too many whites for the Indians to safely attack.

As he is leaving, the chain of the locket becomes broken and it falls to the ground. Dick, still mentally unsound, is standing near and sees it fall as Red Arrow strides away. He picks it up and recognizes it. Unknown to the cowboys he follows Red Arrow to the Indian village. As he is gazing down at it from a nearby bluff, he sees Sue among the tepees. His memory comes back with a rush. He realizes that he cannot rescue her alone.

While crouching there, White Fawn, who has been catching a stray pony, almost stumbles over him. He fears she will betray him, but she reassures him. She sees the locket in his hand and recognizes it as the one Red Arrow has taken from Sue.

She offers her horse and tells Dick to ride to the roundup camp and bring help to rescue his sweetheart. He hastily writes a note to Sue, gives it to White Fawn and rides away. White Fawn takes the note to Sue, who is overjoyed. Red Arrow becomes suspicious of the two girls' actions, and says that the next day he will take them far away where no one can find them. At dawn the next morning White Fawn and Sue steal from the tepees and ride away. They are seen by the Indians, who immediately give chase.

Meanwhile, Dick has reached the roundup camp and notified the cowboys. They start out to rescue Sue.

They soon sight the girls pursued by the Indians and there is soon a running fight. Red Arrow is slain and Dick goes after the girls, who have veered to one side.

The Indians are put to flight and the triumphant cowboys return to where they are met by Dick and the girls, and all safely return to the roundup camp.

LONDON ASSURANCE (May 19).—This picture is based on the popular play of the same name and its story is specially adapted to the screen.

Young Grace Harkaway, by her uncle's order, is commanded to marry Sir Harcourt Courtly, an elderly fop. She meets and falls in love with this gentleman's son, Charles, who has been posing as a student but is, in reality, a roysterer and one of the gayest young bloods in town.

Young Courtly and his friend, Dazzle, plan with Lady Gay Spanker, a belle and noted huntswoman, to draw out old Sir Harcourt, who has fallen in love with her, so that Grace may be freed to marry the man she loves. Sir Harcourt, believing that Lady Gay reciprocates the affection, plans to elope with her. Grace's uncle overhears their conversation and indignantly changes his plans regarding Grace, who is permitted to marry Charles. Sir Harcourt discovers that he has been made a fool of by Lady Gay, who returns to her husband with the combined thanks of the happy pair.

EARLY OKLAHOMA (May 21).—In the early days of Oklahoma, Joe Turner, his wife and two children settled on a little farm in the southern part of the state. The hardships were many as the ground was new and the Indians still aggressive and heartily detested the white man. Joe Turner's wife was a particularly attractive woman and one day, while Joe was away plowing, Crazy Bear came to the house and tried to make love to her. Joe suddenly arrived upon the scene and promptly kicked Crazy Bear off the place. The half-breed's enmity was aroused and, going to an Indian village a few miles distant, he incited the Indians towards the whites by giving them his own version of the affair and filling them with whiskey. The following morning, when Joe was in the fields, Emma sent the children out into the fields to play. A few hours later a rancher rode frantically up to Joe and told him the Indians were coming. Joe hurried to the house and ordered Emma to get the children and jump into the wagon to ride to safety. Emma searched for the little ones but they could not be found. The Indians came in sight of the house and Joe was forced to put Emma into the wagon and, giving the horses a cut with the whip, shouted to her to "ride for her life and find the rangers"—that "he would stay and try to protect the children." Emma rode desperately out upon the prairie. Crazy Bear and his Indians came along. They saw the galloping team, so Crazy Bear sent part of the Indians after the wagon while the rest went to Turner's home. Joe hid in a nearby woods, but the Indians caught sight of him. He took refuge in a big tree. For hours he held them at bay. Meanwhile the children heard the firing and ran to the house. When they came near it they saw the Indians and hid in the prairie grass. Crazy Bear also saw them and in his frenzy had the Indians set fire to the prairie. The children were panic-stricken and started to run. Crazy Bear started after them. In his path was a bear trap which Joe had set the night before. Stepping into it, Crazy Bear was consumed by the flames. To escape the fire and the Indians, the children hid in an old well, which was hidden by the tall grass.

Meanwhile, Emma was making a desperate ride to find the rangers. At last she came upon them. She told her story and they started on the back trail. When they arrived at the house they found the prairie a mass of flames. The rangers put the Indians to flight and rescued Joe. Together he and Emma watched the devastating fire, feeling sure that the children had either been killed by the Indians or burnt in the fire. After the fire they searched the smoking stubble for what they feared to find. They stumbled over the charred remains of Crazy Bear and, as they hopelessly reached the old well, the two little girls glanced cautiously out and were at once seized in the embrace of their anxious parents.

MAJESTIC

THE RIVALS OUTWITTED (May 18).—A very stout lady and a very thin one, living in the same boarding house, are both very much in love with Jim, the star boarder. He is secretly engaged to Ethel Phillips, who keeps a physical culture school. In order to create more business for Ethel, Jim hands the two ladies her card. The fat woman decides to take lessons at once, thinking Jim would love her if she were thin—and the slim woman also decides to take lessons that she may become plump and thus win Jim's love. In the school many amusing incidents happen—for the rivals always manage to get in each other's way. Ethel thoroughly enjoys it all, having been let into the joke by Jim. On exhibition day, the star performance is a fencing bout between the rivals, in which each tries to kill the other. Later, they hurry to dress so as to be the one escorted home by Jim, but when they get downstairs they see him walking off with Ethel. Realizing the hopelessness of their love they fall into each other's arms in despair.

OYSTERS.—On the same reel is an interesting and instructive subject dealing with the succulent bivalve.

SHEP, THE HERO (May 20).—Lass and her six little puppies are lying near the kennel upon the suburban estate of Mr. Jameson, the wealthy New York broker. Mrs. Jameson, his wife, is walking about the estate accompanied by her six-months'-old baby and its nurse. She stops and speaks kindly to Lass and her little family. Picking up one of the little dogs, she playfully puts it in the carriage with the baby and, petting the little animal, returns it to its mother. She continues upon her walk. This same little puppy strays away from its little brothers and sisters and, reaching the railroad tracks, it wanders into the next village, where it is met by a crowd of youngsters who are gathered about the station. They playfully abuse the little animal.

Old Mr. Gladwin, who has a one-horse cab and who depends upon the commuter for his livelihood, sees the boys ill-treating the dog and quickly rescues it. Finding that it belongs to no one, he takes it home, first consulting his horse, who shows he approves of the dog's intrusion into their home.

The dog, now known as Shep, soon becomes fast friends with Mr. Gladwin and his horse, John, and the three are inseparable companions.

Three years pass and a change has taken place in the hacking business, owing to the demand for automobiles. Gladwin finds it almost impossible to get a fare. He is soon reduced in circumstances and at times deprives himself of food. Before long he breaks down. One evening, while waiting for a train, he faints while sitting on the box of his hack. During his following illness Shep is constantly at his bedside. He runs to the drug store and brings medicine for the man. On one of these trips he comes upon a child who has fallen on the tracks and is stunned. Unable to move her body and seeing the train in the distance, he runs madly towards it, barking, causing the train to stop and the trainmen and passengers to alight to ascertain the reason of the barking. They follow him to the child. Mr. Jameson recognizes the little girl as his own and takes her home, after inquiring about the dog and its master. The trainmen, knowing Shep, gives him the information. He visits the old man and offers him medical aid and a position on the estate in reward for the dog's act. Gladwin accepts on condition that he may take both dog and horse with him. Jameson consents to this and the three move upon the estate, where Shep, unknown to the household, meets his mother and the old horse is given a place in one of the best stalls of the barn. Mr. Gladwin is soon well and happy in his new position with his two animal friends.

GREAT NORTHERN

THE THREE COMRADES (May 17).—Truttow, Borch and Prillau are young army lieutenants and are on a visit to the home of Colonel Truttow, a retired army officer and father of the first-named lieutenant. Ebba is the charming daughter of the household and at once arouses feelings of admiration in the breasts of Truttow and Prillau. The latter are unexpectedly summoned to headquarters and during their absence Borch wins the love of young Ebba. He proposes for her hand, but turns quite cold when informed by the old colonel that his daughter shall not inherit any money. It is evident that the young officer has allowed his love to become tainted with mercenary motives. On leaving the house Borch espies Ebba seated at the window of her boudoir and climbs the vine-covered ledge in quest of a good-night kiss. As he is descending, a few moments later, Lieutenants Truttow and Prillau pass him by without recognition. On the following morning the comrades turn their back upon him upon his entry and Ebba is left in the dark as to the reason for this strange behavior. Then follows a stormy meeting between the young men. The upshot of this is that a duel is arranged and the three horsemen set out for an open space in a nearby forest. The clatter of the horses' hoofs attracts Ebba and she divines the mission of the three riders. She acts promptly and, jumping from the window, follows them to the spot selected for the duel. The two young men are standing, pistol in hand, ready for the signal to fire when Ebba rushes in between them and flings herself into the arms of her lover. Explanations follow and the three comrades are once more united, while Ebba and Borch depart in fond embrace.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 21 (May 19).

A JOCKEY FOR LOVE (May 20).—Max meets the Countess Duvienne in a very distressing moment, for she has just learned that her jockey will be unable to ride her horse, the favorite for the Owner's Stakes. In that irresistible way of his, Max volunteers to ride in the jockey's stead. The Countess thanks him but cannot accept his offer because of his excessive weight. The gallant Max, nothing daunted, decides to reduce. After running a mile with a forty-pound dumb-bell he looks like a wet rag, hut goes gamely to a Turkish bath. The scene in the steamroom of the bath is cleverly arranged and a scream. This treatment brings Max down to weight and, mounted on the Countess' horse, Max fights every stride of the tight race, hut wins not only the race hut the Countess as well.

On the same reel:

THE CITY OF ROUEN (FRANCE).—One of the oldest cities in France with a quaint charm that is all its own. The beautiful hand coloring of the film makes it truly a feast for the eye.

THE PRICE OF SILENCE (May 21).—Amy Frazer hears the call of the footlights and deserts her hushand and baby daughter to answer. The daughter, Marion, is raised to young womanhood with the understanding that her mother is dead. After her father's death Marion marries a wealthy young broker. The notice of this marriage first brings the thought of her daughter hack to the mother and she attempts to see her, but Marion's hushand interferes and hrihes Mrs. Frazer to keep the knowledge of her profession from his wife. The frequent visits of the strange woman nearly wreck the happiness of the young lovers and finally precipitate a crisis in which Marion learns the truth. The call of the hlood is too much for the young wife to overcome and, forgiving her mother, she opens wide her arms and welcomes her to her new home.

THE RIGHT OF WAY (May 22).—A poverty-stricken lahorer scurries from home to get a physician for his child. On his way to Dr. Huber's office he sees a child falling from a window. Down, down the child drops, hut into McCann's strong arms. He bears the haby back to her mother who, wild with joy, seeks to reward him, hut McCann will not wait. The mother pleads for his name and McCann gives it, then hurries on to Dr. Huber's office. The doctor is expected hack any moment and McCann waits. A few minutes and there enters the office a man of wealth and power, one Nicholas Preston. He is informed hy the maid that the lahorer is first. The roll of hills pressed into her hand convinces the girl that Preston shall be first served. The doctor returns. Preston is being ushered into his office when McCann protests. A fight ensues, hut justice triumphs and Dr. Huber accompanies McCann to his home, where he guarantees to bring McCann's girl around. Preston secures another doctor for his sick child and the physician informs him that she owes her life to the man who caught her when she fell from the window. Overjoyed, Preston hurries to the home of the man and there McCann and Preston again meet. Preston begs forgiveness and McCann is touched by his plea. Dr. Huher is told to send the McCann hill to Preston's office for payment.

NIGHT BIRDS (May 23).—Few people have ever seen an owl. They know what they are like and have, perhaps, heard them screech, hut this film affords an opportunity to study them at close range and to understand why they are called wise. Forest owls, harn owls, white owls, young owls and wise old owls are shown, also there is a corking good fight hetween a forest owl and a rat. There are laughs in the pictures, too, and the exhihitor who is a wise old owl will include this offering in his programme.

On the same reel:

THE AILANTHUS SILK WORM.—A study of the hahits of the little worm that is responsible for the fahric that delights every woman's heart. It is interesting, it is instructive and it's new.

A WOMAN SCORNED (May 24).—When Phil Barton spurned his old sweetheart over a petty jealousy he little suspected that she would turn on him so suddenly. She sent him to jail for a crime he did not commit, tortured him after his escape, but she made one mistake when she attempted to notify the police. Barton's friend and prospective father-in-law, Dr. Swain, was present at the time and through him Phil's name was cleared and he married the girl he really loved. Crane Wilhur and Octavia Handworth play the leads and they are at their hest, which means that the characters are perfectly portrayed.

THE HENPECKED BURGLAR (May 28).—Henpecked, an undersized man, decides to take his big, strong wife to the theatre. So he buys two tickets from the pretty ticket seller and gets into an altercation with the burly manager. Brave everywhere except in his wife's presence, he easily vanquishes his opponent.

As Mr. and Mrs. Henpecked are leaving the restaurant in the hotel that evening, Henpecked is possessed of a sudden peremptory thirst. He makes an excuse to get away from his wife, telling her to wait a few minutes. The minutes lengthen into hours and at last the irate wife goes home to prepare a warm reception for her tardy spouse's arrival. Meanwhile Henpecked has had a hilarious time.

While he is away a burglar enters his home and ransacks the living room. Henpecked is sneaking in on all fours at four a. m. and is covered by a desperate housebreaker. Seeing that his victim is in a dress suit, the burglar surmises that it is "Raffles, the gentleman burglar," and forces Henpecked to rob his own house.

Finally Mrs. Henpecked hears the racket and is investigating when the hurglar pounces upon her. Henpecked is forced to gag and bind his own wife—he is torn hetween delight at her silence and the gnawing fear of her release.

The hurglar decided that they have enough booty and, calling on the man he thinks is "Raffles" to follow, he exits. While he is gone Henpecked releases his wife, who pounces upon him just as a policeman enters with the hurglar in his grip. The hurglar has told him that his pal was "Raffles." Mrs. Henpecked interferes and drags her hushand away from the hluecoat. Henpecked would rather take his chance on the clemency of the bench than with his maddened wife, so he declares that he is "Raffles" and demands that he be arrested. So the officer drags him off and saves him from Mrs. Henpecked's vengeance.

THE KING'S MESSENGER (May 30).—This is a story illustrating the truth and force of the Ten Commandments.

Miss Priscilla Handy, an elderly maiden lady, sits reading her hihle in her room. She closes the hook, removes her jewelry and prepares for bed. She places the bible upon the table at her hedside, blows out the candle and drops asleep. Bill Briggs, a hurglar, enters the room, finds the things upon the table and, wrapping them in a handkerchief, escapes with them. He takes them to a hench in the park near a stone wall and there proceeds to examine his loot. Finding the bihle, he opens it at a place marked the 20th chapter of Exodus, and the first thing his eyes alight upon is the commandment, "Thou shalt not steal." To him comes a vision of himself as a child at his mother's knee, and he drops the bible on the bench. Hastily gathering up the jewelry he returns it to the owner, closes down the window, and vanishes.

Tom Rainey, a workman, is heing evicted hy John Ferguson, his landlord, and swears vengeance. Arming himself, he repairs to the park to lie in wait, and with drawn revolver he hides near the hench. His eye falls on the bible and he picks it up to read the commandment, "Thou shalt not kill." Into his mind flashes a vision of a gallows with himself standing heneath it, and an angel of the Lord pointing to the mark of Cain on his forehead, while the wife and child kneel weeping. Throwing away the gun he flees from the spot, just as Ferguson comes by unharmed. Ferguson sees the hihle and examines it out of curiosity. His eyes alight upon the passage, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me," and he sees a vision of himself hoarding gold and feverishly counting it while the wan figures of women and children plead with him for hread. With a shudder he drops the book and, covering his face with his hands, staggers away.

Other telling incidents illustrates:

"Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife."
"Thou shalt not commit adultery."
"Honor thy father and thy mother that their days may be long in the land."
"Thou shalt not hear false witness against thy neighbor."

This morality play ends with:

Miss Handy going by, prim and precise, but worried. She finds the book, recognizes it, and, clasping it in her hands, with delight, moves off. She comes to the steps of a church and there accosts an acquaintance. As she stands there, with the hihle in her hands, there pass in, one at a time, into the church, Bill Briggs, Tom Rainey, John Ferguson, Mary Clemons and her child, Charles Michael Brown, who pauses on the steps, then removes his helmet and enters. Miss Handy wishes her friend farewell and, with a hright smile, follows them.

PILOT

SCHOOLDAYS (May 22).—Louise, a country girl, studious and very amhitious to go through college, finds the heat too oppressive to remain indoors, so seeks the shade of a large cherry tree. Being endowed with the usual vigor of a country girl, she climbs a tree and leisurely settles down to read. Professor Mooney finds chasing butterflies too irksome and goes to rest under the same tree. Occasionally a cherry drops on the professor's head. He pays but little attention to them. A shoe falls by his side unnoticed, then a stocking drops upon the book he is reading. He absentmindedly picks up the stocking, wipes his face with it, and then places it in his trousers pocket. Soon he falls asleep.

In the meantime, Louise tries to climb higher in the tree, hut her foot slips and her books fall, one of them dropping on the professor, followed by Louise, who lands plump on the professor's head.

Later Louise receives a communication from the professor saying his board is willing to offer her tuition at half price, provided she is willing to assist in the chores. Louise is grieved to think she is unable to accept this kind offer, but her mother cheers her up by giving her some money she has saved, which is enough to carry her through at the half price rate. At school Louise is the victim of all the practical jokes of the girls. She finally gathers sufficient courage to take revenge. In the dead of night, the night before commencement, she steals their corsets, ties them with one string and suspends them from the college chimney. This causes much dismay and distress among the girls, as well as lots of fun for the guests. No one suspects Louise is the culprit, hut she confesses to the principal, who declares his love for her, afterwards disclosing who the culprit is, and announcing his engagement to her.

VITAGRAPH

A LADY AND HER MAID (May 22).—The photographer sends Miss Ophelia a dozen photographs of her in different poses. Selecting the hest one, she presents it to her favorite hoarder, Billy, who does not think much of it and who gets very indignant when it is compared with the photo of his sweetheart. Miss Ophelia goes up to her room in tears and tells her faithful maid, Belinda, that her heart is broken. Belinda goes down and forcihly tells Billy what she thinks of him.

Miss Ophelia resolves on suicide, hecause no one seems to love her. Belinda gets back in time to prevent this and, to divert her mistress, she suggests that they go together to a beauty specialist. Arriving there, hoth receive attention. Miss Ophelia gets a new complexion while Belinda gets new teeth. Both invest in new gowns and dresses and the transformation is complete. At supper time the hoarders are all astonished. Miss Ophelia is really nice-looking and arouses the jealousy of all the ladies, so much attention does she receive from the gentlemen. Receiving no return to their advances to Miss Ophelia, they try to flirt with Belinda, who now appears like a trim French maid. She turns them all down very coldly, very much to their surprise. Billy's heart unaccountably changes and he seeks out Miss Ophelia to propose to her. His offer is indignantly refused and he is still more astonished when a few minutes later he and all the other boarders receive notice to quit the house. A sign "For Sale" is placed outside the door and Miss Ophelia and her maid Belinda drive off in an automobile hefore everyone, none of whom can account for the sudden transformation of their erstwhile boarding mistress's appearance and habits. Miss Ophelia decides to try the effect of her newly acquired fascinations in higher spheres and hopes now to he able to make a notable conquest and enter at last the much-longed-for haven of matrimony.

OPERATORS' CHART

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION OF GREATER NEW YORK, INC., LOCAL No. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Secretary-Treasurer—Robert Levy.
Recording Secretary—John Rickards.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—Ralph Knaster.
Assistant Business Representative—John Rickards.

Office—133 Third Avenue.

The Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York will hold their regular meeting Monday, May 19, 1913, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, New York. At this meeting the body will take up the election of delegates to Seattle, Washington, where the convention of the I. A. T. S. E. will take place. For the benefit of those operators wishing to join the union at the present initiation fee, there will be two open meetings. The first meeting will take place June 9 and the second on June 23, 1913.

The moving picture machine operators of Local No. 1 have been organized since last July and up to the present met with great success. The former mother local has failed to accomplish anything in regard to the present situation in this city, and it is very near one year since the president of the I. A. T. S. E. had predicted that Local No. 35 would be able to meet with the situation and that Local No. 35 would have the largest operators' union in the country. Then came the organizing of M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 after all methods of receiving what was really due them had failed. Local No. 35 formed a new branch called a department.

ROBERT LEVY

Secretary of M. P. M. O. U. of Greater New York, Local No. 1, and chief projectionist and mechanic for the Eclair Film Co., of New York City.

What has been done in this city to relieve the situation or to better the conditions since last year?

Local No. 1, which was formerly the auxiliary of Local No. 35, demand something in consideration of five years' taxation in the I. A. T. S. E. Local No. 1 have their own path cleared and their plans all laid out for future work, and should they not get justice this year then the well-trained men will march ahead on their route of battle and continue until justice is served. There is an old saying, and that is, There is more than one way to skin a rabbit, and many ways to bring down a lion.

Local No. 1, only in existence ten months, is able to send two men to a convention which will cost nearly $1,000.

Let us change the subject. How do you like to go on a moonlight excursion? Well, the boys of Local No. 1 are going to have one up the Hudson very shortly. Preparations are under way for a great time, and talk about your cabarets; well, there will be some show. The boys will enjoy the excursion with their families and eat a good midnight supper and a bully breakfast on board. Some class to the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Local No. 1.

Motiograph Machine at Naval Prison

Mr. Bernard M. Corbett, of the Enterprise Optical Mfg. Company, of Chicago, reports the sale and installation of a 1913 Model Motiograph equipped with the latest improved motor-drive, at the United States Naval Prison at Portsmouth, N. H., through the R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, of Boston. The naval prison at Portsmouth is a historic institution and had confined within its walls the Spanish sailors and Admiral Cervera, who were taken as prisoners at the battle of Santiago during the Spanish War in 1898. The entertainments will be given the prisoners once each week, and will be in charge of Lieutenant Clapp of the U. S. M. C.

Several other Motiograph sales are reported by Mr. Corbett, including the new Silvey Theatre at Edgerstown, Mass., which installed a combination Motiograph picture machine and double dissolving stereopticon outfit, and another similar equipment in the new Natick Theatre at Natick, Mass., through the Boston branch of the General Film Company.

The Natick Theatre has just been completed and is one of the handsomest pictureplay houses in the country, seating 850 persons, and is owned and controlled by Messrs. Harris & Beuhler. Mr. H. N. Yost is the manager.

Alton, Ill.—W. L. Hester has leased the Grand Opera House at Ida Grove and will open up a moving picture show.

Fairmont, Minn.—Nicholas & Hay will erect a moving picture theatre.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. A. Bader has been awarded the contract for a theatre to be built at 2924 Richmond street for William E. Butler. William H. Hoffman, architect.

Henry, Ill.—H. C. Hatcher is assisting Milo Phares in starting his new picture theatre in Henry.

Nashville, Tenn.—The Empress will be the name of the new picture show which will be opened at the corner of Woodland and Twelfth streets in East Nashville, early this week. C. W. Beasley and F. E. Draper, managers.

Williston, N. D.—A new theatre is being considered by Manager McGinnis.

Hopkinton, Ia.—H. A. Phillipp, proprietor of the Hotel Phillipp, has announced that he will build an opera house here.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Architect Louis Esser is drawing plans for the remodeling of the Davidson theatre annex to be made into a moving picture house, to cost $40,000.

St. Louis, Mo.—A dramatic theatre is planned by Davis O'Neil, George S. Johns, and others.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Thomas W. Lamb is preparing for the remodeling of the Broad street and Chestnut street theatres and the Grand Opera House.

Mound City, Mo.—R. S. Keeves is completing plans for converting his business house into an opera house.

Glens Falls, N. Y.—The Dreamland theatre in the Ormsby block will be opened to the public today.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Mahlon H. Dickinson is preparing plans for a vaudeville theatre.

Safety Secured by Construction of Apparatus

(From Consul-General Frank H. Mason, Paris)

Safety from fire at cinematograph or moving picture exhibitions in Paris is secured not by inclosing the apparatus in a fireproof booth or cell but by the construction of the apparatus itself. In the case of large cinematograph theatres, the apparatus is generally placed outside the auditorium; but the chief security is in the construction of the machine, which may be briefly described as follows:

The film is wound in a metallic cylinder called a "choker." When in use the film passes downward in front of the lens and is automatically coiled in another metallic, fireproof "choker." Only a small section of the film—about 6 inches in length—is exposed to the rays from the lens, and should this section take fire it could not possibly ignite the portions of the film inside the "chokers" or cause a conflagration; but to avoid even this danger there is placed between the lamp and the lens a crystal vase or tank filled with water, which effectually prevents overheating the film by rays from the light.

To further secure this result a flap or movable diaphragm of metal is placed close to and in front of the film, and this is opened only when the apparatus is put in motion and closes automatically when it stops, shutting off the light from contact with the film the moment the projection is finished or suspended. This device and the existing police regulations appear to be quite effective, and there is, so far as appears, no demand that the apparatus shall be further enclosed in a fireproof booth.

(A copy, in French, of the official police ordinance which is required to be kept posted in all theatres, concert halls, and other places of public amusement, and which includes all the regulations relating to the subject now in force in Paris and the Department of the Seine, also an illustration of the machine described in the foregoing report, will be loaned by the Bureau of Manufactures.)

Racine, Wis.—Dr. Evans, well-known Danville physician and owner of 5-cent houses throughout Illinois, will erect a moving picture theatre here.

Duluth, Minn.—A $50,000 moving picture theatre building will be erected by the Bowe-Burke Company, contractors, on Second avenue west and First alley. Cost, $70,000.

Boone, Ia.—H. A. Watkins, formerly proprietor of the Lyric Theatre, has purchased two moving picture theatres at Centerville, Ia., and he and his son, Ralph, will take charge of them at once.

IT'S FAMOUS AUTHOR'S WEEK

Stewart Edward White and Richard Washburn Child, both well known to you, have written two splendid yarns for the present week's output—

"ASHES OF THREE"

Release Monday, May 26, 1913. By Stewart Edward White

Warren Kerrigan as a derelict, a stupid creature with dulled brain, is a revelation, quite the opposite from the handsome Jack you are familiar with. A rejuvenation takes place, fostered by the giant mother love of a woman made insane by grief over her own lost boy. A powerful, well-told story. From the Ashes of Three a Man was Made!

"ON THE BORDER"

Release Thursday, May 29, 1913

The pretty dancer and the casual cowboy visitor at the cabaret fell in love. A Mexican waiter loved Chiquita with the passionate ardor of his race. A Gringo get this dainty bundle of Spanish nerves and beauty? Never! He planned to destroy the cowboy lover by a drop of poison in his cup. What happened make a thrilling and entirely satisfying Western.

"HER BIG STORY"

Release Saturday, May 31, 1913

By Richard Washburn Child

She loved the managing editor but she also loved the joy of the big, exclusive story. A corrupt political boss and the Mayor of the town got her job but couldn't keep the story from an opposition paper. How she landed it, in the Mayor's private library, laid him out with a statuette when he grabbed her, and finally found consolation in her lover-managing-editor, make a charming story.

NOTE:—Handsome Lithos of popular American leads. No better business-pullers for your lobby. Ask your exchange.

SHADOW EFFECTS

In the production of "Satan" the Ambrosio people have introduced a novel and altogether effective scene when it represented the flagellation of Christ by means of shadow effects, and it is to be hoped that the next time the crucifixion is filmed by any producer it will be after the same manner. To do it thus will relieve the scene of much of its gruesomeness, that must of necessity appear when the cruel execution is projected in full view upon the screen.

Executions by rope, guillotine or by the electric chair are proscribed by boards of censors, and why should not the Crucifixion? While the scene is religious, it is nevertheless painful to view, and a more convincing and impressive effect would be obtained if this suggestion should be adopted.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES

Mr. Will C. Smith, assistant general manager, has returned from a trip through Central New York and Pennsylvania, during which he attended the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Convention at Wheeling, W. Va.

While in Pittsburgh, Mr. Smith secured the approval of Power's 6A with motor drive by the Bureau of Electricity of Greater Pittsburgh.

The Walturdaw Company, Ltd., of London, England, has recently installed eighteen Power's 6's in London and suburbs.

Through the Picture Theatre Equipment Company, of New York, there has been installed one Power's 6A and Inductor in Karl Stromberg's Theatre, Hempstead, L. I.

Two Power's 6A with motor and mechanical speed control have been installed in the Colonnade Theatre, 542 Nostrand avenue, Brooklyn.

Two Power's 6A have been installed at the Harris Theatre, Pittsburgh, and one No. 6A at the Lyric Theatre, Pittsburgh, through J. G. Foley, Johnstown.

HALLBERG "ECONOMIZER" INSTALLATIONS

As a fair sample of his ability to furnish current saving and controlling devices for all circuits, Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," reports that in one mail during the past week he received orders from F. M. Taylor, Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y., for Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer, 60-amp. outfit; W. N. McConnell, Bijou Theatre, Quincy, Ill., 500-volt D. C. Economizer; Albert Kauffman, Rome, N. Y., Mercury Rectifier and Edison Model B. M. P. Machine; M. Schneiderman, Bath Beach, Brooklyn, N. Y. one No. 6A Power's with motor drive and Induction Current Saver. In preparation for the summer season of open-air shows, Mr. Hallberg also reports the customary large demand for Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizers. These well-known current savers are carried in stock for either 110 or 220-volts A. C. circuits, ready for immediate shipment.

KAY-BEE AND BRONCHO INDIANS

The making of the two and three-reel Indian military dramas, which have taken such a hold on picture play lovers throughout the country, has opened up a new field of endeavor for the American Indian, and many well-known chiefs of the leading tribes are now appearing in the various Western companies to great advantage. They are paid a regular salary, which keeps them amply provided with tobacco and their beloved "fire water."

It would be hard to find a more contented lot than those Indians who have been fortunate enough to secure engagements with various companies, and among these Sky Chief and his wife, or more properly speaking, his squaw, are examples. The old Indian, who is 104 years old, was one of the participants in the great Custer massacre, and many are the thrilling stories which he can relate of that historic encounter.

He has developed into a really creditable actor, and his portrayal of the various roles assigned to him would do justice to a more finished artist. He is chief of a band of 100 Sioux Indians, which appear in the Kay-Bee and Broncho pictures, produced by the New York Motion Picture Company, and has entire charge of all their movements before the camera. He takes his work most seriously, and the managing director, Mr. Thomas H. Ince, considers Sky Chief one of the most intelligent Indians he has ever met.

LOUISE VALE IN ITALIAN DISTRICT

In order to get the proper atmosphere for a comedy the Pilot is turning out, Miss Louise Vale, their leading lady, spent two days down in the Italian section of New York. Miss Vale played the part of an Italian sweetheart in Pilot's release of May 15th, "Tony the Tenor," and her characterization is superb.

* * * *

Miss Maude Fealy, guest of Miss Louise Vale, leading lady of the Pilot Company, spent all Monday at the Pilot studio. Miss Fealy has recently signed up with one of the film concerns at a large salary.

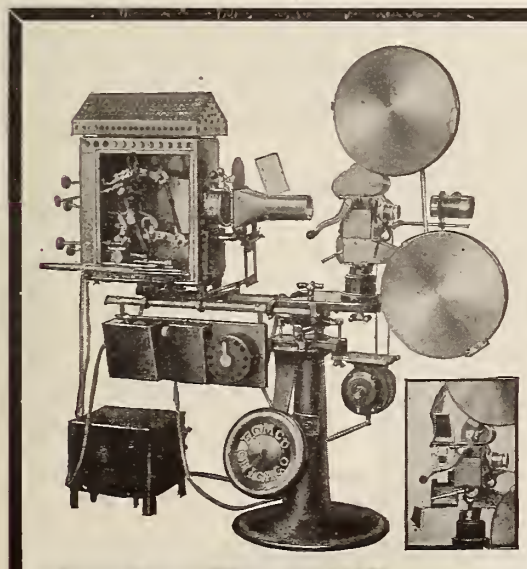
They were both guests of the Famous Players' Studio on Wednesday of last week.

Eagle Lake, Tex.—W. A. Moore bought the New Grand Theatre.

Earlington, Ky.—J. E. Wawcett bought the Princess Theatre.

Brainerd, Minn.—Paul Perkins sold his interest in the Grand Theatre to Clyde Parker and Eugene McCarthy.

Huntington, Ind.—Northern Indiana Motion Picture Company to operate theatres. Incorporated capital, $5,000. Incorporators: R. G. Mitchell, M. W. Strauss, I. E. Clark.



The Approved Machine for Motor Drive

THE MOTIOGRAPH MOTOR DRIVE MACHINE (known as No. 1002 Chicago) has been approved for use in Chicago—New York—Boston—Philadelphia and other large cities, and by The National Board of Fire Underwriters.

—NO OTHER MACHINE HAS AN EQUAL RECORD—

Have you examined our Motor Drive? Our constant speed, fully enclosed motor is far abead of the old variable speed type. Our speed control is continuous. No sudden jerks to damage film. Our switch is approved and the various parts of the motor equipment assembled into one compact unit.

NO MATTER HOW MUCH YOU SPEND—THERE IS NOTHING BETTER.

A PLEA FOR THE OPERATOR

FROM various parts of the country "press clippings" come to my desk showing that the operators are getting into a very restive condition. In some cities they are affiliated with the I. A. T. S. E. and are asking that they be amalgamated under their own charters with the A. F. L., so that they may be in a position to manage their own affairs, in their own way, and according to their experience and intelligence. I have said in previous editorials that this plea is only just and fair.

It is estimated that there are some 12,000 to 15,000 operators in the country. In New York City it is claimed there are about 800, in Chicago between 400 and 500, throughout other large cities of the Union in varied numbers, and if one great central organization was in existence there would be less confusion and more unanimity among the operators themselves to obtain their just demands. Every man in the industry will agree with me that they may justly ask and demand a greater recognition than seems to be given to them at present.

I do not think there is any industry throughout the wide world that is so onerous as that of the moving picture operators. Even a locomotive driver on the great railroads is not in a more responsible position than is the operator in the moving picture booth. Upon him depends the safety of thousands of lives, the same as the locomotive engineer. He holds in his hands the safety or the destruction of those in the theatre, as in the train.

The hours of labor of the operator are long. In some instances he commences at 10 o'clock in the morning, and goes on until 12 at night—"fourteen hours' hard labor"—and no one will dispute with me the term "hard labor." The fire laddies of our cities ask for two platoon or three platoon system. The policemen require the same, and I think the claim might justly go up that a two-platoon system is needed in some of the theatres, and seven or eight hours' work in a moving picture booth is amply long enough, considering what they have to undergo.

From the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Inc., there emanated a cry to the Board of Health of New York City. This should not be left to New York alone, but should go up throughout every city in the Union, because it is becoming a menace to the lives, health, and sight of the operator. Operators who have to work in asbestos booths are worse off than any other booth constructed. There seems to be a subtle something in the composition of asbestos that grates upon the lungs of the operators which is not found in any other material used in the construction of booths, and the foolishness of the construction of these booths is largely to be commented upon.

Booths, in my opinion, are absolutely unnecessary. I traveled the whole length and breadth of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, and carried my projecting machine in the middle of the audience that they might watch the work, and not a single foot of film did I either destroy or burn; traveling under all sorts of conditions, exhibiting in every description of hall or schoolroom, there was never the slightest semblance of a panic, nor did the people fear danger. This, of course, was before the panic caused by several Cinematograph fires. Under such conditions I got plenty of air, plenty of room, and comfort for my work, and I would like to see the day come when by the use of a safety machine, approved by all the fire underwriters in the country, the same conditions might be obtained as I had fifteen and twenty years ago.

Looking 'round among the operators, I find that some of them have to throw up their work owing to the strain upon the eyes, by which they have practically lost the full use of their eyesight, and to save what little remains they have to seek other employment.

Among my personal friends among the operators, eight of them have died from consumption, and two or three are now seeking my aid to go to sanitariums to recover from the dread disease called the "White Plague," which might be averted by a little foresight on the part of the Boards of Health of our cities, making it compulsory for a free draught of air to circulate throughout the booths. If, as I have contended in times past, a venthole or a ventilator shaft was constructed in the top of the machine, going out into the pure air, and an inlet connecting with the air at the bottom, two-thirds of the trouble that the operators suffer from will pass away. It is an appalling thing that 800 lives are at stake working in these booths, with the full liability, and the full knowledge among themselves, that they are doomed to die from the White Plague unless some remedy is quickly devised by which they can live as other beings live.

Take the factory laws, for instance, and the air space allowed for each one working in a factory. So much cubic space is compulsory on part of the factory proprietor that he must provide for each operative. Much less space is doled out to the operator of the moving picture machine in conditions that are ten, fifteen, or even twenty times worse than any condition existing in any factory or workshop of any other industry.

The dust from the carbon that the operator has to breathe for many hours of the day is bound to settle in his nostrils, his throat, and his lungs; the gases given out by the burning of the carbons are very injurious to the health of the operator. It is almost a slow poison. And then, again, the effete breathings of the audience just go through the ventilating holes at the bottom of the booth and are breathed over and over again by the operator, owing to the fact that there is no outlet for these fumes and noxious breath to escape.

Standing in an asbestos booth a few days ago, for just three parts of an hour, I felt as though I was becoming asphyxiated by the fumes from the asbestos, combined with those of the carbon and the dust. Therefore, I ask the manufacturer, exchangeman, exhibitor, and everyone else allied to the industry, that they help make a protest to enable the operator to ameliorate these conditions and make his booth, in which he spends the greater part of his life, at least healthy and well ventilated.

The cry of danger and of fire some people might raise at this late date must be put down, and put down with a firm foot, because the danger of fire in the hands of careful operators is nil. I just want to refer here to an extract from a letter I received from a high authority in the New York State Fire Department, in which he says, in the report of the Bureau of Combustibles for 1912, filed March 25, in the city of Newark occurs the following: "Moving picture places seem to be safer than our churches, inasmuch as we had four church fires in the year and only three fires in the moving picture theatres," thus proving the contention I have often advocated in these columns—that the moving pictures are by no means the fire scare some people try to make out, and if machines made by the Edison Co., Powers, the Simplex, and the Motiograph only are used, safety will be assured. No other machines come up to the standard of these four, and all others should be excluded until proper devices are adopted to make them perfectly safe. Then could the operator work from the open and all danger of contracting disease, as at present exists, will be done away with.

I therefore call upon the whole industry to assist in doing away with bad conditions and securing good ones in their place.

Alfred H. Saunders.

NEW LAW LEGALIZES SHEET METAL FOR PICTURE BOOTHS

Sheet Metal, a monthly trade journal for those who manufacture or sell sheet metal or sheet metal products, has this editorial in its May number, and shows what can be done by persistent effort in a righteous cause:

The passage of Assemblyman Wilmott's bill by the New York Legislature, and its approval by Governor Sulzer, is an instance of what united effort may accomplish in the way of attaining definite results. Our readers will recall the efforts which this journal initiated last year to secure an amendment to the then existing law affecting the construction of moving picture booths. The law referred to was so framed as to condemn and prohibit the use of sheet metal for this purpose. The result was to cause many moving picture theatres, equipped with thoroughly fireproof sheet metal booths, to replace these, at great expense, with booths of asbestos or brick construction. The loss of this class of business to the sheet metal contractors of the State represented many thousands of dollars.

Ably seconded by the editor of the Moving Picture News, Sheet Metal caused to be introduced into the Albany Legislature the Crane bill, providing for an amendment to the law which would permit the use of sheet metal on equal terms with asbestos and other fireproof materials. Letters were sent to the sheet metal trade of the State asking contractors to communicate with their representatives and urge favorable consideration of the bill. Many large manufacturers of sheets, as well as the Moving Picture News and moving picture theatre interests, joined in the campaign, with the result that the Assembly Committee having the bill in charge were made unmistakably aware of the injustice to the sheet metal interests in the existing law and were unanimously in favor of the amendment. The bill failed of enactment for the reason that it was introduced very late in the session, and in the rush which always precedes adjournment other matters were given the right of way.

The bill which has now become law, however, accomplishes the same result and is the direct outcome of the vigorous opposition to the unfair features of the former law manifested by the sheet metal and other affected interests of the State. Thus a very unreasonable discrimination against sheet metal is removed.

TROUBLE IN J. V. RITCHEY'S CAMP

The fatal mistake of engaging a blonde leading lady to play in the same company with a brunette led to a "scene" on the Reliance stage which was not written in the scenario. Fortunately, the trouble soon ended with a good cry all around and the terrible temperamental storm shifted to the West, where it wasted its substance on the desert air. Pretty Runa Hodges was the newcomer who aroused the professional jealousy of stately Rosanna Logan, both young ladies being exactly four years of age.

"Thank goodness, it happened in the youngsters' camp," said Manager Ritchey. "But it has taught me a lesson at that!"

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SECOND SEMI-ANNUAL CONVENTION OF M. P. E. L. OF IOWA

The second semi-annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Iowa was held at the Auditorium at Des Moines, Tuesday and Wednesday, May 13th and 14th.

The convention was a successful one in that over one hundred members attended. Deputy National Organizer W. G. Wylie, of Kansas City, who was one of the early arrivals, was met by Fred W. Young, secretary of the Iowa state branch.

The convention was called to order at 2 p. m. by President J. L. O'Brien, and everybody was welcome, as an open meeting was called. Many Exchange men were present from Omaha, Minneapolis and Des Moines, and all attended the open session. National Organizer W. G. Wylie made an excellent address and congratulated the Iowa exhibitors on the large attendance. He also spoke on the system of censorship, and considered it wrong. There is a national board, said Mr. Wylie, which is vested with little authority but is doing creditable work. He claimed mothers and children are the best censors for moving pictures. Mr. Wylie made several addresses at the different meetings, and gave some excellent advice to the exhibitors from knowledge he has gained from visits to different state conventions.

A telegram was read from National President M. A. Neff, stating: "Although I cannot be with you, Brother Wylie will fill my place. Tell the boys to them I send greetings in behalf of thirty-eight states. May harmony and wise council prevail and your League prosper. Best wishes to each and every member of the League."

On Wednesday afternoon a motion picture was taken by Julius Singer, of the Capital City Film Manufacturing Company, and was shown on the screen at 10 o'clock that night. At night a vaudeville entertainment was given and advance feature films were shown by the various film exchanges, over four hundred exhibitors and friends attending. Evening's entertainment wound up with a lunch and a general good time, and everybody seemed to be imbued with the spirit of the occasion. Secretary Fred Young, of Des Moines, again demonstrated his ability in conducting a convention and arranging for entertainments. Everything went off smoothly and everyone departed with words of praise for this being one of the best conventions they ever attended.

The following delegates were elected to represent Iowa at the New York convention: W. Ingledue, A. J. Diebold, E. G. Fargo, H. E. Baumgartner, A. W. McIntosh, J. S. Shortley, J. M. Heffner. Alternates: F. P. Lemen, H. A. Wolfgram, T. A. Bryan, W. G. Eddy, M. Lince and L. J. Tower.

The next convention will be held at Marshalltown, in December, definite dates as yet not being decided upon.

Thirty-five new members joined at the convention, bringing the total membership up to one hundred and fifty. This for an organization only six months old, is doing very nicely.

The officers for the ensuing year are: E. G. Fargo, of Algona, president; J. S. Bassett, of Independence, first vice-president; W. H. Dewey, Chariton, second vice-president; W. G. Eddy, Marengo, secretary; J. E. Tierney, Sioux City, treasurer; Thomas A. Brown, Iowa City, national vice-president.

The following members attended: Fred Young, Des Moines; J. L. O'Brien, Oelwein; Thomas A. Brown, Iowa City; W. H. Mart, Grinnell; M. Lince, Ottumwa; J. M. Heffner, Mason City; A. J. THE BATTLE OF SAN JUAN HILL
"101 Bison" 3 Reel War Drama Released June 3rd.

C. M. CHRISTENSON, SECRETARY M. P. E. LEAGUE OF AMERICA

In response to a request for an account of his career, Mr. C. M. Christenson has sent us the following interesting narrative:

My full name is Christian Marcus Christenson, born in Stockholm, Sweden, Dec. 5, 1876. I came to this country with my parents when three years old. My father settled at Canton, Ohio, but a few years later removed to Akron, where I attended the public schools. My first job was as bell-boy in the Buchtel Hotel of that town; later I attended business college and then took a position in the Janes Railroad Ticket Office. I worked in various railroad offices thereafter in Akron, Pittsburgh and Cleveland, going into business for myself, as a ticket broker, in this city. I was elected president of the Guarantee Ticket Brokers' Association in Kansas City in 1903, which office I held for two years.

C. M. CHRISTENSON

My first insight into the film business was in April, 1906, when I went into partnership with Eugene Cline, of Chicago, and opened a film exchange in Cleveland under the firm name of Eugene Cline & Co. This was the first film exchange in Ohio. In October of the same year, 1906, I opened a picture theatre at Broadway and Fifty-fifth street, known as the Broadway, this being the fifth picture theatre opened in this city. I have continued to be in the exhibiting business ever since.

In 1908 I discontinued my partnership with Mr. Cline, and consolidated my business with that of Mr. Edward Kohl, known as the National Film & Supply Co. We continued in business as the United Film Exchange Company until September, 1910, when we sold to the General Film Co.

In 1911, at the first national convention of The Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, held in this city in August of that year, I was chosen national secretary, which position I still hold. At the present time I own the Broadway Theatre, No. 4628 Broadway, and am president of the Bronx Amusement Company, owning and operating the Bronx Theatre on East Ninth street; secretary and treasurer of the Dreamland Amusement Company, owning and operating Dreamland Theatre on Euclid avenue, Cleveland, Ohio, besides being on the board of directors of other interests outside of the motion picture industry.

THE STUDY OF POSTERS

By De Facto

The study of the poster end of the moving picture game on the part of exhibitors is one that few engage in, and yet it is one that should form part of the curriculum of every man who is in the business to get the most out of it, for it goes without saying that an attractive poster in front of the theatre brings in a hundredfold more dimes and nickels than any additional cost that may be expended in order to get said display. Very few exhibitors go any further than to rely upon the one-sheets furnished by the exchanges, being too lazy or indifferent to get a move on them to brighten up their fronts even though it be an hundred to one shot that such action would amply repay them.

Mr. M. H. Bidez of the Palace Theatre of Jacksonville, could tell listless exhibitors that it pays to be up on posters and that that end of the business should be watched and studied the same as any other department. This exhibitor has the name of every lithographer in the country. He keeps tab on the regular subjects as well as the features, so that when he gets his advanced billing he immediately gets busy ordering extra one, two, three, six, eight or sixteen sheets for such subjects as may appeal to him as worthy of extra pushing. Mr. Bidez also has a supply of stock posters without titles, so that in the event of the regular posters not showing up on time, he is there with the "front" just the same, as from his large variety he is able to "dope up" for any kind of subject that may come along—comedy, Western, tragic, educational, scenic or otherwise. De Facto considers it a real pleasure to meet a man in the fraternity who gives as much time, thought and money as Mr. Bidez does to this largely, on the part of the exhibitors, neglected end of the moving picture business.

MOTOR DRIVE FOR PICTURE MACHINES

By G. D. Crain, Jr.

The eagerness with which the owners of moving picture theatres seize upon anything calculated to improve the quality of their pictures, and the satisfaction of their patrons is such that it is certain that only "conditions over which they have no control" have been largely responsible for their failure to adopt generally the use of electricity as a motive power for their machines, instead of the frequently weary and uncertain arm of a youthful and possibly more or less unreliable operator.

The general advantages of electricity as a motive power are such as within the past few years to have resulted in its adoption in numerous industries which were once wedded apparently indissolubly to steam power; and among these are its controlability, its comparative cheapness, and the fact that only as much power need be used as is required. All three of these points make it especially available for the use of the moving picture theatre, as well as the equally important point that it is probably the only known power whose operation is absolutely uniform. Inasmuch as the power of the human factor can hardly be said to fulfill perfectly all of these ideals, the superiority of current for the purpose of running the machines should be apparent.

The improvement in the picture brought about by the use of the motor drive is the result of two distinct facts. The first is that the absolutely uniform speed at which the motor runs results in a correspondingly steady and uniform movement of the film, and a consequently better picture than that produced by the necessarily less uniform work of an operator turning the crank of the machine by hand. No matter how competent the operator may be, it can hardly be said that he is as accurate as a machine; and here, as elsewhere, the machine will be found to be superior in this respect to the variable factor of flesh and blood.

The second reason for improved pictures on the screen is that the operator, left free to attend more closely to the operation of the mechanism and to his lights, by the fact that he is no longer tied to the crank, as far as one arm is concerned, can give more attention to these other important details, and attend immediately to any little difficulty that may arise, without in any way interfering with the exhibition. It goes without saying that his work in this direction will be more efficient when he has both hands free for the purpose, and can move about as he likes, than when he can use only his left hand, and can move only a few inches without materially interfering with the work of running the film through the machine.

This being the case, the use of the motor would seem to be a foregone conclusion, when its advantages were realized by exhibitors generally, especially in view of the insignificant cost of the current used, which will be pointed out later, were it not for the apparently insuperable objections which have been made to the electric drive in many places by fire insurance men.

The argument made by these interests, which undoubtedly has its merits, is that the fire risk is immeasurably increased by any device which permits the machine to run without the necessity of the operator's constant presence. The motor, once started, will continue to run, naturally, until the current is turned off. This being the case, it is suggested that the operator will busy himself in preparing for the next subject, or in other matters about the room, giving only casual attention to his machine during the running of the film, until it nears the end.

The danger in this, it is argued, arises from the fact that the film may break, or get caught in such a way as to pile up in the upper reel, and ultimately be run out directly into the flame, thus very likely causing a blaze which might prove disastrous; and the fact that a good many moving picture theatres are not arranged with a view to any such contingency has moved municipal authorities, as well as fire underwriters in many cities to place motors under an absolute ban.

It may be submitted, however, that the contingency referred to is rather remote, under almost any circumstances, and that when such safeguards are adopted as are possible, in view of the improvements which have been and are being made in the various accessories of the art, it is all but eliminated, and placed beyond the bounds of possibility. The non-inflammable film alone solves the problem, by making it impossible for anything to catch fire even in the event of the series of unusual circumstances supposed by the opponents of the motor; and the perfection of a machine which would automatically prevent the escape of the film in case of clogging or breakage would accomplish the same thing.

The experience of the Novelty Theatre, one of the most popular picture play houses in Louisville, Ky., constitutes a very striking illustration of the fact that the objections set forth above are really rather far-fetched, especially where good management prevails, as in this house. In the Novelty two machines are used, taking turns in doing the work of projection. Each, of course, has its operator, who is at his machine all the time during the running of a film. This was necessarily the case before the installation of motors, of course, and is still true, under a strict rule of the management, notwithstanding the fact that the mechanical operation of the machine is now taken care of by electric motors.

While, as indicated, the actual attendance of the operator is rendered unnecessary during the entire running of a film, where the power is furnished by electricity, in this theatre the operator remains in exactly the same position as if he were still "cranking" the machine. This is desirable, in the first place, in order that he may be in constant sight of the screen, and thus in this way catch any operating trouble not otherwise observable, such as the picture slipping up or down, or the light dimming.

In the second place, it is the custom of the operators, and the injunction of the management to them, to throw off the motor now and then and continue the operation of the machine by hand for a short time, for the reason that, as all operators know, the feel of the machine will reveal troubles in the interior that could not be detected in any other manner. In the same way, the operators frequently take hold of the crank while the motor is on, and carry it around a few revolutions with the motor, for the same purpose—to feel the machine, and ascertain whether everything is running all right.

This method of handling the machines, obviously, disposes of the objections of the fire underwriters that trouble may occur causing the breaking of the film and its unwinding into the flame, etc., for the reason that the operator is right on the job all the time, looking at the screen, at the machine, and at his lights; and the instant anything of this sort happened, he would be ready to take the proper measures to set it right—the first thing to do, of course, being to throw the switch shutting off the current and stopping the motor, which can be done just as quickly as the operator could cease turning the crank by hand, the switch being properly located on the under side of the board supporting the machine, and therefore within easy reach.

Of course, the possibility of an inflammable film igniting and thus starting a fire is always to be considered, where such a film is used; but the danger is hardly more where the motor is used than where hand operation is the rule. In either case, the construction of the operating-room of non-combustible materials, and in such a manner as to make it fireproof, reduces the hazard to a minimum. In the theatre referred to the room is walled and roofed with sheet steel, the floor being of concrete, covered with cork matting. The only apertures are those rendered necessary for the projection of the pictures, and a small door, which is also fireproof, so that a fire starting in the room would be almost certain to burn itself out there.

The additional cost of the current required to furnish power for the running of the small motor is almost infinitesimal; and even if it were substantial, the vast improvement in the pictures which it brings about would usually be considered worth the expenditure. The motor itself is extremely small, rating at about 1/10 to 1/15 horsepower, or what is known as a 100-watt motor. In the Novelty, new motors were not purchased, as the manager, who is something of a mechanical genius, handled the matter very efficiently by taking the fan blades off two 16-inch electric fans and using the motors of these, which proved to be just about the right size and power.

The application of the power was made by fixing the motor rigidly in place on its standard, so that it would not move with the pull of the belt, and screwing the standard to the floor on the left-hand side of the machine. A six-inch wooden pulley-wheel was attached to the crankshaft, which was prolonged about three inches in order to enable the placing of the wheel, and to bring it clear of the baseboard. The wheel was grooved in order to hold the belt, which was a rounded leather strap such as is used as a belt on a sewing-machine. Current was supplied from an ordinary lamp socket, just as electric fans are ordinarily supplied; and with a three-way switch, placed as indicated above, the simple installation was complete.

The current consumed by a motor of the size indicated is about 40 watts an hour, and the usual run and the rate charged in the locality for electricity will, of course, determine the cost. An 8- or 9-cent rate, however, which is rather high for commercial purposes, would bring the cost of current for this particular use up to only four or five cents a day, which is hardly worth considering. In fact, the difference in the size of the monthly bill for current, where current is used, as it is whenever available, of course, for the work of projection, would hardly be noticeable.

The motor itself would probably cost about $18, and this initial cost is really the only item of additional expense of any importance; and it may be safely assumed that even this would hardly stand in the way of the use of the motor if conditions were such as to render it otherwise practicable. Of course there is no actual money saving involved, as the turning of the crank is a part of the operator's work, of which the motor relieves him, without giving any increased revenue, as far as the operator is concerned.

But neither does the expense of a handsome front and tasteful interior decoration return a direct profit. It simply tends to make the theatre more attractive, and therefore to draw larger audiences; and in like fashion, the improvement in the pictures produced by the substitution of the motor drive for hand-power will enable the exhibitor to serve his patrons better than before, and to draw a steadily increasing attendance.

NATURAL COLORED PHOTOGRAPHY

Mr. F. W. Hochstetter Tells How He Came to Find This Alchemy Photography

In answer to the query, "How did you come to discover natural colored photography?" Mr. F. W. Hochstetter, of Munich, Germany, replied, "At the age of seven years, my father who was interested in the largest producing photographing firm in Berlin, took me on a journey through the Carpathian Mountains; my father being the photographic expert of the company, having learned the photograph business from his father, in fact, I come from five generations of photographers, and may practically be said to have been born in the "hypo." While with my father in the mountains he showed me for the first time the ground glass of a camera, showing the colors of the landscape in all their glorious radiance of magnificent colorings. With childlike simplicity, which I still maintain, I asked my father why his plate did not show the colors exactly as they appear on the ground glass. He explained to me that the plate did contain the colors, and after developing showed me various forms and gradations of a grayish blue appearance, telling me that these differentiations contained the blues, greens, oranges, purples, in fact all the colors contained in the spectrum, and told me that my great-grandfathers before him had been trying to find some way of recording the colors on the photographic plate exactly as they appeared on the ground glass. From that time on, and up to one year ago, I have spent the greater portion of each day, and nearly all the night in an effort to find this that has been the dream of photographers since the days of Daguerre. The effect of this on my youthful mind was the immediate formation of the idea that I would never stop until I had succeeded in realizing what I saw on the ground glass. Starting at the age of ten I commenced to experiment, never ceasing only for time enough for sleep until about one year ago I succeeded in putting the colors and all the colors on the film of a moving picture camera, and succeeded in printing the same on positive film. I have since accomplished the taking of plates by instantaneous photography, and printing on paper almost as quickly. In making these experiments the first milestone was in the comparison of stereoscopic photography with flat plates in using a stereoscopic machine where height and distances were registered. I made an extensive search through the science of optics to ascertain why and what caused the different angles that it required two optic lens to see what I carried in a single glance. Having solved this the next question unveiled was why do the figures, even in stereoscopic photography, look perfectly flat. After experimentation covering a period of three years I succeeded in making an emulsion that produced in a single exposure stereoscopic effect with a single lens, and a plastic figure. In 1901 it occurred to me that photographers had been mismanaging and misappropriating the light, and that the properties contained in the light were being wasted at the rate of nine-tenths per ray. After working on this theory for some time I found myself on the right path, and I also found that every color of the spectrum was contained in the light rays, and then if I could succeed in properly registering them I would have accomplished my heart's desire. In the year 1900 I discovered what has since been called Kinemacolor, but discarded it as being an optical delusion, and not by any means colored photography. In 1906 I first succeeded in producing a colored plate with all the colors of the spectrum practically registered and recorded, but owing to different climatic changes of temperature I could not be sure as to the length of time a plate would retain the colors, and whether it would be possible to make reproductions from them. In 1908 I made my first success in recording all the colors and reproducing them at will. Summed up, my discoveries seem to consist in the fact that the photographic profession is at the present day obtaining slightly more than one-tenth the values of the silver, and is practically handling the light rays absolutely wrong.

Illustrating his findings, Mr. F. W. Hochstetter has made five thousand feet of moving picture film depicting the life of John Bunyan and his immortal allegory, "Pilgrim's Progress." In this picture Mr. Hochstetter shows stereoscopic effect with a single lens, plastic figures, luminous lights, meaning the throwing of light into shadow where absolute darkness existed natural colors, the natural colors being absolutely visible to the naked eye, accomplishing for the first time the dream of photographers and opening a vista to the amateur of the future that will mean more kodaks than ever.

THE Sunday comic supplement has a deleterious influence" on the childish mind, was the unanimous conclusion reached by the International Kindergarten Union, in convention assembled at Washington. And then with the keen judgment, and uplifting tone for which it is justly famous, the Universal proceeded to push comic supplement stuff and to contract for other cartoon comics.

A correspondent sends us a long list of substitute names for "moving pictures." Among them are Motography, Animated Pictures, etc., etc. Anything were better than the term: "Movies." That expression is a delusion and a snare.

The other evening we became greatly absorbed in the adventures of a box of "Rolled Alfalfa" in a moving picture play. That box of prepared food bobbed up in the Western playlet on any and all occasions. It really seemed as if the director had engaged that box at high salary to take a leading part. Invariably, the name on the box was turned to the audience. Several expressed the belief that it was an advertising scheme, pure and simple. We hope not. Such detail will do that particular brand of pictures no good. Patrons of picture theatres are not inclined to see advertising slides between the pictures, nor advertisements in the pictures.

"Choice Stories" is the name of a new book published by the Motion Picture Story Magazine. It contains the best stories that have appeared in that Magazine for the past two years. The volume is assured a ready sale.

Now we are partial to fairy stories. Cinematography is peculiarly adaptable for the production of the tales of Grimm, Hoff and the rest. There are so many surprising effects possible on the screen that it brings the fairy story right home. There is a wealth of fairy lore ready to the hands of the producers. Almost anyone of the tales, if rightly filmed, would be a winner. The little folks like them and the big folks go "to take the children." The success of "Cinderella," "Snow White," "Beauty and the Beast" and other fairy stories filmed, is a criterion as to the popularity with which the others would be received. We should like to see "Jack and the Bean Stalk" filmed by Selig, Vitagraph or Biograph. Then there is one of the greatest of all fairy stories: "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

A few short years ago the exhibitor of moving pictures was classed with a side showman, or the proprietor of a street fair. Now all is changed. The exhibitor is an exhibitor no longer. He is a manager. His theatre frequently compares with the best and his entertainments are of the best.

That old question whether the poor prefer to read and see stories about themselves rather than about the rich, has been revived both in England and America and is being discussed by serial writers and producers of motion pictures. Some believe that most people, whether poor or rich, prefer plots dealing with a class different than their own, and some maintain that the majority of readers are most interested in their own class. Nobody is certain. But something depends upon the author and the director. Dickens, as a writer, had no difficulty in interesting everybody in the poor. Thackeray made the well-to-do and the rich interesting. So does Howells. So does Mrs. Wharton. And innumerable others—not forgetting the prolific Robert W. Chambers! On the other hand, Jack London, Kauffman, Oppenheim, Whitlock, Eugene Wood, and others, have sketched wonderful pictures of lowly and obscure lives. Director Griffith, of the Biograph Company, has also visualized life among the lowly in a manner that entitles him to be classed with the geniuses. The "great American picture play" which may have been written, but is still awaiting production, will deal neither with the rich nor with the poor exclusively, nor with the middle class, but with all sorts and conditions of men. It will be a story of Democracy—neither aristocratic nor proletarian.

Visiting the picture theatre as an ordinary patron, Mr. Robert Bartholomew, formerly Cleveland Censor, "aimed to glean from conversations overheard, ideas which would indicate the purpose patrons had in attending picture shows, together with evidence of the effect certain pictures had upon them." Bartholomew made some interesting discoveries. He says the very nature of the entertainments in all Cleveland theatres, excepting those presenting vaudeville, tends to relax the muscles of the hard working person and prepare him for complete rest so that he is glad to go home early. Late hour excesses, found in connection with many amusements, are entirely lacking in the moving picture business, says Bartholomew. He finds that low admission fees are such as to bring the theatres within reach of all. "Motion picture centers form neighborhood social centers," he says. "They do in a real sense provide a means of reasonably prized, wholesome recreation for the man of average means without the necessity of his going from the neighborhood for relaxation." Bartholomew also says the picture plays attract many from saloons. "There are 101 picture theatres adjoining or within one-half block of one or more saloons," says the Censor. "During the investigation, only one instance of an intoxicated person being seen in a motion picture theatre was recorded."

Rev. Dr. Harry W. Jones, has resigned his pastorate of the First Reformed Church, in Valley Stream, L. I., and is engaged in the exploitation of educational and religious moving pictures. Dr. Jones agrees with us as to the wealth of material in the Bible yet unfilmed and says: "When I saw the characters of 'The Pilgrim's Progress' unfold on the screen, I felt I was wasting my time. A religious subject, tactfully and reverently treated, in my opinion, will do more to advance the cause of religion and to uplift humanity than a thousand eloquent preachers ever can hope to accomplish by their oratory. I have no sympathy with the melodramatic moving picture exploiting criminals."

We are inclined to the belief that the objectional features, occasionally found in moving pictures, are there because a few producers of the strictly mercenary strain, think the people want them. There is another thought coming. It is rare indeed that one finds an objectional item in the Mutual or Licensed series of films. If the other producers can be assured that the people do not want cheap cartoon comedy, barroom Westerns, and exploits of criminal heroes, a sudden shift will be noticeable, for the men who make a practice of filming undesirable stuff are more frequently men who think in dollars and cents, and not in uplift. The church has a duty to a city and to the people outside the church, providing the church wishes to extend beneficent influence. In the moving picture theatre the church has an opportunity it has no right to neglect. If the pictures degenerate, and children are harmed, it will be those church workers who hold themselves aloof who will be to blame. It will be no use for "Reformers" to send memorials to managers and producers asking that the character of objectional pictures be changed, unless they will support the enterprise by discriminating between the good and the bad and attend only the clean and edifying picture programs. Innocent entertainments of any sort can be bettered and encouraged by the united forces of christianity, and if the churchgoers will marshal their forces in this country and patronize only those brands of pictures showing high-class motives, the other kind will be eliminated and another problem will be quickly solved.

By The Mahoney

The Mahoney has two confessed weaknesses—an inordinate admiration for those who perform heroic deeds of valor, and an almost worshipful respect for "brainy" people.

I can only fathom this obsession through the consciousness that I am an arrant coward, and sadly deficient in "gray matter."

The illustration herewith is a "counterfeit presentment" of a real hero, Chief William C. Clark, of Battalion 52, at Flushing, known to his intimates as "Billy," and to the public at large as Chief.

Chief Clark comes of a stock that fairly exudes the atmosphere of old New York, his paternal ancestor, Tom Clark, having broken and trained those creatures with animal bodies and human brains (the fire horse) for more than forty years.

Now, some hypercritical persons may wonder why Chief Clark's picture is exploited in the pages of the representative Cinematography journal. Well, The Mahoney can give excellent reasons for everything he exploits.

First of all, the Chief, is an ardent picture fan who has studied the art thoroughly and intelligently, and can discuss such technical points, as static, spots, sharpness, soft developer, contrasty developer, hypo, hylation sheets, halos, tinting and toning, with a greater degree of accuracy, than the majority of those actively engaged in the industry. He can also, like many others, theorize on how Kinemacolor produce their wonderful color effect. Then he has been ever ready to lend assistance to the director, in the development of a story requiring the use of apparatus.

But——

Chief Clark's principal claim to distinction is the fact that he has saved a score or more of lives during his thirty years of service in the most perfect and efficient fire department in the world.

Now for the Kings.

Accoutred in checks, double-peaked cap and armored storm coat, a stalwart, handsome, debonair young man emerged from a splendidly equipped touring car, at Hamburg-American pier, Hoboken, N. J. Several cameras were at once trained on him, and the Kadeweys were worked with untiring energy and precision while he gave the necessary instructions as to the disposition of his luggage, after which he wended his way slowly to main deck of the "King" Wilhelm der Grosse.

It was King Baggott, whose expressive features are familiar to patrons of the motion picture theatres in every known country on the face of the globe.

As he ascended the gangway, he turned several times, and it was noticed that he appeared to be in a reflective mood, as if preoccupied with some question of great moment. To the casual observer, his actions would not have occasioned much thought, but the sleuth-like eye of The Mahoney was not long in detecting the true reason.

Just prior to the hour of sailing, the King had received a code message from the resourceful Herbert Brenon, unfolding the salient points of an atrocious murder that is at present occupying the attention of the entire continent of Europe, the details of which have their beginning in this country. Judging from the care exercised by the camera operators, and King's evident effort to keep within the lines, a most important original detective story will shortly be placed upon the market by the Universal, the scenes of which will be taken in the United States and several remote and interesting quarters of the globe hitherto unvisited by the motion picture camera operators.

That the several character changes necessary for the development of the plot will be artistically handled is without question, for King Baggot's screen versatility is strongly suggestive of E. L. Davenpart (the elder), Harry Perry and J. K. Mortimer, of decades ago, in dramatic work, when an actor was called upon to play "Richard III," "Uncle Tom" and Raphael in "Marble Heart" on the same night.

Bon voyage, King, and a hope for your speedy return to the land of your many artistic triumphs.

"Will" didn't amount to much in the old days, I mean back in 1881 in San Francisco. He was just an ordinary "sub" on assignments for the dailies, and occasionally picked up a dollar or so for some pertiment paragraph on the Argus or Jack Thrum's Music and Drama.

Then "Will" pottered around with the actors a bit, like Clay Green and Ben Teal, until one night in Harry Grimm's, the late M. A. Kennedy and the later Harry Colton, organized (?) a company for a tour of the more important cities in the Northwest, Seattle, Port Townsend, Portland, and the lumber camps in the purlieus of Puget Sound, Port Jefferson, Port Washington, Port Blakely, and later, Moodyville and Granville on Burred's Inlet. The roster embraced M. A. Kennedy, Harry Colton, Robert Eberle, Charles Matthews, Joseph Leonard, Geoffrey Hawley, Mabel Burt, May Wilkes and Nellie Holbrook (Blinn), the beautiful, brilliantly gifted, distinguished mother of the now distinguished actor, Holbrook Blinn.

"Will" was employed to represent the company ahead and carried his publicity matter in a soap box, and his personal effects in a satchel (dress suit cases being unknown in those days).

It is a question as to whether William W. Randall (the "Will" above referred to) discovered Charles Frohman, or vice versa, but the fact remains the same, the first real prominence Charles really enjoyed was, as the junior member of the firm of theatrical promotors, Randall & Frohman, back in the eighties.

Mr. Randall sought contentment, some few years ago, on his Long Island estate, but the lure of the motion picture enticed him from his retirement, and he recently entered the field of the Feature Film, where he is fast gaining prominence.

One who can boast of a record as producer, embracing Vitagraph, Pathe, Famous Players and Thanhouser (as it was), leaves little scope for critical analysis.

The record speaks for itself

Such an one is Albert W. Hale, a recent valuable addition to the American Film Manufacturing forces, at Santa Barbara, Cal.

Mr. Hale's efforts in the production department of the above-named companies are too well and favorably known to require comment.

The American Company is to be congratulated on the acquisition of so valuable an asset, and Mr. Hale is to be congratulated on an association with a company that stands in the front rank of the best-known and most popular film on the market.

In my pleasantry last week, on the Clover Club of Kinemacolor at Edendale, Los Angeles, I inadvertently omitted the name of Cecil Magnus, one of the charter members.

Magnus is an illustrious theatrical name. Reminiscences of past efforts of dramatic excellence come thick and fast when the name (Magnus) is heard.

Julian and Cecil.

The Cinematography art is the gainer, the drama is the loser, for Cecil says he has come to stay.

A Few Chatty Items of Interest with "Tom" Evans in the Centre of the Stage

The newly incorporated firm of Motion Picture Manufacturers, known as Powers Photo Plays, Inc., has started up with two great big factors to aid its claims to popularity. In the first place it possesses a plant which is beautifully situated, and in the second place the people associated with the concern can truly be described as a "happy family."

The studios are almost ideal in their location. Picture to yourself a very large garden with roses and flowers in profusion, with fruit trees and tropics, plants galore, and with modern cottages converted into offices, and with two huge stages and buildings conveniently arranged on the property. The whole is a quiet spot in beautiful Hollywood, in the immediate vicinity of orange groves and orchards, away from the busy haunts of men, so that brainy work can be done and yet within convenient reach of the city, of mountains and ocean.

No wonder the happy family is contented, for the general manager, Mr. Tom Evans, has provided for their every comfort and in return it does one's heart good to hear them talk about him. In other words, the companies have the right spirit, and that counts for much.

The larger cottage consists of four good sized rooms, one of which is the general office, one is the office of Director H. Matthews, and another accommodates Director J. Farrell Macdonald, whilst the fourth room has been converted into a large bathroom for the convenience of the employees.

The other cottage has been made over into cozy dressing rooms for the actors and actresses, who are provided with hot and cold water. These rooms have been made comfortable so that the artists can sit in them whilst not acting or otherwise employed.

Two immense stages have been erected as well as scenic docks, property rooms, carpenters' shops and the necessary assembling and technical apartments. There is lots of room and lots of comfort and lots of good feeling as well as business-like activity, and it all augurs well for the artistic and substantial success of the concern.

The Powers Photo Plays, Inc., have just installed their own projection machine in their cozy little theatre at the studio. The pictures will be viewed by the whole company in order that everyone may see their own work. The first picture projected was "A Florentine Tragedy."

* * * *

Tom Evans was wearing a perfectly beautiful shirt, a dream in violet with pretty flowers and things on it. Questioned as to how, where and when he dared to buy it, he explained that he obtained it "in exchange." The swap took place in a well-known New York restaurant when a fellow picture play man admired the shirt that Evans was wearing. "I'll exchange you," said Tom. The other took him up and with a number of men forming a circle, the shirts were changed then and there. At the same time other articles of clothing were exchanged by the several men present, and one very prominent man in the world of motion pictures, a perfect king in fact (this hides it very nicely), managed to get rid of an outrageously fancy cloth hat in exchange for a derby that had seen better days. To this day, Mr. Evans treasures the collar he wore that night, for his companions thought it would look better with their signatures on it and proceeded to adorn it accordingly. That collar hangs in his library to-day.

* * * *

A club has been formed in Los Angeles for the benefit of the assistant directors, the property men, and the carpenters and scenic artists. It is called the Punch Club. At the first meeting, Joseph Murphy, of the Universal, was elected president, Horace Davey vice-president, Al. Young, secretary, and Jack White, treasurer. The club fills a long-felt want.

* * * *

Mrs. Tom Evans, the wife of Tom Evans, manager of the Powers Photo Plays, Inc., thinks that Los Angeles is just right. Mr. and Mrs. Evans have the jolliest little bungalow in the prettiest part of Hollywood, in which they are having the bulliest of times. Mrs. Evans thinks that there is no climate like that of Southern California, and she says that it is so nice to be able to go out in the front yard and pick oranges and lemons just when you want them.

* * * *

Frank Montgomery, who was for so long associated with the "Bison" brand and with the Universal in Los Angeles, is now producing independently. He is running a brand to be known as the "Mona" films. There is much mystery surrounding just what he is doing and why he is doing it, but this must necessarily be cleared up before long. The "Mona" stands for Mona Darkfeather, of course, and it is at least clear that she is to be featured. Mona Darkfeather is certainly the best known interpreter of Indian roles in the business to-day. Work has been started.

* * * *

Tom Evans is good at scoops and just loves to get one over. In the restaurant opposite the Hollywood studios of the Universal there is a big counter and over this is a big banner with the name Powers Plays, Inc., on it. The restaurant is being run by Mr. Griffith, so long associated with Director Harry Matthews, of the Powers Plays, and it is situated within easy reach of the Evans studios in Hollywood. It is a regular meeting place for picture players.

* * * *

One of the features, and indeed one of the attractions at the studio of the Powers Photo Plays, Inc., is the presence there of Charley Manley—"Pop" Manley to his hundreds of friends. Everyone loves to see and talk to this fine old actor, who is so full of experience and humor. Mr. and Mrs. Manley live in Hollywood and are well-known figures between the city and Hollywood. This great old gentleman is eighty-three years of age and he bears his years gracefully and gets the most out of life.

Another feature is the presence of the irrepressible Powers kids, Early and Matty—thorough children, both of them. They manage to keep everyone thoroughly alive with their lively chatter.

Frank Crompton, in charge of the mechanics at the Powers Photo Plays, Inc., at their Hollywood studios, is happy in the acquisition of the most up-to-date machinery for manufacturing furniture that is to be obtained. Most of the furniture used by this concern is made right in their studios, doing away with many expenses and enabling them to have correct furniture for every period, and eliminating long waits.

RELIANCE 10—CRYSTAL 4

At Lenox Oval, New York City, on Saturday afternoon, the Reliance baseball team crossed bats with the Crystal Film Company's team for nine exciting innings.

The Reliance team made the trip from the Reliance studio on West Twenty-first street in a large sight-seeing automobile, accompanied by the two Reliance touring cars packed with enthusiastic rooters. In spite of the unpleasant weather, a large crowd had gathered to see the "movie" actors in their new roles, and when the beautiful Lillian Russell of pictures, Edgena De Lespine, stood in the pitcher's box and threw the first ball square across the plate, she was cheered to the echo.

Irving Cummings, who is the captain of the Reliance team, scored the first run and piloted his men to victory by a score of 10 to 4.

On Saturday, May 24th, the Powers Moving Picture Company will play Reliance at Lenox Oval (145th street and Lenox avenue), which has been leased by the Reliance team for the season.

"HIAWATHA" SELLING FAST

Mr. Moore reports a splendid sale during the past week for his all-Indian production of "Hiawatha." Western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, California, Washington, Oregon, Kansas, Oklahoma, Colorado, New Mexico and Arizona are amongst those recently sold. Early buyers of rights for this production report splendid business.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

Originality

MANY people spend valuable time trying to do just what others do. They do not consider originality as a happy part of humanity. It makes them unhappy. Individual tastes are to be encouraged. They make society interesting. Of course, originality must be a part of common sense. A man or woman would not wish to do a thing or write a thing absurd in itself. Originality respects others but it does not feel it is necessary to follow them on this account. All greatness is original. It thinks for itself, and has things its own way, but has a care not to trespass on the rights of others. A man's ideas of beauty may differ from those of another, but both may have beautiful ideas. Intelligent originality is pleasing to everybody. It is the knack of being different, or of doing and writing things in a different way. Originality is an acquired gift. It is greatly to be desired. When the original script is received in the mail it stands alone, and is promptly laid aside for further consideration. Try and be original.

The Ninth Chapter of John

An editor cited us the ninth chapter of John, the story of the miracle of the blind man, as the finest example of reporting he ever knew of. "Don't imagine those old fellows did not know how to write," exclaimed the editor. He declared the writer was on the ground and that he told what happened in clear, short style. With few exceptions the words are entirely monosyllables. The enthusiasm of that editor was contagious, but the "short words" gave us pause. What was the editor thinking about? Apparently he had the much-praised Saxon of the King James version in mind, and there is no evidence that the Biblical writer could have told a Saxon from a hairy Ainu, or that the words of either of them would have been intelligible to him. So we are inclined to give the clear, short style credit to a translator of a later period. And the clear, short style and short words are acquired with careful and artistic endeavor. They are needed in picture play scripts, particularly in the sub-titling.

He Has Resigned

Walter MacNamara, staff writer for Universal, has resigned and may leave for Europe in the near future. Walter wrote "The Rise of Officer 174" and plays of kindred type, and he will be missed from the fold. He has a big deal pending and we hope he draws a royal flush.

First in the Field

It remained for Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice to be first in the field with a rip-roaring comedy on the Futurists and Cubists. There is a "cube to a cupful" and then some in Miss Justice's "The Post-Impressionists," produced by Mr. Hardee Kirkland, of Selig. It is the silly season of the Cubists and we have been watching and waiting for something to freak. It is a fine feature for a farce, and Miss Justice took in the International Cubists' exhibition one day and wrote the script the next. It is something new in comedies, and is a relief from the pathetic stuff that has been foisted upon a long-suffering people under the name of "comedy."

The Latest Offer

The latest offer in the "institute" line comes from New York. An "institute" offers the whole course for $3 or $2 for the first five lessons. It is called the "deferred tuition plan" and after "you have written and sold $100 worth of picture plots you must send us the balance of our fee, $16." And thus endeth the first chapter!

Spread the Joyful Tidings

Speed the day when the editor is permitted to edit and choose, and the director confines his talents to producing. That time is coming, we think, and "Goronflot," in The Photoplay Author, thinks so, too. He hits the nail on the head in the following article which was recently published in Editor Letendre's publication:

"It will be good news to the pictureplay writers that there is a growing disposition in the studios to regard the editors as persons who may possibly know something about the business they are supposed to handle. It is good news because it means that stories will be picked for merit, instead of the fact that they suit some director. Up to now the director has reigned supreme. In some studios, he even ranks the man who owns the plant. This is a survival of the old days when the director was about the only man around the place who knew much of drama and dramatic production. The stories had passed beyond the grip of the men who used to make the fifty-foot piece, and someone had to be called in to make the stuff that would look well.

"Fresh in the game, and with hundreds of remembered plays to borrow from, the director naturally made good. He could turn out work that his employer could not handle. There was such an improvement in the product over what had gone before that the directors were pampered and petted. They were quick to perceive their opportunities and so they erected the proposition that unless they liked a play they could not make a good production. From the first there was a disposition to 'like' only the plays that were easy to produce, and that were showy and shallow enough to make a strong impression. It was quickly discovered that the battle-and-murder story would get over more quickly than one that depended upon intrinsic merit, and the crime wave was started.

"When the business grew too large the editor was added, but the editor was an editor in name only in most of the glass-roofed places. He was permitted to turn back the obviously unfit, but the strong, real play that required thought, study and hard work was refused by the director on the grounds that it did not interest him and the editor, argue as he might, was required to send it back. In those days there were editors who knew little more than the directors, but it has been a survival of the fittest, and to-day most of the editors are capable people, well grounded in standard and current literature, quick to recognize good work, adept at making better promising material and unselfishly willing to help those who seem deserving of help. The editor has risen superior to the director in intelligence, picture knowledge and standard of ideals, and there are many who have authority equal to that of the producer. The time is coming when they will rise superior to the producer and the reason is not far to seek."

Just Good Fellowship

The final call for reservations for the Inquest Club dinner, New York City, has been issued. The Inquest Club has no constitution, no by-laws, and the members meet to discuss the art of picture play writing. Anyone can join. The only officer is the "Coroner," who is elected for each meeting. The dinner date is May 31. You must make your intention of attending known a week in advance to E. W. Sargent, Box 70, Madison Square Station, New York.

Two Shining Lights

The releases of Edison and Vitagraph are among the shining lights of Filmland. Nine out of every ten releases made by either one of these concerns is above the average. Why? Because Horace G. Plimpton, of Edison, and J. Stuart Blackton, of Vitagraph, believe in permitting the editorial departments to edit and the directors to direct. Directors with Edison and Vitagraph produce whether "the play appeals to them" or not. Mr. Plimpton slips into the theatres quite often and sees how his releases go. He studies the audiences and profits thereby.

Pertinent Pointers

Kinemacolor needs good scripts so badly that the company is advertising in magazines.

American is in the market for strong, gripping plots of all classes for two-reel productions.

The "script-a-day" plan is only for the professional writer who can devote his entire time to writing. And at that, the script-a-day is very frequently shown as such.

Louella O. Parsons, editress of Essanay Co., likes bright high-class comedies. No Western scripts are wanted at present. Scripts submitted to Essanay must be above the average. It is not an easy market.

Do not enclose loose stamps with scripts sent Kalem. Rolled MS. is rarely opened by Kalem readers. Kalem likes a synopsis not exceeding 300 words. They specialize in Civil War dramas.

Melies is not at present in the market, we are informed. The Melies company is now on a trip around the world.

Eclair is considering only two and three-reel dramatic subjects.

The editor will also consider split-reel comedy scripts.

Clients of Editor C. B. Hoadley are informed that Mr. Hoadley's address is now 151 West 103rd street, New York, N. Y. Those wishing him to criticise their work should send scripts to that address.

Study the needs of the manufacturers producing pictures and direct your scripts accordingly. Make your plots timely.

Do not overwrite and avoid writing too little. Endeavor to strike the happy medium. It can be acquired by constant rewriting, just as the 300-word synopsis can be made artistic and comprehensive by constant revision.

Carbon Copies

The carbon copies of scripts are never read in well conducted editorial departments. Send the original. Experienced writers know it is a grave mistake to send out duplicates of a subject.

Avoid Writing Them

Miss D. B. Johnson, of Ft. Smith, Ark., writes: "Won't you please tell me why you make such a positive statement to avoid writing Western plays?" Because every beginner first tackles the Western plot; because only the Western plot in one hundred is now worthy of serious consideration; every possible twist and turn have been given the stories and they have grown monotonous; finally, because audiences are sick and tired of the cowboy-sheriff plot and long for surcease.

The April Number

The April number of The Photoplay Author is interesting. Contributors include "Goronflot," Arthur Leeds and Bailly Bartholdy. Mr. Leeds' contribution is particularly timely. The Kinemacolor Company contributes a model picture play.

You Can't Get Away with It!

"Just glance at these scripts," said the editor. We looked them over. One was a two-reel effort, idea and action copied from a Saturday Evening Post feature on the rise of a police officer. Another borrowed most of the plot and action of a "Smart Set" novelette of three years ago. The third was one of B. M. Bower's cowboy plots published in the "Popular Magazine" some years ago. You can't get away with it! The authors who submitted those scripts are blacklisted. No matter how original their stories may become in the future, they will gain no recognition in a good market. We hate a thief! The Plagiarist who rewrote Bret Harte's "Luck of Roaring Camp," and submitted it to Munsey, was honest enough to state that "as the copyright has expired I think you can use this; please send check immediately." He incited merriment. But the man or the woman who steals the work of another and submits it, thinly disguised, as original property, incites contempt. The person who tries to steal and market the ideas of others is really in the same class as the man who cracks a safe—but the cracksman has the more courage of the two! Stand alone!

A Prize Contest

Frank E. Samuels, German Bank Building, Fourth Ave. and 14th street, New York, will be pleased to consider comedy scripts. The best one will be purchased for $25. The script must be suitable for either a man or woman lead and must not take more than five minutes to act. The picture is to be used during week of the National Exhibitors' Exposition. Scripts should be forwarded immediately.

Observe the Details

A moving picture story must hang together, must be coherent and consistent. Attention to details is of prime importance. Glaring absurdities, now so numerous, must be eliminated and logic utilized. The director is supposed to mind the little things, but it as important that the author of the play being produced, do likewise. We wrote a script once in which the press room of a metropolitan newspaper was an essential. The director located a basement of a job printing establishment and used an old two-revolution, flat-bed printing press for the "big break." It ruined the picture. This was the producer's fault. But when you have Madge, the Innkeeper's daughter, traveling 1,500 miles in two hours to meet Jack, her lover, do not wonder that the script is rejected. It may have been an oversight on your part, a little bit in a world of good stuff, but such a trip would be impossible for Madge unless she wore seven-league boots. Use logic and try to imagine what you or your friends would do in certain situations. This will frequently save you from improbabilities.

Script Editors

A majority of the heads of the editorial departments of film concerns are former newspapermen and women. One thing about the newspaper profession, it compels its followers to keep cheerful. No matter how the storm clouds lower, no matter how many things may vex, discourage or harass, the newspaper person must be a Mark Tapley, and go right on preaching optimism six days out of seven. Other folks may indulge in a grouch, other folks may be knockers, but not so with the army of writers who must stand at their posts right steady, and do their level best to encourage others, and dissipate pessimism. This training is brought by the newspaper persons to the editorial offices of the film concerns. This is why the majority of editors and editresses are patient and kind with contributors. They have no time to personally answer all the silly questions and appeals that descend like an avalanche upon them—but they would like to. Remember that the heads of the editorial departments want you to succeed; it is to their interest and profit that you do succeed; and when they find a diamond in the rough midst a pile of unmentionable scripts, there are sounds of revelry.

Do Not Become Uneasy

A Cleveland author writes in: "On April 11th I submitted a script, with stamped addressed envelope, to a certain company. Do the film companies keep scripts this length of time? Do you advise my writing them? I gather from articles I have read on this subject that scripts are returned promptly." We are receiving so many inquiries of this tenor that we publish the letter above. This author becomes uneasy before 30 days had passed (we received his letter two weeks before this is published), and thinks his script lost. Don't query the editors on scripts before 30 days and 60 days were better. The longer a script is retained, the better for the writer. A query on a script may go in at just the wrong time. Give the editors and directors plenty of rope, maybe they'll "hang up" the story and send you a check.

Has An Original Method

Charles L. Douglas writes us: "I, like many others, appreciate the good work you are accomplishing through the columns of the News. I always look forward with interest to your pages. I am only a beginner in the field, but thinking that I might be of some help to the many others, I am going to tell how I supply the sub-titles to my scripts. First, I write the script without a single subtitle, and then I hand it to a friend to read. Now, when this friend comes to a scene that is not altogether clear to him, and he does not understand the action, he will ask questions about it. Then I supply a suitable sub-title explaining that part, and so on through the entire script. This way, I have only the sub-titles that are absolutely necessary."

This is an original method of sub-titling. We like the idea of getting another's point of view on work before it is sent out, but why not endeavor to so improve these scenes, not clear to the friends, so that they will not need any sub-titling at all? Mr. Douglas evidently appreciates the necessity of care and thought in preparing plots and such methods are certain to win out.

The Latest Editor

Calder Johnson, late of the New York Morning Telegraph, is now the nominal head of the Universal Company script clearing bureau.

WM. LORD WRIGHT.

An interesting picture play that will soon be released by the Vitagraph Company is "Roughing the Cub," the story of the amusing adventures of a poet-reporter. Hughie Mack takes the part of "The Cub," but the other reporters are all genuine, being on the staffs of the various Brooklyn papers and members of the Brooklyn Press Club. The story of the play was written by Courtney Ryley Cooper, a well-known newspaper man.

THE NOISY SIX

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Selig Release)

LITTLE Dick Carter's mother died just a year after the death of his father and he was left to the care of his father's parents.

These two old people had a very scant supply of this world's goods, but their hearts were overflowing with love for the lonely little boy when he came to live with them.

The old man was too old to work at anything but his little garden, which he tended with great pride. The grandmother worked about her house, and between them they made a home.

But the only money that came into the home was a small pension of the old man. This was ample for their simple needs, but without it they would be in sore distress.

Happily the little boy and the grandparents lived together. He was feet for them both—running, running all day long, always cheerful, never tired of helping. They, in turn, were the sources of knowledge for his growing, inquiring young mind. They taught him to read and write. Patiently, carefully, they answered the boy's questions, so there was complete confidence between them.

On the third of each month old Mr. Carter began to look for his monthly allowance. Every morning he went to the post-office, and every morning returned just as cheerfully, whether he carried a government envelope or not, for he knew it would come in a few days.

One day, when little Dick was six years old, his grandfather went, as usual, to the post-office and returned as usual; but when he put his hand into his pocket to bring forth the envelope, there was no envelope there.

The old man arose and started for the door.

"What is it, John? You haven't——" The wife's voice failed her.

"I—I don't know, Susan, I must have dropped it just outside. I'll go quickly and look," he answered, trying to seem unconcerned.

"I'll call Dickie. Children's eyes are always sharp.

"Dickie! Dickie! Come quickly, Grandpa wants you."

Dickie came and he and the old man looked all the way from the house to the post-office and back again more than once, but without result.

That night there was much sorrow in the house. All inquiries proved of no avail. The name of Mr. Carter was on the envelope and he knew that if the finder had intended returning the money he would have done so by that time.

"It's a bad time to lose it—the fall is. Dickie needs winter clothes, and so do you, Susan, and the coal's not bought," the old man said in a low tone to his wife.

"And how about you, John? You need things, too," she answered, tenderly.

Although their tones were low they reached the ears of the boy playing half-heartedly in the corner. He ceased his game and sat for a time in serious silence. Then he came to his grandfather's knee.

"Grandpa, you and Grandma always tell me to ask God for what I want. Did you ask Him for your money you lost?"

The old couple looked at each other guiltily.

"Did you, Grandpa?" he insisted.

"No, dear, I'm afraid we forgot that. People forget to pray as long as it's light," the old man told him.

"Well, maybe God has a lot to do just now and doesn't know about the money. I'll write him a letter and tell him about it. Don't bother me now, will you?"

"No, darling, we will not bother you," promised the grandmother. "You may write there in the dining-room on the table. God give him such faith always," she murmured as the child set about his task.

Long and hard Dick labored, and at last the letter was completed. Fearing his grandparents would think it too late for him to mail it, and being filled with the necessity of getting it into the desired hands at once, he slipped, unseen, through the kitchen and rapidly made his way to the nearest mail box.

But alas, he could not reach high enough. There was no one on the street whose assistance he might ask and he feared Grandma and Grandpa might find he was gone and be worried about him.

What should he do? God must have the letter as soon as possible. His eyes fell upon a hitching post. Far enough from the top for Dick to reach, was a slot for the hitching strap to go through. Into this he slipped his note, whispering as he did so: "Please, God, take this out of here and leave me an answer."

While his grandmother was putting the child to bed he told her about the hitching post and how he expected God to send him some money to-morrow.

"But you must not be disappointed if it isn't there, dear," she told him, "for God might have a good reason why he doesn't want us to have the money."

"I'm sure it will be there," insisted the boy, and went to sleep so soundly that four hours later he did not hear the yells and the singing of a crowd of college boys as they passed.

"Don't trouble about the rotten ones, boys, but don't miss a good one," one of them remarked.

"All right, keep your eyes peeled," said another.

So straightway they went toward Dickie's letter box.

"Wow!" yelled one of the students, "Here's a beaut. Come on, boys; all together now."

The six boys took hold of the post, and with strength, born only of the determination of college boys on a lark, they pulled it from the ground.

"Ready! Up!" commanded the leader, and the post was raised to the shoulders of two students.

"What's this?"

One of the boys picked up Dick's note.

"Some swain's note to his Phyllis. We're in luck to-night."

"Read it!" demanded the others.

The student with the note opened it and immediately became quiet.

"Why don't you read it?" insisted the other five.

"It's not a love note."

"Well, read it anyway, you idiot."

As he did not read it, the others crowded behind him and read over his shoulder:

"dear God i am Dickie Carter an live at my grammas my granpa lost tirty dolers. plese sen him some more. we need it bad plese God

Dickie Carter

"i love you God my papa an mama live with you."

There was an embarrassed silence for several moments.

"We better put the kid's post-office back, I reckon," laughed one boy, foolishly.

Then they all began straightening the post and tramping the dirt firmly around it as though it were the most important and serious thing in the world.

"Boys," said one a little braver than the rest, "we got a chance to do something decent. How much have you fellows got on you?"

All hands dived into their respective pockets.

"How much you want?" they cried.

"Better make it just thirty," answered the wise one.

So thirty it was made, and addressed to "Dickie Carter."

"But it won't do to leave it here. Somebody'll find it before the kid gets here."

"Well, we'll have to station somebody here early in the morning to watch until he sees the kid get the cash."

The police along whose beats the boys went on their way to their rooms wondered what had happened.

"They look like a bunch o' Sunday-school lambs," remarked one to a brother as he met him at the end of the beat.

"That's right," agreed the other. "Something awful must be gonna happen. Them fellows nearly drive me mad. I don't get a minute's peace. You never know what they're gonna do next. I wouldn't trust one of 'em from here across the street."

While these things were going on Dickie lay dreaming of angels bringing back the thirty dollars. He could see them just as plain as anything, and they came right down out of the blue sky with long robes and wings and things, and they were singing just like birds.

Dickie sat up and rubbed his eyes. Outside his window the robins in the grapevine talked of their coming trip South.

"I wonder if it was angels or just robins," said Dickie to himself.

Then he thought of his letter and sprang out of bed. He did not wait for his grandmother to come up and help him dress as usual. He struggled into his clothes alone, imagining he could do it more quickly.

Oh, what a nice surprise he would have for his grandpa and grandma while they were at breakfast, if God only hadn't been too busy to answer his note.

The child crept stealthily down the stairs and out onto the street. Then he flew to the hitching post.

The student on guard saw him coming and stood at a safe distance.

With his little heart beating so that it nearly choked him, Dickie stood up on tip-toe and took down the white envelope. Trembling, he managed to tear open the end and peep inside. There was real money!

Oh, how fast he ran home! And oh, how long the way seemed!

The watching student felt amply repaid for his long watch when he saw the expression on the child's face as he ran away with the envelope clasped tightly in his hand.

"Grandpa! Grandma!" he cried breathlessly as he rushed into the house.

"Yes, yes, my pet; what is it?" said Grandpa.

"Why, Dickie boy, I didn't know you were up," said Grandma.

"Look—look!" gasped the child, drawing the money forth.

"Where in the world did you get that, my boy?" was asked by the old man.

"God sent it," explained Dickie at once.

"How, dear?" questioned Grandma, gently.

"Why," began the boy, "I asked God for it in a letter and I mailed the letter in a hole in a post, 'cause I couldn't reach the box, and I went to see if the money was there and it was. Here, Grandpa, it is yours."

He put the money in the old man's hand. Tremblingly he counted it. "Just thirty dollars. Exactly what I lost!" he exclaimed. "God has indeed answered the boy's prayer. It is almost impossible to believe it."

"But you do believe God sent it, don't you, Grandpa?" asked Dick.

"Yes, child, indeed I do!" he was assured reverently.

And who can say that the money did not come from God?

J. V. RITCHEY, OF THE RELIANCE, CO-OPERATES WITH THE EXHIBITOR ON THE POSTER PROBLEM

In an effort to help the moving picture exhibitor compete successfully with the local theatre in the attractiveness of his lobby display, Manager J. V. Ritchey, of the Reliance, is paying particular attention to the quality and artistic value of the "paper" bearing the Reliance oval. Manager Ritchey, who was an exhibitor on a large scale before he entered the producing field, is particularly anxious to obtain posters that are as far removed from the old "ten, twent, thirt" style of melodrama paper as Lillian Russell is from "The Cherry Sisters." "The idea of advertising a high-class picture production equal to 'Ben Hur' with posters smacking of 'Nellie, the Beautiful Subway Guard,' is all wrong," says Manager Ritchey. "If the lobby display of the average picture theatre was equal to the class of picture productions presented on its screen, there would be no ground for argument. The Reliance puts itself on record as a believer in high-class, artistic posters, worthy of the films they advertise. and invites criticism and suggestions from the men who use them. No trouble or expense will be spared to obtain posters equal to those used by the greatest Broadway stars, and I firmly believe that any effort in this line will benefit the moving picture art as a whole to a greater extent than most people seem to realize.

EXPOSITION NOTES

The ever-increasing enthusiasm shown by manufacturers, exchange men, exhibitors and all who are in any way interested in the coming exposition of the Motion Picture Trades is very encouraging to the committee who have worked tirelessly for six months in the interests of the motion picture business throughout the world. Now that the exposition is a little over a month away, it seems that everybody is taking an active interest in it.

From the manufacturers' standpoint this first International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, held as it is in conjunction with the third annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, under its sole direction and under the same roof, will be a wonderful opportunity for demonstration, and demonstration is what the exhibitors want. They have read and heard of certain articles but have never before had an opportunity of seeing for themselves.

For just this reason thousands of them from all parts of the world are coming to New York to see how they can better their theatres. A great many of these exhibitors have never had an opportunity of looking over the talking pictures or the colored pictures. Several letters have been received at the exposition headquarters in the German Bank Building, asking if exhibits of certain kinds of articles were to be made at the Grand Central Palace. In all instances but one the committee were able to answer in the affirmative.

It is pleasing to note how many are interested in getting to New York by the first of July, so that Coney Island and the rest of the sights may be seen before the exposition opens.

The ten thousand prospectuses and other literature have by this time been received all over the country, and from now until July the main thing in the minds of all will be how to arrange their business so that they may get to the convention that will go down for generations in the annals of the history of the motion picture industry.

The Committee on Transportation and Arrangements have been busily employed in making arrangements to look after the families of the delegates, etc., who will be here.

The Hotel Imperial will be the headquarters of the different committees during the convention, the management having placed at the disposal of the Ladies' Reception Committee a suite of reception rooms, and an assembly room for meetings of committees.

During the last ten days several makers of musical instruments have made plans to make an exhibit.

JACK READ, JR., BACK FROM HAVANA WITH AN INTERESTING FILM

"Jack" Read, Jr., of the Garden of Allah Film Company, has just returned from Havana with a five-reel dramatic film entitled "Victory," which he will exhibit before the Army and Navy Department at Washington next week, and also at the Army and Navy Club in New York.

MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

the Patent Office the Trade-Mark Bureau is a branch thereof distinguished by lack of any other denominative, the other divisions being numbered from 1 to 43 consecutively. This is because the Trade-Mark Bureau has general jurisdiction over the trades and manufactures represented by all the other divisions combined. It also has jurisdiction over the registration of labels and prints, as well as of applications for design patents. Approximately 100,000 trade marks have been registered, classified and sub-classified by it up to the present time, and the business is steadily on the increase. Last week it registered 118 trade-marks, labels and prints, and issued 71 designs. The industries generally are realizing more than ever before the importance of trade-mark registration, and the cinematographic art particularly is sitting up and taking notice in this respect, as witness the numerous instances we have cited in this department during the last six months. It is easier to state what a trade-mark must not be than to define clearly what it may be. Perhaps the decision in Ball v. Broadway Bazaar, Court of Appeals, N. Y., 87 N. E., contains a definition expressing in the smallest possible number of words the function and limitations of trade-marks, viz.: "A trade-mark may be tersely defined to be any sign, mark, symbol, word or words which indicate the origin or ownership of any article as distinguished from its quality, and which others have not the equal right to employ for the same purpose. In its strictest sense, it is applicable only to a vendible article of manufacture to which it is affixed." This definition clearly differentiates a trade-mark from a trade-name—apparently a source of much confusion to many business men. The mark is "applicable only to a vendible article of merchandise," whereas a trade-name applies to a business in its entirety, covering possibly the use of many and various trade-marks. "Thomas A. Edison, Inc.," is a trade-name; "Kodak" is a trade-mark. But a trade-mark may under certain conditions consist of a name, a portrait, an autograph, or pictorial design. The more simple and arbitrary the sign or symbol used, the better it will serve as a means of identification. In fact, a trade-mark is essentially the commercial signature of an individual, firm or corporation, and an imitation thereof is to a conscientious business man as serious an offense as forgery, and the law and decisions maintain this view. The owner of a registered trade-mark does not need any evidence other than the public records of the Patent Office to establish his prima-facie evidence of ownership.

Keeping the developer used at an even temperature appears to be the primary object of Herbert Eugene Seeley, of Springfield, Missouri, in his patent No. 1,059,492, the accompanying cut being a perspective view with parts broken away, of a developing table constructed in accordance with this invention. A is a developing tank and B a tray. An edge flange 5 conveys the table top into a sink drained through pipe 6. A shelf 7 secured to the legs 2 supports the heating lamp 8, and a fixer box 9. The lamp 8 is housed in a casing 10 to prevent any white light from emanating therefrom and spoiling the films or plates when being examined by ruby light. This casing 10 comprises two separate members in the form of a cylindrical base 11 adapted to fit over the lamp body and having an opening in its top for the passage of the lamp burner and a sleeve-like member 13 designed to fit over the lamp chimney and rest at its lower edge on the base 11 with its other end closed. The base 11 of the casting 10 is provided with a plurality of apertures 10′ shown in the top thereof for admitting air to the lamp burner. A heating drum 14 is secured at its upper end to the lower face of the table top 4 and surrounds the upper end of the sleeve 13. The drum 14 is provided in its side walls or periphery near its upper end with a plurality of openings 19 through which the heated air passes and impinges on the lower face of the metallic table top under the developing tank A, thereby heating said tank and retaining the developing liquid at the proper temperature.

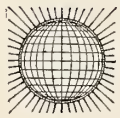
Shadow photographs resembling those made by the action of the X-ray, and obtained by the use of either a permanent or electro-magnet are a recent innovation. The experiments are of course conducted in the dark. A steel object is placed upon the sensitive film of ordinary photographic plate and the poles of the magnet are then brought near the other side of the plate and held there for five minutes or so. When the plate is developed a shadow picture of the object, quite as sharp and well-defined as any X-ray picture, will be in evidence. Only paramagnetic substances, such as iron or steel, are aparently adapted to be thus photographed; but if the sensitive side of the plate is turned toward the magnetic poles, and a disc of iron nearly as large as the plate is placed on the other side, then shadow pictures of any non-magnetic object placed on the sensitive film facing the magnet may be obtained.

The Societe Francais des Films et Cinematographs Eclair, of New York, N. Y., has been granted registration (No. 91,613) of the subjoined trade-mark for moving picture films, claiming use of the mark since Oct. 1st, 1912.



The United States Bureau of Mines estimates that there may be as much as an ounce and a quarter of radium, all told, in this mundane sphere. Accustomed as we are to measure other mineral products by the ton, this amount seems infinitesimal until you consider its intrinsic value of approximately three million dollars. Its radiant energy is however practically inexhaustible, and its utility only partly developed or even surmised as yet. What has this to do with Cinematography? Nothing except by analogy.

Patent No. 1,060,128, issued to Alvah C. Roebeck, of Chicago, Ill., relates to optical projecting apparatus of the combined kinetoscope and dissolving view stereopticon type, and is designed to provide a simple and efficient arrangement of parts with which a large number of lantern slides can be automatically manipulated and alternately and successively shifted into line with the optical axis of the lantern, with avoidance of an exhibition of the slides in wrong order, or with the views reversed or upside down; the arrangement permitting a ready rewinding or returning of the slides to their original position. The manipulation of the apparatus being of so simple a nature as to afford the operator ample time for keeping the lamps in proper adjustment and condition, to rewind the kinetoscope film, and perform other duties ordinarily required on the part of an operator while exhibiting a combination of optical lantern views and motion pictures. To provide a simple and convenient arrangement of parts whereby a ready and rapid change can be effected from optical lantern views to motion pictures and vice versa, without disturbing the operative connections of the dissolving view shutter. To provide a simple and efficient construction whereby the maximum amount of illumination is available in the projection of motion pictures, and capable of ready change to suit the requirement in projecting lantern views. To provide a ready means for effecting the registration of the pair of stereopticon views and the motion picture views on the same spot on the screen. The view is a side elevation of the mechanism on which is mounted kinetoscope 2. 4 are transverse tracks supported on longitudinal tracks 3. 5 is a lamp house. 8 and 9 are the stereopticon objectives. 12 is a back frame secured to front of the lamp house 5, and 13 is a front frame held in separated relation to said back frame by distance pieces 14 to form space for containing the pairs of condensing lenses 15 and 16, for the passage of the flexibly connected slide carriers, and for the movement of shutter operating mechanism. 17 and 18 are upper and lower slide magazines secured to lamp house 5, and adapted to receive and deliver the connected picture slides. The inventor claims the combination of a kinetoscope, a duplex stereopticon having a dissolving shutter mechanism and arranged in lateral relation to the kinetoscope, a transversely movable lamp house arranged at the rear of the kinetoscope and stereopticon objective and adapted to be moved into line with the optical axis of either of the same, duplicate reel mechanisms moving with the lamp house, two series of connected lantern slides carried by said reels, means for imparting alternating intermittent movement to said reels, and operative connection between the reel actuating mechanism and the dissolving shutter mechanism, and a pair of illuminating apparatus arranged within the lamp house in separated vertical and horizontal planes.

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of The Moving Picture News.

SHERMAN'S PATENTED UNBREAKABLE FEATHERWEIGHT SLIDE GOES TO THE LEVI COMPANY, INC.

Fred A. Apfelbaum, president of the Levi Co., Inc., 1560 Broadway, New York, announces the purchase of exclusive manufacturing rights to another valuable patent.

For years inventors have experimented to secure an unbreakable slide, a slide that would be light in weight, noninflammable, and at the same time unbreakable.

The weight of the Sherman slide is one-half ounce, while the ordinary slide weighs four ounces, a saving in expressage and postage. The slide withstands for any length of time the heat of motion picture machines carrying as high as 50 amperes without the slightest effect upon the slide.

The main feature of the slide lies in the excellent photographic effects it permits, the beautiful coloring and perfect detail. When enlarged and projected upon the screen it shows no imperfections, no foggy reproductions, but a picture clear and distinct. The reproductions are perfect in every detail.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES

The recognition of Power's Cameragraph by the Service still continues. One No. 6 has been installed at Fort Morgan, Ala., through W. H. Peck, Atlanta, Ga., and one No. 6 complete to U. S. S. "Rhode Island" through New England Universal Film Exchange, Boston.

The following installations of No. 6A machines have been made:

New Sullivan & Considine Orpheum Theatre at Vancouver, B. C., and in the Empire Theatre of Vancouver, by the Pacific Film Exchange. Henry Zahn, 646 East Division street, Syracuse, N. Y., through Auburn Film Company, Auburn. Smallwood & Cazie, Oolitic, Ind., through Lyric Film & Supply Company, Terre Haute, Ind. With Inductor to H. R. Tinkham, Grantwood, N. J. New York Motion Picture Studio, Los Angeles, Cal., through Mutual Film Corporation, New York.

ITALA MOVES TO LARGER QUARTERS IN THE COLUMBIA THEATRE BUILDING

Business growth recently necessitated the taking of larger quarters by the Itala Film Company of America, who have transferred their quarters on the eighth floor in the Columbia Theatre Building to Rooms 714-715 on the floor below.

The office personnel has been augmented. Harry R. Raver, director general, has installed John B. Clymer, one-time advertising and sales manager of the Gaumont Company, in a similar position with Itala. Mr. Raver, gratified by heavy sales, has arranged with the Itala Company of Italy to expend even more money on the making of features, spectacular and important.

Few or no feature companies can show sales sheets covering more prints and territory than do those of Itala. Merit of film plus Mr. Raver's sound salesmanship and business integrity is the reason.

UNIVERSAL BARBECUE AND ROUND-UP

The Universal picnic and round-up at Universal City, Cal., Sunday, May 11th, was without doubt the greatest field day event in the history of picturedom. Four thousand people, embracing representatives of both Trust and Independent motion picture exhibitors and interests, were brought together at the invitation of the five hundred employees of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. From sunrise on, the roads leading from Los Angeles to the San Fernando Valley were alive with automobiles and vehicles of every description, conveying the enthusiastic thousands to Universal City. It looked to an observer as though all of Los Angeles had determined to attend the festival. The demand for conveyances was much greater than the supply, and in consequence a large portion of the visitors walked from Hollywood to Universal City. To cheer these on their way the Universal band turned out, and marshalling them in military formation, conducted them in a parade to the ranch. There General Manager Aubrey M. Kennedy of the West Coast organization, and his numerous aides, gave all a hearty welcome as they arrived, and conducted them to spacious marquees, where refreshments were served.

When most of the guests had assembled, a program of athletic and equestrian stunts was put on the like of which has probably never previously been seen in California. The cowboys and Indians indulged in Rodeo feats, including bucking, horse-racing, lariat-throwing, shooting, and feats of dexterous horsemanship.

At the early evening intermission the guests were bidden to an old-fashioned barbecue dinner, in which oxen, lambs and pigs roasted whole in a specially prepared pit of seething hot stones, were served al fresco, with an abundance of the most succulent vegetables and fruits for garnishment. To wash this down, the finest light wines of California were served, with tea, coffee, cocoa, and all manner of soft drinks.

When everybody was in good humor, the candidates on the three rival tickets for the municipal offices of Universal City, at the election on May 20th, took advantage of the opportunity to present their respective arguments. The Suffrage candidates were particularly active, and made some telling speeches in behalf of their cause.

The important events were reproduced for the benefit of posterity by the fifteen directors, who entered into a picture-taking contest that was the hit of the day. The spectacle of fifteen directors all taking pictures at the same time is a sight that never has been duplicated, and one that awakened the greatest enthusiasm of the thousands of assembled guests.

Beginning with May 27th, in addition to the two Crystal split-comedies now being released, the Crystal Company will put out an extra reel each Tuesday.

NOTES OF SELIG PLAYERS

Tom Carrigan, the well-known Selig player, recently rejoined the Chicago branch of that company after a protracted vacation. In one mail some time later Mr. Carrigan received twenty letters, for the most part from fans, congratulating him upon his return to the picture world. The strange part about this mail was the fact that twelve of the twenty letters bore the postmark of twelve different foreign countries. Carrigan says he will soon be able to rival "Great Raymond" as an international correspondent.

Myrtle Stedman, leading woman of the Selig Arizona Company, now located at Prescott, Ariz., celebrated a birthday last week. The management of the St. Michaels Hotel, in Prescott, acted as hosts of a party given in honor of the popular picture play star.

Lillian Hayward, character and heavy woman, of the Pacific Coast stock branch of the Selig Company, has made four trips around the world during her career behind the footlights. No matter what character or its nationality she is called upon to play, she knows just how to dress and portray it. This comes from a close study of the people of lands through which she has traveled.

Hobart Bosworth is considered one of the most talented painters in the United States, and his oils are in great demand by art connoisseurs throughout the country. He only paints as a pastime, however, his real work being confined to portraying leading roles for the Los Angeles branch of the Selig Polyscope Company.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO. NOTES

S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Mfg Co., returned to the Santa Barbara producing headquarters after a brief stay in Chicago. Mr. Hutchinson expects to spend considerable time in California this summer, directing the production of some coming two and three-reel features.

The Jinx has been following Santa Barbara players of the American Film Mfg. Co. recently. The latest accident has befallen Dan Woodman, a cowboy, who, while riding in a chase scene along the precipitous Cliff Drive, was hurled, horse and all, some two hundred feet to the beach. The horse was so badly injured that it was shot while Mr. Woodman was quickly driven to the Santa Barbara Hospital. The extent of his injuries is unknown. This accident followed the one in which Jack Kerrigan severely hurt his hand. Two weeks ago Al Heimerl, camera man, was struck by a piece of rock in an explosion scene, and during the making of a Western last week, Jack Richardson was accidentally caught in a bear trap, suffering severe lacerations of the hand and wrist. Richardson has just recovered from the effects sustained in the making of "Her Big Story," in which Charlotte Burton almost brained him with a statuette of Apollo. Four stitches were taken in Richardson's forehead at that time.

Director Hale, of the American forces at Santa Barbara, recently received some new "fire-making" equipment and used it in a story for which it had been ordered. The old Gonzale adobe house was used and from its doors and windows poured a blaze of flame and smoke. An excited woman resident rushed madly to Santa Barbara's single fire house, and the result was a hurry-up visit by the fire department. Director Hale was delighted with the unexpected turn of events and some sixty feet of film was made to include the spectacle of the bustling firemen. Then when it was all over someone remarked suddenly, "Say, that was a motor-truck fire engine. How could an old adobe house in a Mexican wilderness be saved by a brand new 1913 chugging motor fire engine?"

Jack Kerrigan and Miss Vivian Rich had a novel ride in an aeroplane at Ventura, Cal., last week. The flight occurred in connection with the making of a single-reel subject. The famous Gilpatrick exhibition of flying at Ventura was utilized. This was Kerrigan's first flight.

Something distinctly out of the ordinary is promised by the American Film Mfg. Co. on a two-reel French costume play soon to be released. Jack Kerrigan in costume of a French cavalier is quite the Jack Kerrigan of the sombrero and chaps, yet quite another person, too. Admirers of the handsome picture idol will be delighted with the new Kerrigan.

HARRISON DEL RUTH SUCCUMBS TO WOUNDS

Los Angeles.—Harrison Del Ruth, scenario writer for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, died at the Los Angeles County Hospital on May 4th from a bullet wound received on April 17th. The shooting was done by Jesse Jones, a druggist, who mistook Mr. Del Ruth for a burglar, while the latter was peering into the shop window. The wounded man was hurried to the Receiving Hospital, where a major operation was performed by Dr. Zerfing. Later he was removed to the County Hospital, where hopes were entertained for his ultimate recovery, but a turn for the worse came on Saturday and the next day he died.

Mr. Del Ruth was much beloved by his associates in the Universal West Coast organization, and his widow was the recipient of many beautiful floral offerings. Besides his widow, Mr. Del Ruth left a brother, Hampton Del Ruth, who played the part of Pelleas with Arthur Maude and Constance Crawley in the recent production of Maurice Maeterlinck's "Pelleas and Melisande," which Mr. Del Ruth adapted for use before the camera.

GAUMONT

MEN WERE DECEIVERS EVER (June 12.—Gaydog, though an incorrigible flirt, adores his wife. Neither she nor anyone else would have suspected it, however. One afternoon at the riverside, as she gazes over the tranquil waters, she sees, in a rowboat, her husband with a blossoming blonde. They are doing more kissing than rowing. Mad with jealousy, the wife leaves the house. She leaves a note for her husband, accusing him of his deception and saying that he will never again see her. Although she doesn't know where she is going, she is on her way.

Her husband learns that his wife has flown. The note explains the reason. He follows. Her automobile breaks down on a road by the seaside and she is forced to take refuge for the night in a fisherman's cottage. Here her husband comes. Vainly he tries to conciliate her. A storm comes on and Gaydog and his wife are invited to spend the night there. To this they agree, but insist upon having a separation between their sleeping quarters. A screen is utilized for this purpose. Gaydog stretches himself out in a Morris chair. His wife, becoming lonely in the night, realizes that husbands are handy things to have around the house. She comes out and forgives him.

THE GREAT UNWASHED (June 19).—Mrs. Harrap, a widow, in addition to having a keen eye for dust on the furniture, has a keen eye for gold dust. She seeks a husband with oodles of money and a tendency toward apoplexy. She notices in a newspaper a story about Baggs, a millionaire who has disguised himself as a beggar and who will marry the girl who is most kind to him. The story mentions that his twin brother is also abroad and that there is possibility of the two being confused. Baggs is mentioned as having a pale face, thick hair, a frank countenance, tranquil gaze and a beard.

As Mrs. Harrap goes along the street she sees something which on close inspection proves to be a man. He might have been a geologist, as he had the soil of many countries on his hands, also on his face. She reads quickly the description in the newspaper. It corresponds to the appearance of the "object." She collects this object and bundles it into a taxicab and takes it home. It is as dirty as any man can be at one time. She doesn't like the idea of sitting at the table with him until he has been fumigated. She is "just out" of insectine. She asks him if he will have a bath. H consents to do it, although he says it will spoil his whole evening.

He goes into the bathroom and admires the soap. He doesn't use it, however, to take off the dirt, but to take away his appetite. He sprinkles a little talcum powder on it to give it flavor.

His table manners are almost as bad as those of a young rhinoceros. He dusts his shoes with the celery and drinks the water from the celery vase. He almost cuts his tonsils out eating with his knife. Our widow friend, convinced that this is only a millionaire in disguise and disgust, stands for it, though she could hardly resist the temptation to turn the hose on him.

She decides that a good masseur would come in pretty handy through the doorway. The masseur is a brunette person, and, although he seems colored, he was born that way.

An admirer of the widow, who, unhappily, is not embarrassed by millions, calls. He is jealous of His Ragship and inquires if the widow dragged him out of the ashheap. He advises her not to let the dog catchers see him. In disgust, he starts to go away. To add to the poor widow's troubles, she then is handed a newspaper which contains the following sad story:

"The millionaire, W. Baggs, denies the statements made in a newspaper this morning. He has no brother; moreover, he is already married."

THE BETTER SUCCESS.—A story full of gripping scenes and strong heart interest, dealing with the lives of two farmer boys. At the beginning of the story Wallace is tired of the drudgery of farm life and determines to go to the city. There he meets with success, rising in power and wealth until he marries the cold, heartless daughter of a famous millionaire.

Meanwhile, John, the other brother, has married a sweet little country girl, and we see them in their happy home life, with their children about them. No children have blessed the loveless union of Wallace, who has become a power in a money district of New York. Husband and wife drift apart, Wallace is finally caught in the whirlpool of Wall Street, and in order to save himself, uses funds intrusted to his care.

A powerful scene shows a panic in the Stock Exchange, where Wallace is not only ruined himself, but has brought ruin on others. He rushes home, tells his wife his story, and begs her help in replacing the funds he took. She refuses, and the desperate man goes to his brother, whom he has long neglected, but he is followed, and shortly after he rushes into the quiet country home, begging for protection; the officers of the law enter. Before they can arrest him, his overtaxed heart gives out and he falls dead at the feet of the brother who represents "The Better Success."

TOO MANY MAIDS.—Father's fad is fishing, so, to ingratiate himself before asking for Victoria's hand, Dick takes Dad on a fishing excursion, but by his awkwardness manages to dump the old gentleman into the drink. Thereafter he is forbidden the house, and in order to facilitate courtship, Victoria exchanges costumes with her maid and thus manages to meet Dick outside. Then follow a series of dual identity scenes, which are screamingly funny, as they follow each other in swift succession upon the screen.

While recovering from the cold which is the only thing he caught on the fishing expedition, Dad takes a stroll in the park, where he spies Dick making love to a lady's maid. With his kodak he takes a snapshot, but on showing it to Vic as proof of Dick's perfidy, all he gets is the laugh. A little later he sees apparently the same maid sweethearting with a chauffeur. The next moment he sees the maid and Dick in another direction.

Convinced that the "bait" and water he swallowed on the fishing excursion, combined with the "cold cure," have made him see double, Dad returns home, where a rapid succession of mysteriously appearing and disappearing "maids" make the old man think he has the "Suffrage D. T.'s."

At any rate, he is so glad to have Dick and Vic explain the phenomena that he gives them the parental benediction, "Bless you, my children."

AMERICAN

HER BIG STORY (May 31).—Beatrice Nevin, the Union's utility woman, did "space work" for a living, which is another way of saying that Beatrice was very poor.

Joel Hammond, the business managing editor, grew very fond of Beatrice, for he was a bachelor and a much abused newspaper man. The owner of the Union was a mysterious personage, whom the staff discussed in whispers. Beatrice then was seized with a mania to pry into the city affairs of the "boss" and see what story she might uncover.

From then on she shadowed the mayor and neglected her regular work, and one day when Joel could no longer stand her charming beauty, he kissed her and they plighted their troth then and there, although Joel, as managing editor, warned her not to go too far on the big story.

One day the mysterious boss, George Huestiss, owner of the Union, motored to the mayor's home. Later, with Beatrice hot on the trail, the mayor came out with Huestiss and they dismissed the chauffeur. This aroused Beatrice's suspicions and, climbing through a window, she found herself in the deserted library of the mayor's home. There she found the papers which revealed the big story and then she heard footsteps which sent her scurrying behind the curtains. A moment later Huestiss and the mayor entered. Not finding the papers, they grew excited, and in the search discovered Beatrice. Then she made her mistake, telling them that she had the story and that the Union that night would print it. They laughed at her and Huestiss discharged her on the spot. The mayor attempted to grab her, but, eluding him, she howled him over with a statuette and fled through the window.

Back she raced to the office and hammered out her story. Then she took it in to her sweetheart, Joel, and he read it with a frown and tried to tear it up. Then Huestiss entered and ordered Joel to destroy the story. But Joel, seeing his sweetheart's waning faith in him, threw all to the winds and resigned. The opposition paper that night carried the big story and Joel crept through dark alleyways to the dreary rooms of Beatrice. Love settled the editorial difference of opinion.

WHEN LUCK CHANGES (June 2).—Young Cal Jim had often called upon Betty, but never found the courage to propose. His pal, Mark Halworthy, did, however, and Betty accepted.

Disappointed, Cal asked and received a grubstake from Mark and went away into the hills to seek gold and heart balm. Two years later Mark took to gambling. He neglected Betty and, one day, intoxicated, struck her. Then Cal returned and the pair had a joyous meeting, a meeting witnessed by the drunken Mark. He assaulted her on her way home and, with what remained in her pocketbook, went back to the saloon to gamble. He quickly lost the little change, and in coming from the saloon roughly knocked down a bad-looking Mexican who carelessly blocked his way. This same Mexican Mark had irritated persistently on each occasion of his periodical drunks and gambling losses. This time the Mexican, nursing a fiendish hatred toward Mark, slipped behind the barn and shot him dead. No one could be found on whom to fix suspicion, and the matter gradually dropped, for Mark was never popular.

A short time after the shooting, Cal, having attended to some small business matter, wended his way to Mark's home to divide a bag of gold, according to the law of the West, for Mark, be it remembered, had grubstaked him. There he found the widow crying softly. But in the days that followed, Cal found little difficulty in wiping away those tears and leading her to a happiness that should have been theirs from the first.

LUBIN

FAITH OF A GIRL (May 30).—The story opens with the wedding of Laura Mills to Jim Farley. It was a merry function, and Mr. and Mrs. Mills were very proud of their handsome son-in-law. Jim, however, had a story that he had tried to bury. He had done things in the past that were against the law; but when an old pal had written him to come to Pittsburgh, as the gang had a job on hand, Jim replied that he intended to follow the straight and narrow path, as he had found a little girl that believed in him. Dodging the showers of rice, the young couple made haste to the depot for the honeymoon. They had scarcely left the doorstep when two detectives presented themselves at the Mills home and informed the family that they wanted Jim. The bridal couple had just been shown to their room at the big city hotel when the officers entered, and Jim had to kiss his beautiful young wife good-bye. Jim was arraigned for a confidence job pulled off six months before. Laura had to return to her parents' home and was there confronted with the newspaper account of the crime. The parents denounced Farley, and, refusing to hear a word against her husband, Laura left the house and sought employment. She found a position in the office of Richard Starley. The work was enjoyable and Laura paid weekly visits to her husband in the jail. One evening, as she was about to leave the office, Starley attempted to embrace her. She recoiled with horror, but next day reported as usual. Starley declared his love for her and proposed to secure a divorce for her if she would marry him. For reply, Laura produced a locket containing Jim's picture and her own and reiterated her love for her unfortunate husband. From that moment Starley became her friend. It was visiting day at the prison and Laura was there. A fire broke out in the jail and a panic ensued. Convicts, guards and visitors were rushing for safety. Among those in danger was the warden's son. Jim seized the boy and, trying to battle with the flames, was overcome. The guards rescued them both, unconscious, and they were taken to the hospital, where they lie in twin beds until convalescent. The warden and Starley interested themselves in Jim and for his bravery secured his release. Laura took her husband back to her family and all was forgiven.

CRYSTAL

WHERE CHARITY BEGINS (May 27).—Helen Morris, a wealthy settlement worker, devotes most of her time to ministering to the wants of the poor, neglecting her duties to her own mother and to her home. She acts as nurse to a poor woman who has been stricken ill, while she engages a trained nurse for her mother, who has also been taken ill. This state of affairs continues until Helen discovers that the daughter of the poor woman is out enjoying herself and having a good time, leaving Helen to attend to her mother's wants. Helen then appreciates her own mother's condition and realizes that one's duty to oneself is always first and that charity begins at home.

ESSANAY

THE NEW SHERIFF (May 27).—Three thousand dollars is offered for the capture of the desperate Sheppard gang. Volunteers would not have been so scarce had not the sheriff been killed the day before by one of the Sheppards. Judge Boyd implores the men to come forward and assist in capturing the desperadoes. Blenton steps forward and says he will try. His trial proved to be a huge success, when before the astonished villagers he marches the three men of the gang to jail. The secret of his success was the outlaw's undoing, and it all happened because Jack Sheppard had placed too much confidence in his dog. Just see it.

VITAGRAPH

ONE CAN'T ALWAYS TELL (May 31).—Why will visitors always give short notice, think the three Misses Bardell, when one morning they receive a letter announcing the arrival of their Aunt Lydia in the afternoon. All is hustle and bustle, for, although they have never seen the old lady, they know she is a particular housekeeper, and their own house is upside down. The maid declines to be hustled about by three people at once and leaves in a huff. In despair, the sisters 'phone to an employment agency for a maid and anxiously await her arrival. It does not occur to them to tidy the house themselves.

Aunt Lydia, dressed very simply and plainly, arrives at the house and is mistaken for the expected maid. She is given a countless number of tasks to do all at once, and starts cleaning up. While she is sweeping the steps the real maid arrives and is coaxed by Aunt Lydia to impersonate her. The maid, as Aunt Lydia, is received right well by the girls, who shower her with kindnesses, in spite of the fact that she drinks out of a saucer and makes other similar mistakes. Behind her back the girls make fun of her, disgusting the real aunt, who is waiting on them as maid. The manner of the girls becomes so overbearing that the real aunt discloses her identity. Telling the girls that her money will be left to charity, she departs, taking the maid with her.

On the same reel:

WHO'D HAVE THUNK IT?—A fat man's jealousy is aroused by the arrival of an old chum of his sweetheart's brother. To soothe his feelings, he gorges himself with food and wine, after which he falls to sleep and dreams that the young lady is eloping with the man in question. He wakes up to find that it is only a nightmare.

101 BISON

THE BATTLE OF SAN JUAN HILL (3 Reels) (June 3).—In rendering assistance to a wounded Cuban, Inez Lopez, wife of Dr. Lopez, a loyal Spaniard, learns the secret of the source of Cuban ammunition. Gen. Simmons, a soldier of fortune fighting for Cubra libre, hears the confession and, knowing Inez will make use of the knowledge, summons several of his men and makes Inez a prisoner. She is taken to Simmons' luxurious quarters at the outskirts of the city.

Dr. Lopez, who has for some time been very abusive to his wife, is at this time absent from home, having gone on one of his periodical visits, presumably to confer with Gen. Linares, but in reality his journey is actuated by a desire to see "the other woman," Dolores, a sensuous Cuban.

Simmons visits Inez' prison nightly and on each call he attempts to make love to the beautiful girl. She scorns his advances, much to his amusement. On one of his visits he comes to the assistance of an old Cuban woman who is being robbed by a band of Speniards, and in the melee Simmons receives a wound in his arm. When Inez realizes that he is wounded she betrays for the first time that the handsome, reckless soldier of fortune has attracted her. She dresses his wound and at her gentle touch Simmons' first real interest in the woman is aroused. He feigns faintness and, as Inez bathes his forehead, her fingers linger in his thick dark hair. He opens his eyes suddenly and they hold each other's gaze with awakened understanding.

Simmons has, in the meantime, received orders to move the ammunition to the front, and pays Inez a last visit, telling her she is now free to leave her prison. As they are about to part the American troops arrive and, after battering down the door, rush in and seize Simmons. Inez, in agony, realizing that her note has brought about Simmons' disgrace among the Americans, suddenly decides to defend the soldier of fortune. She steps laughingly forward and declares that there must be some mistake, as she is a willing prisoner. The American officer, with a covert sneer, leaves, and Inez and Simmons say farewell. Simmons wishes Inez to stay at the quarters, but, telling him she can return home, sadly takes her departure while Simmons rides aawy to the front.

Slowly returning to her home, Inez sees her husband and the Cuban girl in an affectionate embrace. She realizes his duplicity and exits sorrowfully.

Simmons, who has reported to the American general, is ordered to learn the movements of the Spanish forces. He visits a native drinking place and, finding the doctor and several of his cronies in a state of intoxication, Simmons plies the doctor with drinks and learns of the defense of San Juan Hill. He is about to depart when a number of Spanish soldiers ride up to quench their thirst. They find that the intoxicated doctor believes Simmons to be one of their men and has told Spanish secrets. Simmons escapes and the Spaniards return just as Dr. Lopez, resenting his interference, has shot and killed Andreas, a lover of Dolores, who objected to the doctor's rough treatment of the Cuban girl.

Dr. Lopez retreats through a rear door, holding the Spaniards at bay and, after a running fight with them, succeeds in making his way to his own home, where Inez, realizing the seriousness of his wounds, with gentle sympathy administers to him. She goes for assistance, and while away the Spaniards find him and, after locking him in the room, they plant dynamite to blow the beautiful home to atoms. Inez, who has returned, pleads for her husband's life but is led away just before the explosion. Dr. Lopez sees the preparation for the dynamiting from the window and the agony of fear mingles with the extreme agony he is suffering from his wounds. He falls praying across the couch as the explosion takes place.

Simmons shows wonderful courage during the battle of San Juan Hill. The wavering columns of men fight their way up the side of the hill toward the San Juan blockhouse, steadily advancing under the burning sun. They reach the top at last and the Spanish flag gives way to the Stars and Stripes.

Simmons, who is wounded in the engagement, is assisted home by two of his men. He finds no comfort in the luxurious quarters, for he misses the presence of the girl who shouldered dishonor to save him. He does not know that even while he is longing for her Inez, finding her home a smoking ruin and her husband dead, has turned instinctively to him. She slips in as he mourns for her, and with a great love shining in her eyes, drops to her knees by his side. With wonder and love, Simmons, the soldier of fortune, claims his mate.

FRONTIER

THE PILLAR OF PERIL (June 5).—Most people have an idea that the forest service is something that prevents people from cutting timber. The other phases of its activity have been more or less neglected by the public attention, yet there is a strong dramatic story based upon one of the branches of service activity of which little is known.

May Rodgers and Ray Sterling are classmates at a great university. A mutual attraction ends in their engagement on graduation day, following the creditable performance of Ray in some track and field sports, of which enough is shown to create an atmosphere. May goes home to the ranch house of her father, who owns large herds and is not overly careful where they graze. Ray enters the forest service.

After receiving his outfit, Ray rides into the mountains to the Cedro station, where he reports to the chief ranger and is put on fire patrol. Meanwhile May has visited her father's different cattle camps and is becoming familiar once more to riding through the wild grandeur of the mountains and over the great spaces of the plains.

On one of these rides she meets Ray, whose duties have called him to the part of the forest where she is riding. May takes Ray up the rocks to "The Devil's Peephole" and through that shows him her father's herds grazing and drinking far below. The peephole is a natural opening in the solid rock and is very picturesque. Having viewed the camp from a distance she takes him down for a closer look and attempts to introduce him to her father. When Rogers, Sr., learns that Ray is a forest service man he displays a good deal of resentment and orders him from the place, because of the natural enmity of a certain class of stockmen for the service. Ray rides out and leaves May much perturbed.

In the forest there are two half-breed trappers whose carelessness in the handling of brush and slashings has caused them trouble from the service more than once. Notwithstanding this, however, these men continue to pile brush near their cabin. To their place comes May on one of her trips. Fearless, she asks for a drink and they invite her into the cabin to get it. Once in their habitation the predatory spirit rises too strong for one of them and he attempts to kiss her. His companion interferes and it looks for a moment like a first-class fight, but the trappers end their difficulty by determining to play a game of cards for May. They bind her and begin playing. May's quick wits assure her that a fire cannot long pass unnoticed in that country and at that season when there were many fire patrolmen about, and she cautiously steals a brand from the fireplace of the trappers' cabin. She throws this through the window into the brushheap, which speedily breaks into flames.

Far off in the hills Ray sees the column of ascending smoke. Fires are his special delight, and toward this one he races as fast as horseflesh can carry him. The flames spread and the house is ignited and beginning to burn through as the trappers starts for May, their games of cards ended. The winner of the game is opposed by the loser and, while they fight, Ray gets to the cabin. Needless to say he carries May through the flames and to safety, while the trappers, awakening to their danger by the growing heat, forget their own troubles in a desire for life and rush outside. May takes Ray home with her, and as soon as she tells the story of his bravery in saving her, her father's anger turns to something more charitable and he makes Ray welcome. The story ends with the approval of the father extended to the young folks plans.

BILLY IN ARMOR (June 2).—Billy Quirk and Count Gastrome are rivals for Violet Horners heart—Vi's Dad wishes her to marry into nobility—but Vi loves Billy—Dad has forbidden Billy entrance to his house—but by a clever ruse Billy gets in.

The Count tries to steal some of Vi's birthday presents, Billy catches him in the act—while the Count is putting the stolen articles in his pocket. Billy, who is in a suit of armor, steals them.

Later by dropping the presents into the pockets of the different guests Billy makes each think that they are kleptomaniacs. Dad, worried, telephones to the police. A diamond brooch is lost. Bill finds this and drops it in the Count's pocket, when the police arrive the Count (not knowing the brooch is in his pocket), suggests that everyone be searched—the brooch is found on him, and he is arrested. Billy then succeeds in getting all the jewels into Dad's pocket. Dad discovers this while standing in front of the armor. Bill raises the visor of the armor, and catches Dad looking at the jewels, and threatens to tell the guest that Dad has done the stealing, thus he succeeds in getting Dad's consent to marry Violet.

THE KIDNAPPED TRAIN (June 6).—As the result of a strike a foundry lies idle, and the men become ugly. The owner upholds the superintendent, who has been cheating both him and the men, by falsifying the payrolls.

The superintendent's stenographer, a young girl, learns of his duplicity, and telegraphs the owner. The superintendent decides to take more of the owner's money, and securities, and to prevent exposure, locks the stenographer in the office vault. He then takes a train for New York.

The girl's lover, a railroad fireman, knows that she was in the office. He comes for her, and discovers that she is in the vault. As the superintendent is the only one who knows the combination, the fireman and his engineer pursue the New York train, on their engine, and overtake it. After a desperate struggle the car containing the superintendent is dragged back to the foundry, by the fireman's engine.

The superintendent is forced to open the vault and release the girl. The owner, learning that he has been cheated and robbed, brings the strike to an end. And the girl and her resourceful lover are happy.

POWERS

DOLLY AND THE BURGLAR (June 4).—Because tiny Matty Baxter is left by his sister Early and her girl friend to care for Early's best-loved doll, little Matty rebels and displays a decidedly masculine streak of temper. He proceeds to vent his spite on the doll, poking its eyes out, then smashing its head.

The new doll which takes the old one's place proves so attractive that night to little Early, that when she is supposed to be safely tucked in bed, she creeps into the library to see that her beautiful doll is asleep. Her advent frightens off a burglar intent on robbing the safe of a package of bonds and securities that Mr. Baxter had brought home with him for safekeeping.

Early steals into the library in time to see the burglar leaving by the window, having been interrupted before he could complete the robbery. Early, fearing for the safety of her loved dolly with a strange man about the place, removes the package of bonds from the opened safe, substituting the box in which she has placed her dolly. The burglar returns and takes the wrong package, opens it, sees the doll, dashes it to the floor in anger and escapes by the window.

When Baxter and his wife find the safe open, they are distracted, until Early, in a temper at the sight of her broken doll, dashed the second package to the floor spilling the bonds and securities. When Early tells of the man at the window, Baxter realizes how close an escape he has had. He phones the police, who capture the tramp, and Early is rewarded by the most beautiful doll she has ever possessed.

JUST A FIRE FIGHTER (June 2).—Jane is terribly stagestruck, and possessed of an ambition to play the heroines of Shakespeare, especially Ophelia, and her ambition causes her to scorn Moore, an honest young fireman, who has been appointed to duty in a vaudeville theatre. Thinking to give her a lesson he secures her an opportunity on amateur night, and grimly watched her reception by the hooting, yelling gallery, and scornful occupants of the orchestra and boxes.

But when Jane's Ophelia causes the gallery to pelt her with vegetables, and draws insulting remarks, from young rowdies below, Moore dashes to the stage, and by descending into the orchestra, and beating one young rowdy, and threatening the rest of the house with a similar fate and throwing the stage with the "Hook" into the alley, he gives Jane an opportunity to proceed with her try-out. Humiliated, Jane leaves the stage, and hides in her dressing room in tears.

Later during the regular performance, fire breaks out on the stage, and a panic is averted by the fireman, who gets the audience safely out of the theatre before leaving the burning stage, to seek his girl. He finds her the last to attempt to leave, all the actresses and stage crew have escaped. All means of escape by stairs, elevators or fire escape is cut off by walls of flame. Wrapping the girl up in wet sheets he manages to reach the roof, and just in time is able to get her to another roof, where the firemen are playing on the flames, and thus make their escape. Cured by a double lesson Jane renounces the stage and its roles for the better part of "Just a Wife."

NESTOR

A MIXUP IN BANDITS (June 2).—Eddie and Lee leave the ranch house to visit their cousins in the city. The girls have never been West and after supper persuade the boys to recount some of their adventures. The boys exchange a meaning wink and Eddie, the more fertile liar of the two, tells how he and Lee rescued a settler and his family from the Indians while they were penned up in their cabin. The girls shiver delightfully as Eddie tells the tale of their terrific deeds of daring and of how the two of them exterminated a whole tribe of Indians. He describes how the settler and his family hung about their necks and how they said, with lofty disdain, "Pooh! that is merely a trifle."

Eddie gets through and the girls' eyes glow with pride at possessing two such brave cousins. Lee's turn, and he does his best, and his best is quite good in the fib line. He tells the tale of the girl abducted by a fierce and bloodthirsty band of bandits, who take her to their rocky cave in the wilds of the forest and tie her to a stake while they heartlessly play "seven up" on the top of a barrel. Eddie and Lee—heroes that they are—smile at the offer of assistance and sally forth, shoot the leader and capture the rest of the bandits and return the girl to the bosom of her sorrowing family.

The cousins, whose breath has been coming in gasps, give a deep, united sigh and fall in love with the heroic defenders of the helpless and the innocent.

The boys return home, and in due course the two girl cousins are invited to the ranch.

Soon after they arrive the news comes that Peevish Pete, the notorious desperado, is at large. The sheriff, cowboys and the boys' father start in pursuit, but Eddie and Lee politely but firmly refuse to go. The cousins are astonished and twit the boys with want of bravery. They say they will go to show the girls, and getting to a safe distance they sit down and smoke, but take to a tree when they hear a roar. It is only a burro! The girls see them and tell the boys' sisters and they determine to punish the boys for their cowardice. They dress up as bandits and with guns and masks steal upon the boys and take them off trembling, begging for mercy. They tie them to a tree and shoot at their feet and slipping a note in Eddie's pocket they release them and tell them to go. The boys flee panic stricken as the bullets fly around them. The boys read the note which is from the girls and which says, "You are some brave heroes—NOT."

They meet the sheriff and posse returning with the bandit, and tell of their humiliation and the sheriff laughingly agrees to help them. The whole party hide in the bushes, and emptying the bandit's gun tell him to accost the girls. He does this as the party cover him from the bushes, and reduces the girls to abject terror. Eddie and Lee fly to the rescue and retake the tame bandit and are reinstated as heroes, for the girls take off their masks and capitulate.

MAJESTIC

LEGALLY RIGHT (May 25).—A wealthy man left his estate to his daughter, intending that his only brother should be her guardian. The document was awkwardly constructed, one of the sections reading: "My daughter must live under the same roof with her uncle until she is of age; and be married under that same roof before her twenty-first birthday or else her fortune goes to the aforesaid uncle."

What the man really meant was that his daughter could not wed without her uncle's consent before she was twenty-one. What he really did say was that she had to marry under his roof before reaching her majority.

The fortune was fairly large and the uncle was tricky. He determined not to let the girl marry anyone and thereby secure the money himself. For a time it looked as though his scheme would be successful, but a shrewd man found a way to circumvent him. This resourceful individual was a justice of the peace, and a great friend of the girl's father, and the sheriff of the county with whom she was in love. He put up a job on the crooked uncle just five days before the girl's twenty-first birthday. The uncle was arrested for fighting and sent to the county jail for five days. The jail is the sheriff's home, and under these circumstances it was also the uncle's roof, so the justice of the peace married the girl and the sheriff under "the uncle's roof" (the prison corridor outside his cell). It was still the uncle's roof when the girl reached her majority, for the uncle had to serve out his term, while his niece and her husband naturally set up housekeeping in the sheriff's quarters.

Thus did a crook find that there is more than one way to interpret a will.

HER FAIRY GODFATHER (May 27).—She was a good enough cook, as cooks go, but the trouble was that her heart was not in her work. The master of the house complained bitterly that when she should have been studying how to make chicken a la Maryland, she was wasting her time reading sensational novels or flirting with a policeman.

Under the circumstances her employers felt justified in refusing to grant her favors, so when she asked permission to attend a picnic nearby they did not hem and haw about the matter, but told her frankly that she could not go, then to make her perfectly happy, they went themselves. The girl had her revenge, however, for she found that although she could not attend in person, she could attend in spirit. For she had a delightful dream in which, as she explained afterwards she made "the Queen of the May look like a second cook in a poor house." It was all the work of her fairy godfather, whom she found to be a spirit every bit as effective as a fairy godmother. He wore a blue uniform, it is true, and instead of a wand used a club for his incantations, but he got results, and what more could be asked.

Yes, the girl is very fond of her fairy godfather, and she hopes that the civil service board will make him a police captain some day.

THANHOUSER

CARMEN (May 27).—Don Jose, the hero of the famous book by Prosper Merimee, and Bizet's celebrated opera, was born in the Basque provinces of Spain. He was a young, good looking peasant, devoted to his old mother and greatly in love with his pretty sweetheart, Mercedes.

The plans of Jose and Mercedes for an early marriage were rudely dissipated by the news that the young man had been drafted for service in the Spanish army. Jose comforted his mother and Mercedes, telling them that he would soon return and they would never be separated again.

The young man proved to be a good soldier and in a short time was made a corporal. His commanding officer, who had great confidence in the new corporal's ability and trustworthiness, sent him with a detachment of soldiers to preserve order in a certain unruly quarter of the town.

Jose was strolling by a cigar factory one day when some of the girls employed in the establishment came out. One of them, a beautiful brunette called Carmen, held a red rose between her teeth, and as she passed the young officer, she cast a coquettish glance at him, and then, taking the rose, tossed it to him. He let it fall to the ground unheeded. Furious, she ran off, followed by the mocking laughter of her companions.

But Jose was more attracted by the girl than his manner had indicated. When he thought himself unobserved he picked up the rose and pressed it to his lips. Carmen, from a distance, saw the action and smiled.

Almost before the soldier realized it, he was completed infatuated with the fascinating cigar maker. Gradually, though his better nature struggled against it, he forgot his mother and Mercedes, his faithful sweetheart. Then the moment came when he had to choose between his loyalty as a soldier and his devotion to Carmen.

A dispute arose in the factory between Carmen and Michele, another cigar girl. They fought, but the struggle was of short duration, and soon Michele lay on the ground, a dagger wound in her side. The soldiers rushed into the factory, and Jose, much against his inclinations, made the girl a prisoner and took her before his commanding officer.

Carmen was committed to Jose's charge until she could be turned over to the proper authorities. And then, the girl, confident of her power, exerted all her wiles to make the young man forget his oath to his country and his love for those he held dear. She succeeded and Jose let her escape, but at the cost of dishonor to himself.

Then Jose was cast into prison, but Carmen tricked his jailors and Jose escaped. They fled together to the mountains, where they were welcomed by the gypsies, Carmen's people. There Jose led a life that was far different from the peaceful religious atmosphere of his native village, and the stirring martial days when he was a soldier. The gypsies were smugglers and he became one of their band. The uniform of a soldier, which had been a familiar and welcome sight to him in the former days, was an object of fear and hate, now that he was a violator of the laws, not its defender.

Jose's mother, in her quiet home in the mountains, was dying, mercifully unaware of her son's disgrace. Just before she passed away, she gave the cross she had worn all her life to the weeping Mercedes, Jose's former sweetheart, who still loved him, ad ntold her to give it to Jose with her blessing.

Mercedes set out on her quest, but to her surprise and grief, found that Jose was no longer an honored soldier of the Spanish king, but a fugitive from justice. Her search seemed hopeless, for none knew where he had gone.

Although an outlaw, Jose was not unhappy, for Carmen made him think he stood first in her affections, but when she met Escamillo, the noted toreador, her attitude changed. The idol of the Spanish populace was a far more attractive figure to the beautiful gypsy than the fugitive soldier, and Jose soon found himself supplanted by the toreador. Frantic, he reproached Carmen, but she laughed at him.

Escamillo, desirous of exhibiting his professional skill to Carmen, invited her to be present at a bullfight. The girl, sneering scornfully at the jealous protestations of Jose, accompanied the toreador to the arena where the bull fight was to take place. Mad with rage Jose followed them. Carmen watched the bull fight with absorbed interest, and blew a kiss to Escamillo as he bowed low to the plaudits of the crowd. It was her farewell to the toreador, for at that moment, Jose, leaping forward, buried his knife in her bosom.

The soldiers crowded around Jose and made him their prisoner. He gazed in dazed manner at the dying Carmen, then feeling a gentle touch on his arm, he turned and looked into the eyes of Mercedes, his faithful sweetheart. Pityingly she told him of his mother's death, and gave him the cross and her message. Jose bowed his head in sorrow and remorse. He had forsaken the ones who had loved him for a woman who brought him to disgrace and death. Silently he turned, surrounded by his captors, and made his way toward the prison.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 22 (May 26).

BULLFIGHT IN FRANCE (May 27).—This is the most thrilling film ever offered to exhibitors. With it an exhibitor has an opportunity to present a bullfight that has more thrills than a Spanish bullfight, without the distasteful spectacle of a wounded bull. The French bullfighters use no weapons, depending solely on their nerve and agility to avoid the bull's wild rushes. The film is a combination of laughs, startling incidents and thrills, thrills, thrills. Go after it hard and make sure that it is assigned to you as soon after release date as you can get it.

THE FUGITIVE (May 28).—Harold Hammond sees a young girl accosted by a masher and immediately goes to her defense. Instantly a fight. The masher draws his gun, but Hammond is quicker and the masher drops. Hammond flees and no trace of him is found. Years afterward, a girl visiting an Indian settlement in the wilds of Arizona is surprised to meet a white man living with the savages, and becomes interested in his story. The story he tells proves him to be Harold Hammond, the man who so gallantly defended the girl to whom he is talking. She tells him that the man he shot recovered later and received the penalty of the law for his offense. Hammond had long dreamed of the girl, and she, having long longed to reward him, gives him her heart when he asks it.

WHITE LIES (May 29).—Lillian Sinclair is the belle of a little country town, and the birthday party at her home is well attended. Her most ardent suitors are two brothers, Bill and Dan Douglas. In the course of the evening Bill discovers that Lillian is in love with his younger brother, Dan. He mentions this to Dan, and Dan laughs it off, telling Bill that he is going out West the next day. After the guests have gone, a sudden tempest arises and Lillian watches the pouring rain through the window. A bolt of lightning flashes before her and the girl is blind. The flash of lightning is the most realistic thing you ever saw. Under the doctor's care, the blind girl now spends her time dreaming of Dan. No word is received from him, but Lillian's broken-hearted mother lies artfully to her that Dan has written in a letter that he loves her. Waiting for Dan, the girl is gradually failing in health, and the doctor decides that nothing except Dan's love will save her life. But the first news of Dan is a notice to his brother of his death. Bill still loves the blind girl, and with her parent's consent he proposes to her as Dan. She accepts, and is soon happy and well, although she never discovers the white lies.

THE SPIDER WHICH LIVES IN A BUBBLE (May 30).—The spider studied in this film is the only member of the spider family that takes to the water, its favorite haunts being stagnant pools or sluggish streams overgrown with reeds. The most remarkable thing about the water spider is its home, as it lives in an air bubble. By gathering the tiny air bubbles that are constantly rising to the surface of the water, the spider, by slow degrees, builds a bubble large enough for himself to live in and enjoy the many insects on which it preys.

THE SQUAWMAN'S AWAKENING (May 31).—Paleface Magee, who has married a squaw and almost forgotten civilization, meets one day a white woman being made captive by two Indians. He forces the redmen to release her, and as she thanks him all his old dreams and memories return, bringing with them a yearning to return to his own people. Magee's squaw discovers his affection for the white woman and attempts a summary vengeance. Thwarted in her plan she gathers her papoose in her arms, returns to her tribe, leaving Magee with his new love to answer the call of civilization.

RELIANCE

HEARTH LIGHTS (May 26).—Paul Norton, a young artist, dwells with his mother in a country estate of fading grandeur, leading a secluded, scholarly life, environed with the dignity of bygone age. Learning that Kent Rankin, a wealthy young art student, is stopping at Marvin Mansion, a nearby summer estate, Paul hopes to interest him in his paintings. Kent and the Marvins are leaving in the late autumn for their city home when Paul calls with a specimen of his work. Pretty Ula Marvin admires his work but Kent, who loves her, has only sneers for it, and Paul is left alone in humiliation as the Marvin auto departs. A white rose lies in his hand, a token of sympathy from Ula, covertly given. Kent opens his studio in the city and fails miserably. The critics condemn his work. He asks Marvin for Ula's hand but is told to prove his worth. Desperate, he sends for some of Paul's pictures and exhibits them as his own work. The pictures create a sensation and renown comes to Kent. He pays court to Ula more successfully. Far away, Paul sits by his mother's hearth caressing a withered rose. He has Kent's check for $75 in payment for his pictures. On a cold winter day Ula sets out on an errand to the country mansion in an auto. The gasoline gives out and the chauffeur departs in quest of more. At a village store he gets drunk. Paul discovers Ula nearly frozen and takes her home. She is made comfortable and as she sleeps in the glow of the fire Paul is inspired to paint his great picture, "Hearth Lights." Ula is enthusiastic and poses for him. Love deepens between the two and she yields to his embrace. But he regrets his presumption and vows that they must not meet again. Kent learns that a prize of $5,000 will be given for the best painting entered in a certain club gallery. He secures "Hearth Lights," owing to Paul's poverty. Ula sends a clipping of the offering to Paul, who hastily paints a picture. Paul's entry is his poorest work and at the exhibition he finds it in an obscure corner. Paul bestows himself in a corner, while in the main gallery Kent receives the prize for "Hearth Lights." Ula arrives late and discovers Paul's entry. Her disappointment hurts Paul. Kent enters, triumphant, and, admonished by her father, Ula yields to his lovemaking. Kent shows her his prize-winning "Hearth Lights." His perfidy dawns upon her and she denounces him before all. Paul is attracted to the spot and Kent, hopelessly cornered, returns the check, which is transferred to Paul together with fame. Paul is urged to stop with the Marvins. Within the magnificent walls of her home, Paul clasps Ula in his arms, while far away his mother dreams, alone in the light of the hearth.

THE MASTER CRACKSMAN (2 Reels) (May 31).—Robert Thatcher invents a device to protect banks from thieves. This is bought up for a few thousands by Thomas, who later makes a million out of Thatcher's invention. Thatcher, discovering a weakness in his system, perfects this, and when he offers the perfect invention to Thomas for $50,000 his offer is refused and he is ordered out of the office. This breaks his heart and he dies in poverty. His young son, Robert, about to finish his course at the Institute of Technology, discovers the truth about the Thomas patent and how his father was cheated. He gets work in the Thomas shops and deliberately sets about to prove the weakness of the "Safe Protective" system. When he has gained all the knowledge he needs—he sets out to break every bank carrying the Thomas system. His little sweetheart, Madge, afraid to let him go alone, accompanies him, attired in a boy's suit and cap.

The Thomas people receive reports from all their protected banks telling of a mysterious cracksman who, with master hand, opens every safe, proving that the Thomas System has a flaw. But, strange to relate, the bank burglar steals not a cent.

A detective is put on the case and one night he apprehends Robert and his little "pal" in the act of breaking into the Shoe and Leather Bank. The girl breaks down and Robert tells their story to the detective, whose sympathy is awakened. He goes to Thomas and tells him that unless Robert is given $50,000 and a share in the business created by his father's invention he will spread the story broadcast through the medium of the press. Thomas is forced to agree to this demand and Robert comes into his own at last.

SELIG

THE WORDLESS MESSAGE (May 28).—Captain Porter, a veteran of the G. A. R., is gathering flowers for Decoration Day. He is accompanied by his daughter, Bessie, and her fiancee, Tom, a custom that has been hallowed by tender memories ever since her babyhood. The scene shifts to the next recurrence of the anniversary. Bessie, in the interim, has eloped while under the malign influence of a quick infatuation. She is too ashamed and too proud to write a word of explanation to the Captain and Tom, who are much together in their grief and loneliness. The poor, lonely old soldier tries hard to forget, but his grief is too poignant. He cannot even gather flowers again. His sole comfort is considerate Tom, who continues as his faithful friend.

Five years pass. Life has been growing harder for Bessie, although she has been deserted by her worthless husband. One day she happens to see a motion picture called "Memorial Day in a Country Town." On the screen before her she sees again her old home, the town poet, her brave, faithful, first sweetheart, Tom, and then her dear old father, too feeble to keep step with the other soldiers, staggering in his weakness and falling from the ranks. This wordless message from the past breaks her selfish pride and sends her back to the old home in meekness and happiness. There, in the old garden, she finds once more love and happiness after the flight of years.

THE HOPES OF BELINDA (June 4).—How would you feel if you walked into a village hotel, saw a traveling man showing a picture of your wife to his friend, calling her a peach and telling about writing to her. And then suppose you coldly decided to trail this man and followed him to the depot. There you should see a typical village dandy also showing a picture of your wife to his friends and telling them that he was going to the city to see her.

Jones was frantic. To him it was a tragedy.

He felt like killing them on the spot. Then he decided on a cold, heartless revenge. He would follow these men to the city, imprison them in his house, make his wife face them, and then, then he did not know what he would do next.

He followed them. He bought rope, plenty of it, he imprisoned them, tied them in chairs, when they called at the house. He flourished a gun in their faces and told them he was going to kill them when his wife returned from downtown.

She returned. The tragedy reached its climax. Murder was about to be committed when Belinda, the hired girl, ran into the room and saved three lives. Belinda was an old maid. She was homely as sin. Her face had ruined her matrimonial prospects. She tried to win the iceman, the milkman, the groceryman, and all turned her down. Then Belinda advertised. A traveling man and a village dandy answered the ads. and sent photos. Belinda was intoxicated with joy. She was afraid to send her own picture for fear they would quit writing, so she sent pictures of her mistress, and this is what caused the trouble. Jones and his wife saw the ludicrous side and were reconciled. The men wasted no time in getting in the clear.

GREGORY'S SHADOW (June 6).—Old Joe Gregory hates both his nephews and loves his young ward, Esther. Of the two boys Rick is the more detested, because Rick and Esther are sweethearts. Gregory is jealous of Rick. The second hrother, Jim, is a weak character, a spendthrift, and indulges in gamhling.

Jim asks Rick for a loan. Rick has repeatedly helped Jim out of holes, and this tim refuses to do more. Jim, desperate on account of an impending note, decides that he will appeal to Uncle Joe Gregory.

The two brothers occupy adjoining rooms. Rick is asleep in bed, when Jim asks Gregory to come to his room a moment. Reaching Jim's room the two men talk. Rick, asleep in the next room, hears not'ing. Jim begs in vain for a loan from Uncle Joe. The old man denounces him as a spendthrift, sneering at him. A hitter quarrel follows. Jim, goaded hy the old man's taunts, grapples with him, demanding the loan. Gregory, in a high rage, whips out a revolver and shoots Jim. Jim staggers and falls limp over a chair, his head hanging down one side and his legs the other. The old fellow creeps out, keeping his eyes fastened on the horrihle sight, fascinated.

Rick is awakened hy the shot and, springing from bed, rushes into Jim's room. Reaching the side of his brother he half lifts the limp body, then gently lowers it and picks the revolver from the floor. Standing thus, over his brother, revolver in hand, he is surprised by Gregory and the servants, who burst into the room.

Immediately Gregory points to Rick as the murderer. Evidence is black against Rick. Although stoutly declaring his innocence an officer is summoned and he is placed under arrest.

Gregory now begins to chuckle. The two brothers are disposed of, and the coast is clear. He continues his fawning attentions to broken-hearted Esther and tells her he will spend a large sum to try and clear Rick if, in return, Esther will promise to marry him. Esther, harried thus, consents. However, old Gregory feels pretty sure that Rick is doomed. But Nemesis is on Gregory's trail. The old man discovers that whenever he is alone a shadow pursues him; not a vision but a shadow, hlack and awful, which springs upon the wall and the shadow is Jim's limp figure over the chair. Gregory at first helieves the shadow is caused by ohjects ahout the room, cast by the firelight on the wall. In moving everything he discovers the shadow remains fixed, and he becomes gradually palsied with fear. Afraid to be alone, this terror grows upon him until he takes to his hed, and suspicion turns to him. Yet he will not confess, although Esther and, in fact, all are convinced of his guilt. At last Gregory dies, and as he dies the shadow appears to all present, only now, instead of the figure of Jim across the chair alone, two figures are seen, Jim and old Gregory, who has just shot him. Rick is therehy cleared.

PILOT

THE GOVERNOR'S ROMANCE (May 29).—Governor Madden resolves to personally investigate the reports of anarchistic activities in his state. He shaves his beard, which greatly alters his appearance, and, donning rough clothes, goes sleuthing in the slums. He rescues Bianca, an Italian girl, from toughs, and accepts an invitation to her home, where he meets Norvelli, her uncle. He falls in love with Bianca and, forgetting his mission, spends most of his time with her. She reciprocates his passion. Norvelli sounds him upon his politics and it develops that he, Norvelli, is the head of the anarchistic organization in question, and of which Bianca is one of the leading spirits.

They urge him to join and, hoping to win Bianca from them, he does so.

At the first meeting in which he participates it is decided that the governor must die. and Bianca, insisting upon assuming the full responsihility of membership, draws the hlack bean. Vainly Madden tries to persuade her to leave the work to other hands, but the girl is adamant.

She will keep her oath. She breaks her engagement to him, and sends him away. If she escapes the consequences of the act he may return to her if he wishes to. He returns to the capital and awaits developments. A week later Bianca steals into the festive gubernatorial mansion on murder bent, and in a smoking room awaits her opportunity. The governor's spies, who have had her constantly under espionage since their separation, apprise him of her presence, and he resolves to put her love to the supreme test.

With his secretary he walks to the door of the smoking room and there instructs him in a changed voice: "If the mayor calls, show him into this room. I am going to smoke." "Yes, your excellency," replies the secretary.

Bianca hears and raises her revolver to be ready. Madden enters the room. She recognizes him. A tense moment, during which the nerveless hand holds the weapon to his heart, then, recovering from her stupefaction, the girl realizes that she has heen duped, and staggers back all hut overcome.

Again she raises the weapon, fury-maddened, but again her finger falters on the trigger. She cannot do it. He steps toward her with outstretched arms, hut with a stricken cry she waves him hack and ere he can prevent it, turns the gun upon herself and fires. The wound does not prove fatal and she recovers. Norvelli and his hrethren come to her hedside and voluntarily release her from her oath and, promising to plot no more against the government, are pardoned by the governor.

EDISON

THE HONOR OF A SOLDIER (May 30).—A soldier, saying a fond good-hye to his wife and daughter, is suddenly called by his tentmate to join his regiment, which is about to go into action. His home, not far from the hattlegrounds, is near where artillery action is taking place.

Just before the advance, Stanley notices the heavy firing in the direction of his home. His thougbts turn toward wife and child. Should he go to them or stay with his regiment? Love proves stronger and, leaving the line of firing, he goes on to carry his dear ones to safety. Many shells burst around the little home and Stanley, seeing this from the distance, hurries onward. One hits his home, hursts and sets fire to the house. He rushes on and arrives just in time to save the child, whom he takes to his mother's home in the town.

The roll is called. Stanley is missed. A deserter! The sergeant calls his squad and starts out to learn his whereabouts. Stanley, from his mother's windows, sees them coming and realizes that they think him to he a deserter. What can he do? How can he return and clear himself? An idea suggests itself to his mother. In her home is a civilian who has just expired as the result of an injury received from a stray shell. Her son can exchange clothes with him! He does so and escapes hy the window just as the soldiers enter.

The sergeant is suspicious and orders some of his men to search the woods. They capture Stanley and hring him back. It is still difficult to prove his identity. It suddenly occurs to the sergeant to try the child. She will know her father. The grandmother is sent to call the child.

When the little one enters the room she intuitively realizes that something is wrong and that harm may hefall her father through these strange and rough looking soldiers, so with quick wit she replies to the sergeant's question, "Is this your papa?" with, "No, my papa is in that room." The sergeant departs with his men and Stanley makes his way to the general's headquarters where he tells the whole story and is restored to his place in the company.

FATHER OF HIS COUNTRY

Harry R. Raver recently was entertaining an exchange man from Utah. As they sat at a table near the cabaret stage, a lissome maiden came out and burst into "Here Comes My Daddy Now." As the audience echoed explosively, "Oh; Pop! Oh, Pop!" the venerable exchange man, true kin to Brigham Young, arose and bowed in a fatherly way.

ITALA'S "DREAD OF DOOM" ABOUNDS WITH THRILLS

Gruesome though his method, and gruesome the result as evidenced in the three-reel "Dread of Doom," chilling one's blood into rivers of red ice, most amazing is the artistic thoroughness of Ermete Zacconi in seeking to see for himself how men die from the effects of strychnine poisoning. It is not often afforded opportunity of seeing demonstrations by obliging persons willing to take strychnine in order that an actor may take notes on their dying agonies for the benefit of art. Understanding this strange reticence of healthy people to stay on this side of the Styx, Zacconi, before the film was taken, spent several weeks with hospital physicians waiting for ambulance calls from persons who accidentally or purposely had taken strychnine. Not altogether did he gamble on the possibility of there not arising such emergency calls, he having learned that there existed in a minor Italian city, a suicide club whose members seemed to dote on strychnine as a means of departing this life. Accordingly, during his several weeks' quest in this district of mortality, he twice was "in at the death," so to speak. A sense of delicacy refrained him from toting a motion picture camera and taking it down "throe by throe."

Directors of hospitals the nation wide, astounded by Zacconi's remarkable acting, have made inquiries regarding showing this part of the film at clinics and at lectures on the subject of poisons.

RELIANCE GOSSIP

The first Reliance picture that will introduce Fritzi Brunette under her new management will be released on June 11th under the title of "Annie Laurie." Miss Brunette followed Florence Lawrence at the Victor studio before joining the Reliance Stock Company.

Another new acquisition of Manager J. V. Ritchey's is the well-known leading man, Crane Wilbur, who has been featured in Pathe releases, probably best remembered by his work in "The Compact." Crane Wilbur starts work at the Reliance studio at an early date, as also does Rosemary Theby, the new Reliance leading lady. Miss Theby attracted Manager Ritchey's attention by her interpretation of "The Snake" in the Vitagraph production of "The Reincarnation of Karma."

Irving Cummings distinguished himself as a baseball star by bringing in the first run for Reliance in last Saturday's game with the Crystal players. The game ended with a victory for Reliance of 10 to 4. Irving was a Bush League player earlier in his career. And Clifford Saums also claims distinction as a juggler of the little sphere.

HALLBERG EQUIPS MANY THEATRES WITH MACHINES AND ECONOMIZERS

Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," submits the following partial list of installations for the past week:

Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizers at Congress Theatre, Greenwich, Conn.; Bijou Hill Theatre, New York; Savoy Theatre, Asbury Park, N. J., and Nestor Film Laboratory, Bayonne, N. J.

Powers No. 6 to Treon & Co., Scranton, Pa.; Powers No. 6A with motor drive and Hallberg A. C. Economizer, to W. F. Kertscher, Grand Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Powers No. 6A with Hallberg A. C. Economizer, and complete moving picture equipment to the Oasis Theatre, 165th street and St. Nicholas avenue, New York. The Castle Theatre, Rock Rapids, Iowa, has placed order for 220-volt direct-current Economizer, guaranteed to save over seventy per cent on electric bill over use of rheostat.

FROM THE PILOT STUDIO

It isn't often that Vale gets "cold feet," but he had them so badly Friday night he soaked them in hot water, with the result that he has been wearing slippers and walking on a stick ever since.

Plumbers were working at Vale's apartment Friday and his water was turned off. The maid went into the bathroom and turned on the hot water faucet. Not getting any water, she went away, forgetting to turn it off again. Vala retired and slept peacefully for several hours. The wailing of his pet cat awoke him, and Vale rushed into the bathroom, which by this time was flooded with boiling water (the plumber having turned the water on again) hence the slippers and stick.

* * * *

Herbert Barrington, one of the leading men of the Pilot Company, had to walk about four blocks in the make-up of a "hobo" last week.

Barrington was very much chagrined when a policeman arrested him for vagrancy. After the police station had communicated with the Pilot studio, Barrington was released after another novel experience.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION OF GREATER NEW YORK, INC.,

LOCAL No. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Secretary-Treasurer—Robert Levy.
Recording Secretary—John Rickards.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—Ralph Knaster.
Assistant Business Representative—John Rickards.

Telephone—Stuyvesant 619
Office—133 Third Avenue.

All moving picture machine operators having New York City license can now avail themselves of the grand opportunity which is extended to them by the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York (Inc.), Local No. 1. This ever-increasing organization is becoming so strong in membership that it is almost impossible to carry on the regular business at the headquarters, and the members had decided to hold two open meetings in the coming month of June, that all fellow craftsmen who are not members as yet may take advantage of the small amount required to become members of this union. All operators will be welcome at these open meetings, and some prominent speakers will be on hand to point out the benefits of organized labor.

The Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Local No. 1, is trying to assist all men of this craft, and it is up to the operator to join in with his fellow workers to better the conditions of this industry, and if there is principle in you it must be represented. There is only one way to better your conditions, and no matter how you try single-handed it will never do any good. You must unite yourself with this great army of organized labor. There are two organizations in this city at present, but there is only one Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local No. 1, and no other organization can use that name. The other organization referred to in this chat is the Spot Light Workers' Union, who are trying their utmost to make a picture operators' department.

After the last convention the operators decided that they could make up a better organization than what they had, and branched for themselves and proved that their side of the story was true. The former mother local wanted to show that they could do likewise, and started a new department. The new department has not their own delegate. The delegate of the Spot Light organization acts for both. The Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local No. 1, has been very successful and has a membership of over five hundred. At the last meeting, which was held on Monday, May 19, 1913, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, the members praised their officers for their splendid work and for the grand success of the organization. At this meeting many members spoke of the good work of the business agent and moved that he receive an increase in salary. This will be the fourth time that the business agent had received an increase in salary, and this alone proves the success of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local No. 1.

A fair advice to all operators who wish to join this union: Don't put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day. The initiation fee will be $50.00 after the open meeting and the books will positively be closed, so, therefore, get right down to business and make your application at once while the entrance fee is $5.00 and save $45.00, which is as good as earned, and the best speculation you ever made in all your lives.

Application for membership can be made at the office any week day from 10 a. m. to 2 p. m., and any information you wish to have will be furnished by the business agent. The next regular meeting will be held on Monday, June 2, 1913. All members are requested to attend.

RALPH J. KNASTER, Business Representative.
Office 133 Third Ave., near 14th St., New York City.

SELIG RELEASES FOR WEEK OF JUNE 2

What grown person is there living to-day who does not often long to be a boy or girl once more, and especially so on that red-letter day when the circus comes to town? This is the sympathetic theme of Selig's appealing release of June 2nd. It is entitled "When the Circus Comes to Town," and records the experiences of two tiny tots who want to see the show—oh, ever so much—but haven't the price. "Baby" Lillian Wade, Roy Clark and Bessie Eyton play the principal roles.

* * * *

June 3rd is the date scheduled for the release of "A Flag of Two Wars." The story is a military drama in which the son of an old Confederate veteran upholds the family honor while protecting the flag of his father and his country. Herbert Rawlinson, Eugenie Besserer and George Hernandez play the principal roles.

* * * *

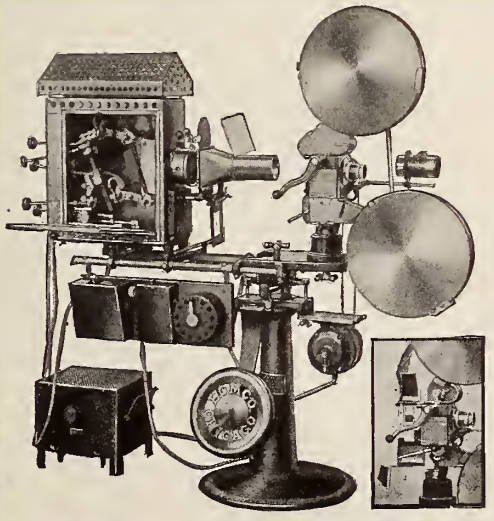
In striking contrast of the women folk of yesterday is Miss America, the mannish, suffrage-advocating, hail-fellow-well-met young woman of the present day. These feminine peculiarities are the subject of Selig's comedy drama entitled "Woman—Past and Present," which will be released on the 4th of June. On this day also the Selig people will make a special release of their two-reel feature, "The Law and the Outlaw." The latter is a sensational drama of Western life.

* * * *

"The Suwanee River" is the poetic title of a sentimental drama of the picturesque and lovable Southland which the Selig Polyscope Company will release on June 5th. The haunting melody of "'Way Down Upon the Suwanee River" furnished the theme for the present delightful picture."

* * * *

"An Embarrassed Bridegroom" is the title of the forepart of Selig's split reel for June 6th. This is a comedy by the Selig Western players and shows that clothes are essential to a wedding. On the same reel is a strong educational subject, entitled "Manila Normal and Public Schools," showing the good work being accomplished by the American army of educators in the Philippines.



The Approved Machine for Motor Drive

THE MOTIOGRAPH MOTOR DRIVE MACHINE (known as No. 1002 Chicago) has been approved for use in Chicago—New York—Boston—Philadelphia and other large cities, and by The National Board of Fire Underwriters.

—NO OTHER MACHINE HAS AN EQUAL RECORD—

Have you examined our Motor Drive? Our constant speed, fully enclosed motor is far ahead of the old variable speed type. Our speed control is continuous. No sudden jerks to damage film. Our switch is approved and the various parts of the motor equipment assembled into one compact unit.

NO MATTER HOW MUCH YOU SPEND—THERE IS NOTHING BETTER.

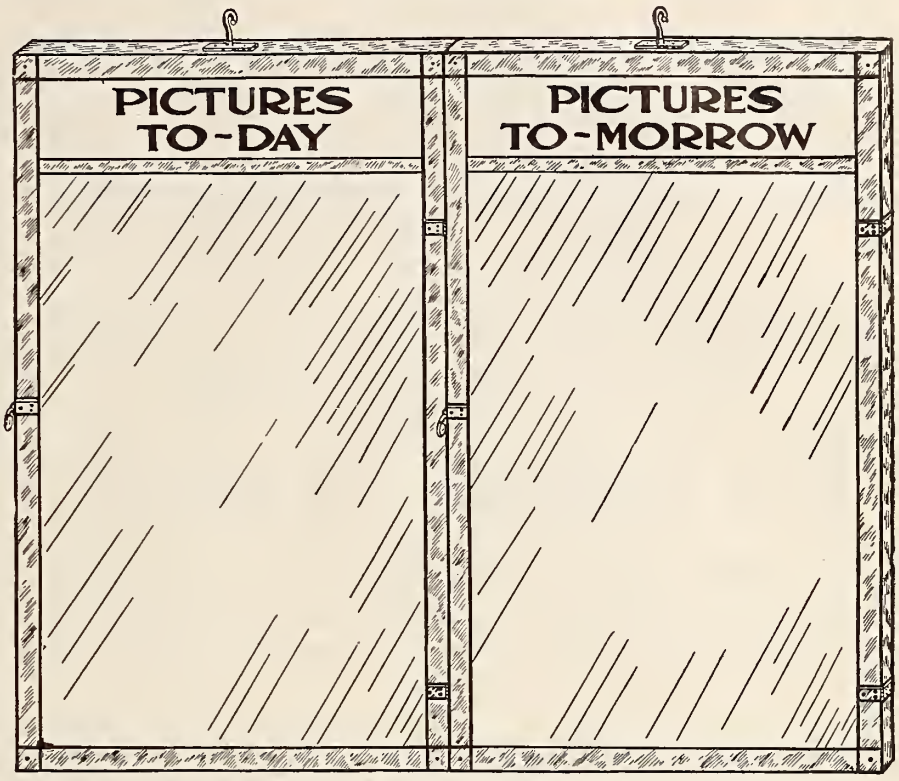
THE LOBBY

By S. J. Newman, Secretary and Treasurer of the Newman Manufacturing Company

I hope my other articles have proven of benefit to many exhibitors, as it is my aim to help them to make their lobbies productive of good and not bad results.

The lobby is undoubtedly a vital asset to any theatre, as frequently it can make or break a theatre. Many a theatre failure can be attributed to a neglected lobby, where the manager simply failed to take advantage of that most vital part of the theatre. Yes, and to-day hundreds of theatre managers are sorely neglecting their lobbies. How any manager can deliberately fail to take advantage of his lobby, is more than I can comprehend. Even one with a superficial brain must undoubtedly know that a theatre with an attractive lobby display is bound to be more inviting and have greater drawing powers, than one with a lobby plastered up with posters or with a display of cheap wooden frames.



Not only is it essential to make an attractive lobby display, but also it is necessary to keep up the interest of the public, with not only the picture plays showing, but the plays coming, as well. One of the latest brass frames for that purpose is shown on the illustration herewith. It is a triple combination brass frame for wall, with three glass doors opening outward on hinges, and each provided with a lock. Three regular one-sheet posters are displayed and across the top a six-inch compartment is made for the insertion of cards upon which can be written "Pictures Monday," "Pictures Tuesday," "Pictures Saturday," "Pictures Coming," etc., etc., or any announcement desired can be made. The height of frame is fifty inches and length ninety-six inches.

Two triple combination frames can be used on the side walls of almost any lobby—and it is not only convenient and out of the way, but also is exceedingly attractive and is bound to keep up the interest of the pictureplay goers, who will await with expectancy the plays coming.

Where wall space is limited instead of triple wall frames, double wall frames can be used.

I wonder how many theatre managers can step on the outside of their theatres, view their lobbies critically, and be able to truthfully say, "My lobby display is as attractive as it can possibly be made"?

DEFIES LAW AND DEATH IN DARING MOTOR-CYCLE LEAP

Rodman Law, Daredevil, and Hazel Hall, Take Thrilling Plunge While Rehearsing for Moving Picture

Rodman Law, hero of a hundred hair-raising adventures, added another daredevil feat to his record of May 14th. With Miss Hazel Hall as passenger, and going at a sixty-five-mile-an-hour clip, he drove his motorcycle through the open draw of the bridge over the Shrewsbury River at Seabright, N. J., and plunged thirty-five feet into the waters beneath.

The thrilling feat was an incident of the taking of the new Imp photoplay "The Daredevil Mountaineer," under the direction of George Hall, of the Universal forces. The fact that four other young women had previously attempted the feat with Mr. Law, only to be taken to hospitals without the scene being properly filmed, did not deter Miss Hall from attempting it, and this hardihood almost proved her undoing.

The start was made a half-mile from the river, and before the police and bridge-tenders were aware what was taking place, the motor-cycle streaked by and leaped into space. A battery of moving picture cameras was trained from every angle, and the entire details were filmed successfully. As the machine struck the water with a resounding splash, Law disengaged himself and came to the surface. Miss Hall did not come up immediately, and when she did emerge, she was motionless, although a good swimmer. Law and the director pulled her into the awaiting rescue boat, and she was hurried to the office of Dr. Cobb of Seabright, where she was found to be suffering from nervous shock. A vigorous massage and stimulant speedily restored her, and she returned to New York none the worse for her thrilling experience.

"HIAWATHA" IN THE OPEN

Mr. F. E. Moore, the producer of the all-Indian motion picture masque "Hiawatha," has arranged to bring the Indian players to New York this summer, to give the play at Fieldston, near Van Cortlandt Park, under the auspices of the Women's Municipal League. Fieldston is a short walk from the 242nd street station of the Subway, and Mr. Moore says it offers greater possibilities than any place he has ever had. There is a beautiful little lake, with tall trees shading the seats, and when the Indians' wigwams are put up, the rocks will form a perfect background. This is the ninth season for the play, and following the run of the pictures at the Berkeley theatre, which has advertised the Indian players, aided by the enthusiasm of the ladies who have it in charge, the engagement, which is indefinite, should prove the most successful "Hiawatha" has known. Those who have seen the pictures will be glad of an opportunity to see the actors in their parts and hear their songs.

June 9th has been chosen for the opening, and two performances will be given daily except Sunday, one at 4 and the other at 8:30. Special performances for children will also be arranged, at which Indian-made souvenirs will be distributed.

SPECIAL MULTIPLE-REEL FEATURES

RELEASED ON SATURDAY, MAY 31st

"The White Slave"

A beautiful story of the days before the War. A series of thrilling scenes, following one after the other in rapid succession, with a love story running all through.

Produced by the talented VITAGRAPH players, headed by Clara Kimball Young, Lillian Walker and Earle Williams. Two reels.

RELEASED ON MONDAY, JUNE 2nd

"When a Woman Loves"

The story involves two political factions, one of which is led by the Duchess Charlotte. She becomes fascinated with Marco Flamma, a young enthusiast, but he does not reciprocate her affection. The revenge she plans forces her suicide, and results in Flamma winning the lady of his choice. CINES-KLEINE, three reels.

RELEASED ON WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4th

"The Law and the Outlaw"

One of the two most sensational "Westerns" ever released. Bucking bronchos and dare-devil cowboys in death-defying stunts. The outlaw (Tom Mix) chases a maddened steer, leaps on his back and actually throws and ties him without assistance. Sounds like pure fiction, doesn't it? Well, wait till you see the picture. SELIG, two reels.

RELEASED ON FRIDAY, JUNE 6th

"The Accusing Hand"

A novel story told in a novel manner. Written by and acted under the direction of LUBIN'S popular producer-actor, Romaine Fielding.

"The accusing hand" greets the criminal at every turn of the road, and eventually draws a confession from him. "The silent third degree" in practise. Two reels.

THIS SOUNDS ALMOST TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE

On May 10th, our Dallas office received notice from an exhibitor in Pecos, Texas, to discontinue service. He stated as his excuse for giving up General Film Service that his patrons were "clamoring for new faces and new actors." We discontinued his service, with regret, of course. On May 14th he wired our office as follows: "My patrons don't like —— stuff. Ship me show at once and continue shipping every day." The only part of this transaction we cannot understand is the ability of the exhibitor to get along without General Film Service for even so short a period as four days!

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

No guessing about it—jumping, flickering pictures drive the crowd away. If your audiences are falling off, you can lay it up to that and nothing else. And the remedy—the way to boost your show and get more people and more nickels than you ever got before—is to install the Edison Kinetoscope. The pictures it projects are clear, flickerless and pleasing. They don't tire the eyes.

Edison—the Edison, who invented moving pictures—has perfected the Kinetoscope so that it will not only give the best show when new, but will give the best show throughout a long, hard life of constant service. He has made it capable of taking the daily grind without ruining you with repair bills. Find out all about it today. Send for Catalog 500 and a copy of the Edison Kinetogram.

CALIFORNIA POULTRY
(Release Monday, June 9, 1913

Made under the personal direction of S. S. Hutchinson, president. Many miles of California hills and valleys were covered before this completed story of a giant industry was ready to be laid before you. The model chicken plants of California are models for the world. An interesting, highly instructive educational on a subject of importance.

HEARTS AND HORSES
(Release Thursday, June 12, 1913)

A vivid, highly sensational and distinctly out-of-the ordinary Western, backed by a splendid plot, superb photography and good acting. A story with a "kick" which is never finished until the tail piece flashes across the screen. You will like it—and what's more, to the point, your patrons will also.

REWARD OF COURAGE
(Release Saturday, June 14, 1913)

A game leg prevented him from swimming, golfing, and dancing. An envious rival plugged his auto and went off with his girl. Then chance threw opportunity in his way. How he hauled her from the raging sea and made her his wife makes a charming social story. Magnificent settings, beautiful photography and superb photography. Jack Kerrigan at his best.

A DISGUSTING FILM

WITH utter disgust I read the papers a short while ago referring to the filming of such characters as Jack Rose, Sam Schepps and Harry Vallon, three men from the underworld of New York City, who have obtained an unsavory notoriety throughout the whole world by the action they took in the Rosenthal murder last year. They are going to be exploited in films with a story written round them specially and in which they would act the special characters.

I tried hard to ascertain the people who were about to portray this story entitled "The Wages of Sin." There are some papers in the industry who for the sake of a paltry dollar will take any sort of advertising that is submitted to them and no questions asked. The News has always upheld the highest in the Cinematograph industry, and I want to voice my protest in as vigorous tones and words I possibly can against this exploitation by any state right purchaser, any exchangeman, or any exhibitor. More particularly do I call upon the latter to use their influence and refuse absolutely under any circumstances, or conditions, or place to exhibit one of the greatest monstrosities in the shape of a Cinematograph film as this "Wages of Sin" is.

I appeal to every censor board throughout America; I appeal to every mayor in the country; I appeal to every decent newspaper to raise a protest against the exhibition of such characters as are portrayed in the film. It is a travesty of good taste, morals, common sense, and that high part of a man's nature, the soul that is in him.

Manufacturers who produce such films ought to be banned from the ranks of the industry as tending to degrade rather than elevate the art. It may be that there are some good moral points in the story which I very much question, but what good would the exploitation of such a film be to the younger element of the cities, and when the one-, three-, sixteen- and twenty-four-sheet posters are exhibited in glaring display outside the theatres where the film may be in the course of exhibition? What will be the result?

All the worse elements in the youth of our cities will flock to see this film; the worse elements in the community will endeavor to witness it. All the respectable ones, all the moral, clean, upright, thinking people will once more refer to the degrading and disgusting condition of Cinematography. The churches of whatever denomination they may belong to will raise a voice of protest against those horrible moving pictures, and with good reason forsooth.

What is the story of "The Wages of Sin"? Three prominent criminals of the underworld of New York City, two of them self-confessed accomplices in the murder committed in the most cold-blooded manner of Herman Rosenthal, a gambler, who endeavored to expose the conditions of the police in New York City and for whose death one police official and four gunmen are under sentence of death. The third man escaped the meshes of the law by confessing that he was only an outside man for the other two. The yellow journals of the city reeked with nauseating details which were read with avidity by the young people in subway, elevated and surface cars. The details of the evidence revealed a terrible condition of affairs, and this is the story in "The Wages of Sin."

I have raised my voice in strong protest over and over again against such films of which I speak. When the Thaw-White trial was filmed I got that suppressed in New York City, and I am going to do what little I can to get "The Wages of Sin" suppressed, and I believe I am right in saying that any exhibitor using this film in New York City will immediately have his license taken away from him, and for very good reason indeed.

The Mayor, the Police Commissioner, the Censorship Board and every decent-minded man or woman will help in keeping the moving picture houses in New York City clear and clean from any such vile representation as this film shows. Not only New York City but Chicago and every other large centre will do the same.

This is not a campaign for one man; it is a campaign for every one who has the interests of the industry at heart, and I appeal earnestly and sincerely to everyone who has the love of Cinematography in his or her heart to help me in this protest against such a backward movement as this film will prove to be. Appeal quickly; appeal earnestly to your mayors, to the heads of police, to your state legislators, and even if necessary take it up to the President himself so that Cinematography may stand on the pinnacle it has succeeded in reaching to-day, and not be thrown down for the sake of enriching a few people who desire clean money from filthy subjects, and I ask every publication which respects common decency and has any respect for itself or its readers to refuse absolutely any advertising matter this company may offer.

Alfred H. Saunders.

DAVID BELASCO EARNS FIVE DOLLARS

When the check teller of the Broadway Trust Company cancels check number 3273, for five dollars, signed by the president, Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players Film Company, and drawn to the order of David Belasco, he need not feel called upon to question the marginal notation "on account of talent." It may occur to him that a clerical error must have made it five dollars instead of five thousand. But, take it from Daniel Frohman, who hires the "talent," five dollars is right.

Not even Mr. Belasco himself is disposed to question this valuation. Indeed, he is highly elated that as a movie actor he was able to earn the regulation day's stipend on his very first appearance. He has accepted the five-spot, if only for the satisfaction of reducing Daniel Frohman's sinking fund by that amount, but he has also insisted on indirectly forcing Daniel Frohman to practice what he preaches, by sending the five to the Actors' Fund, of which Mr. Frohman is president.

It all came about when, one day last week, David Belasco visited the studio of the Famous Players Film Company, where motion pictures were being produced of "A Good Little Devil." He became so interested that, after watching the rehearsal for a few minutes, he found himself running up to William Norris, Mary Pickford, Ernest Truex and the other actors, correcting or polishing some bit of stage business. Though Belasco was unmindful of his surroundings, Director Ed Porter was not. The reel continued to wind, the rapid click of the machine went on, and when Mr. Belasco and the others were ready to stop for luncheon he was courteously informed that a motion picture had been made that would be called, "David Belasco conducting a rehearsal of one of his companies."

As a moving picture actor Mr. Belasco has improved upon the reputation which he recently acquired as an elevator boy in his own theatre. Witness check No. 3273, "On account of talent," sent by Daniel Frohman as managing director of the Famous Players Film Company, and reading, "Pay to the order of David Belasco, five dollars."

WHEN A WOMAN LOVES

Coming Cines-Kleine 3-Reel Release

On June 2, 1913, George Kleine will release a multiple reel film entitled "When a Woman Loves." It is in three parts and excels in its many features. The plot of the story has afforded the producers many opportunities to exhibit their talents in stage settings and these have been skillfully handled. The interior scenes of the ballroom are especially noteworthy for their grandeur and color.

The story is that of a woman's passion enkindled by her jealousy of a young and charming, yet unaffected girl. The pictures portray her exercising every angle of the game of hearts known to her in order that her vanity may not be ignored. The pictures also show a man true to his faith, yet deserving much credit for having to battle against the clutches of this enticing vampire.

The vampire is characterized by Miss Maria Hesperia, who, aided by her own natural charms, portrays the part in a dexterous fashion.

The story involves two political factions, one of which is led by the Duchess Charlotte. She is greatly beloved by Count Hubert, one of the constituents of her party.

Marco Flamma, also a young enthusiast of the cause, while publicly addressing a street crowd, is arrested. Shortly afterwards, Flamma is placed on trial and among the sympathetic spectators the Duchess is found conspicuously interested in his case. As Flamma makes his impassioned plea from his cell inside the courtroom, Charlotte becomes so enraptured with his speech and personality that she falls in love with him and determines to secure his release. In this she is successful and later requests him by letter to call upon her. Marco complies, and during his visit she proclaims her love for him and is very demonstrative in her explanation. He resents her advances, whereupon she dismisses him from the house.

In the meantime the Duchess scorns Hubert's love. Through a clever ruse she obtains a letter from Hubert showing Flamma had sworn to put to death the Prime Minister. Immediately the Duchess enlists the services of one of her male attendants, who, about the hour when the murder is to take place, approaches Flamma from behind and, kidnapping him, brings him to the palace of the Duchess, where he is confronted with the Duchess and Luciana, his charming fiancee.

The story ends by the Duchess committing suicide with the dagger with which Marco Flamma had intended to put to death the Prime Minister, and uniting of the hands of Marco Flamma and Luciana.

LOTTIE PICKFORD WITH THE PILOT COMPANY

Thirteen years ago Miss Pickford joined the Valentine Stock Company in Toronto, Canada, where she was born, and continued in the theatrical profession up to about three or four years ago, when she gave up the legitimate stage for the moving picture profession. Miss Pickford was with Chauncey Olcott for three years. In the moving picture field she has been with the Biograph, Kalem and Imp Companies. Although only nineteen years of age Miss Pickford has had a wonderful experience, and is well fitted for her new field. Miss Pickford says she thinks her engagement with the Pilot Company will be permanent.

Everyone will look for Pilot with a new interest. The first Pilot picture in which Miss Pickford appears will be released June 5th, "For Old Times' Sake."

President, M. A. Neff, 1003 Mercantile Library Bldg., Cincinnati, O.; Secretary, C. M. Christenson, 703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, O.; Treasurer, J. J. Rieder, Jackson, Mich.; Counsellors, Hon. J. B. Foraker, Hon. J. J. Lentz; Executive Committee, M. A. Neff, Chairman; C. N. Christenson, Secretary; J. J. Rieder, L. F. Blumenthal, Geo. H. Wiley.

M. P. E. LEAGUE NOTES

The amount collected for the flood sufferers was $553, divided among Ohio and Indiana as follows: Indiana received $100, however, Indiana had received contributions direct from members of the League from Louisiana; Hamilton received $40; Pomeroy, O., received $20; Middletown, O., received $10; Ironton, O., received $20; Marietta, O., received $10, and O. S. Finch, an exhibitor of Omaha, Neb., whose theatre was totally destroyed, received $25. The balance, $328, was turned over to Dayton Local No. 5 and will be distributed by them.

It is expected that other contributions will come in, which will be sent to Dayton. After the committee had lunched at the Phillips House, they met at two o'clock at the headquarters of the Dayton Local No. 5, in the Pruden Building. Present at the meeting to distribute the funds were: O. B. Weaver, first vice-president of the Ohio State Branch No. 1; Herman Lehman, secretary of the Dayton Local No. 5; W. Raynor, treasurer of the Dayton Local No. 5, and R. J. Kastel, president of Dayton Local No. 5.

When the contributions were first asked for, letters were sent out asking the members in the flood and cyclone districts to advise Mr. Neff of those who were entitled to receive benefits and consideration. There was also a committee appointed to investigate and reports were made and letters read in the presence of the officers of Dayton Local No. 5. There was not one hitch in the proceedings and the distribution of funds was satisfactory to everybody present.

The committee was in session from two until five o'clock. After the adjournment they visited Mr. Weaver's Lyceum Theatre, which is open and doing a fine business, and waited until Mr. Weaver's automobile came and they were taken about the city sight-seeing. After a pleasant drive through the city, M. A. Neff, F. J. Rembusch and J. H. Mayer, of the Bill-Board, boarded the Big Four for Cincinnati, and Mr. R. H. Wilson took the Pennsylvania for Columbus.

The committee desires to thank every contributor throughout the country and assures them that they appreciate their assistance and that the funds were distributed to the best of their ability, and assure everybody that everyone who received a penny were members of the M. P. E. L. and were deserving of assistance. While the fund was small, it will be the means of doing great good and will cause several of our members who suffered from the flood and cyclone to feel pleased that they were not forgotten by their brother members and friends.

Cincinnati Local Branch No. 2 held a meeting at the Sinton Hotel, Tuesday, May 20th. Arrangements were made for a big outing in August, and the committee on arrangements was appointed. President Dingelstedt was absent, being at his theatre in Hamilton. Three new members were taken in. The Local decided to visit Mr. Kitt's school for operators, which is established on Price Hill at the big Pavilion Theatre, where three pictures are run at one time. This is one of the most complete operators' schools ever established in the United States. Cincinnati Local at every session is strictly business and from three to four hours' hard work is put in.

B. D. Egan, of Roncevert, W. Va., visited Mr. Neff Tuesday. Mr. Broomhall, state secretary of Hamilton, held a conference with Mr. Neff. Mr. Sherman Arn, of Maysville, Ky., was a caller at Mr. Neff's office on Tuesday.

VIRGINIA CONVENTION

Moving picture reels in which kissing and similar scenes are shown should not be censored, except in extreme cases, according to M. A. Neff, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, who attended the organization of a Virginia branch at the Jefferson Hotel at Richmond on May 23rd.

Mr. Neff strongly urged that if the moving picture is to retain its dramatic and educational value, it must show life as it is, and he believes that censorship should be neither prudish nor prejudiced. He asserted that classical works of art which are exhibited and admired in galleries in all of the large cities, if thrown on a moving picture screen, would start something like a riot, and he cites this example to show that many people regard the "movies" with the eye of suspicion. He expressed the same view with regard to depicting suicide and murder scenes in moving pictures. No lurid or gruesome details should be shown, he declared, but as these things are a part of life, and may contain valuable moral lessons, they ought not to be excluded altogether.

One thing for which the league stands is open moving picture shows on Sunday, wherever the people want them, and Mr. Neff defended this practice in the strongest terms. In Cincinnati, whence Mr. Neff hails, the picture shows are all open on Sunday, and he asserted that they are filled with men who would otherwise be using the side doors to saloons or taking a hand in clandestine poker games. The working people, who have no time for any amusement during the week, he said, find an hour of relaxation at the picture shows on Sunday, a whole family going for a quarter.

M. A. NEFF

Mr. Neff modestly termed the moving picture as one of the greatest benefits to humanity, asserting that it has educational and moral possibilities that are as yet entirely undeveloped. He said he could prove by figures that both crime and the use of intoxicants have been reduced by the introduction of picture shows, and that they have almost driven the dime novel out of existence.

The morning meeting of the delegates was open to the public. An address of welcome was made by Attorney D. C. O'Flaherty, and President Neff made the response. In the afternoon the meeting got down to business, and the Virginia branch of the national league was formally organized and officers elected. Delegates to the national convention to be held in New York, July 15th and 16th, and alternates, were also chosen.

In the evening a banquet was given at the Jefferson, when speeches were made by L. R. Thomas, organizer of the Virginia branch, President Neff, C. E. Tandy, W. C. Smith, M. L. Hofheimer and others.

President Neff spoke at some length upon the subject of the national board of censors, saying in substance, that it was ineffectual because it was self-constituted, and has no authority over local censorships, and that it is inefficient because most of its members know nothing about moving pictures. He unfolded a plan for a national congress of censors, in which all of the States were to have a part. He also attacked the injustice of high license for moving picture shows, asserting that they are placed on a par with whiskey, as though they were merely a dissipation, their high educational and moral value being entirely overlooked.

H. C. Stradford was elected national vice-president, each State branch having one. C. E. Tandy, of Richmond, was elected president of the State branch; C. A. Turner, of Portsmouth, first vice-president; A. H. Campbell, second vice-president; D. P. Wine, of Harrisonburg, treasurer; E. J. Sparks, secretary, and A. F. Parrish, of Richmond, sergeant-at-arms.

Delegates to the national convention are Mrs. A. E. Thorp, of Richmond; C. E. Tandy, of Richmond; J. W. Myrtle, of Staunton; J. C. Boss, of Norfolk, and W. T. Crall, of Norfolk. The alternates are M. L. Hofheimer, of Richmond; J. Weinberg, of Lexington; D. P. Wine, of Harrisonburg; J. T. Hill and R. B. Holstein, of Petersburg.

Members of the grievance committee selected were J. T. Hill, C. A. Turner, Mrs. A. E. Thorp, M. L. Hofheimer and J. W. Myrtle.

The Convention also adopted a constitution and by-laws and chose Norfolk as place of the next convention.

DELAWARE STATE CONVENTION

Meeting called to order May 26th, Du Pont Hotel, Wilmington, Del., by President M. A. Neff.

The following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing year: James N. Ginns, national vice-president; Charles I. Beckett, president; David R. Sablosky, vice-president; Harry E. Klume, secretary; Nicholas A. Jones, treasurer.

The convention adopted Ohio's Constitution and By-Laws to govern their organization temporarily until the next meeting. The next meeting of the Delaware State League is to be held on Friday, June 20th, at the Du Pont Hotel, Wilmington.

BERG AND BLOOM OFF TO EUROPE

Mr. Jacob Berg and Abraham Bloom, of the Supreme Feature Film Company, left for Europe for the purpose of manufacturing three-, four- and five-reel features.

With the experience they have had and the financial backing at their command, there is no doubt but what good results will be obtained. The Supreme Feature Film Company are the New York City and State Right owners of "Satan" and they have made a wonderful success with the production. Mr. Berg is a young man of executive ability and his future in this line is looked upon with great interest.

FEATURE FILM MEN ACTIVE IN SECURING ITALA FEATURE FILMS

Chicago exhibitors are paying the biggest prices for feature films, according to A. Bradley, of the Exclusive Feature Film Company of that city. Mr. Bradley is negotiating for Itala features in Wisconsin. Arthur Wertinberg, of Schenectady, N. Y., is planning to handle Itala features in New York State. A. D. Flintom, head of the Monarch Feature Film Company, of Kansas City, Mo., lately in New York, in addition to buying rights on "Tigris" for Arkansas, Kansas, Missouri and Nebraska, has purchased rights on the same subject for Colorado, New Mexico, Utah and Wyoming. Mr. Flintom also purchased "The Dread of Doom" for the former block of states. Joseph Singer and Michael Sigel, of the Attractive Feature Film Exchange, buyers of state rights on "Tigris" and "The Shadow of Evil" for Eastern Pennsylvania and adjacent territory, while on a three days' trip to New York last week, purchased rights on the coming Itala features, "The Dread of Doom" and "The Fatal Grotto."

MR. LEON GAUMONT IN NEW YORK

Mr. Leon Gaumont, head of the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont, and one of the two leading film manufacturers of Europe, is at present in New York. Mr. Gaumont has brought with him his splendid talking pictures, which have been so long popular at the Gaumont Palace in Paris, and also the Gaumont natural color motion pictures, which have been making such a hit at the Coliseum in London and at the Gaumontcolor in Paris. A private demonstration for the benefit of the trade is being arranged.

AN INTERESTING EXHIBITION OF EDUCATIONAL SUBJECTS AT THE EDEN MUSEE

On Friday evening, May 23d, at the Eden Musee, New York City, I had the privilege of witnessing a private exhibition of instructive moving pictures, which was given by The Educators Film and Service Corporation and through the courteous co-operation of Mr. Richard G. Hollaman, to show to as large a number as possible of educators, and those who have a real interest in the advancement of educational methods, what can be accomplished by the moving picture.

The idea and purpose of the corporation is the introduction and use of moving pictures in the public schools, high schools and colleges in Greater New York, and throughout the entire United States. The practicability of this was demonstrated by this company on Friday evening by a special programme of Cinematograph educational subjects, which were very interesting and wonderful, and were well received by the large audience that attended this exceptional exhibition.

There were ten subjects in all, which treated on the following. The first picture was a geographical one, and showed the banks of the Ganges in India, which is 1,500 miles long, and was quite impressive with its massive stone buildings, temples, etc. It also showed the natives at their religious ceremonies. The natives bathing in the river were also shown, which demonstrated their very cleanly habits, which is part of their religion. The most interesting part of this picture was the fires burning on the banks on which they cremate their dead. These fires are not allowed to die out entirely at any time. This picture was beautifully colored.

On this same reel was another picture entitled "Region of Ararat, Russia," which showed the peasant life, and a band of Cossacks on the march. The most impressive part of this picture was a beautiful sunset entitled "At the Eve," in which the coloring was most gorgeous and the entire effect magnificent.

The second subject was agriculture, which showed a model farm in Argentina, and the methods employed by the inhabitants in this wonderful country, the soil being so fertile that they can raise three crops a year. A very interesting part of this picture was the judging of prize horses, cattle and farm stock, for which Argentina is noted. They are third in cattle raising in the world, United States being first, and Germany second.

The third picture was entitled "Scenes from Bird Life," showing a group of water fowl, eider ducks, white swans, sea gulls, flock of royal swans, pelicans, snipe and avocets. It depicts the habits, the manner of procuring their food, and how they protect their young. It was really wonderful to be able to see these different birds at such a close range, and to take these pictures is surely a most remarkable achievement.

The fourth subject was natural history and the picture shown was called "From Moth to Butterfly," and showed the moth emerging from the pupa, which takes hours and hours, but by the use of speed magnification, the entire period necessary for the moth to emerge, was reduced to 30 seconds on the screen. The Red Admiral butterfly, the most beautiful of all butterflies, was shown coming out head downward and its wings finally open for flight.

A part of this picture was devoted to and called "Life History of the Otter," and was one of the most interesting pictures exhibited. This picture was taken under water, i. e., a water tight compartment being sunk and the operator, with his machine, taking the picture of this little animal from this box. It showed the otter leaving its hiding place and diving into the water in pursuit of a fish called the pike, which it seizes and brings to the surface of the water and climbing on terra firma, proceeds to devour its prey, always commencing at the head and eating downward, which is characteristic of this animal. It also showed how alert these otters are at all times, always watching for the enemy, especially the otter hounds who ferret out these little animals. These dogs swim under water with great alacity, and are never tiring in their pursuit of the otters.

Subject No. 5 embraced zoology and the title was "Hatching Fish." This film illustrated the various operations connected with trout farming in Surrey, England, and was a very instructive picture. It showed the manner of procuring the eggs of the trout by running the thumb down the end of the fish forcing out the eggs through an aperture in the trout. It also demonstrated how the fish were caught, by the use of a net, and the careful manner and pains taken in shipping these eggs and fish.

The next picture shown on the screen under the title of literature, was the story of Hiawatha and Minnehaha. Almost everybody has read this beautiful poem by Longfellow, and perhaps many have seen moving pictures of Hiawatha and have appreciated this magnificent and interesting story. In view of this one does not need to go very much into detail about it, suffice to say that it will always be quoted as a gem of American litcrature. But this picture was presented in such a clear, interesting way that it surpassed all previous attempts.

The next subject was of a scientific nature and dealt with chemical actions, showing most interesting effects of chemical action on aluminum, magnesia and other metals. The rapidity at which some of these chemicals dissolved was marvelous to witness, and the thousands and thousands of bubbles and particles thrown up from the different chemicals in the water was like the explosion of so many skyrockets.

The next picture thrown on the screen touched on botany and under the title of "Wonders of Plant Life," showed a day in the life of a snow drop, Autumn Colchicums. The most interesting part of this was the depicting of five weeks' growth of these flowers in 30 seconds. To see the plant sprout up out of the ground, the leaves gradually coming and the flowers slowly budding, opening in the sun and closing in the eve was something that has never been done before in the history of moving pictures. Nasturtiums, roses and other flowers were also shown.

Biology was the next subject to follow, and was far the most interesting of them all. It was simply marvelous to see the picture of "From the Egg to the Chick." It showed the birth of the chicken in the shell and its coming to life, which was made visible by speed magnification. To be able to see the stages of evolution is unheard of, as it showed the spine of the chicken forming, also the heart, beak and even the little point on the peak with which the chick breaks its shell and forces its way out into the world. It also showed the growth of feathers during these stages, and the little chick drying its feathers in the sun after coming out of the shell; and 24 hours later the little chicken running around scratching the ground with his brothers and sisters.

The tenth and last of the series treated on physical culture and the title was "Reedham Boys at Drill." This picture was taken on the grounds of the Reedham Orphan Asylum, an institution just outside of London. The remarkable evolutions of these boys shows great patience and discipline. They certainly made a fine showing, and the drills executed by them equalled, if not surpassed, the drilling done by a company of well trained soldiers. The precision with which these drills were dispatched was extraordinary.

After seeing such pictures as those described, one can readily understand and see the great benefit and help to be derived from moving pictures to the pupils and scholars throughout the country. The use of moving pictures as an educational factor in the schools, should interest the parents, professors and teachers and immediate action should be taken with this end in view.

PLEIADES CLUB GIVE DINNER AND SHOW CELEBRITIES ON THE FILM

The Pleiades Club gave a dinner at the Hotel Brevoort in honor of the retiring president, Arthur Stahlschmidt. schmidt.

Through the courtesy of Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Company, a moving picture film, entitled "The Millionaire Baby, or Saved by Parcel Post," was shown, in which the principal characters were taken by Charles Dana Gibson, Montgomery Flagg, Rupert Hughes, Charles Towne, George Barr McCutcheon, Tom Masson, Will Irwin, Wallace Irwin and Merwin Johnson.

"The year's at the Spring,
The day's at the morn,
The morning's at seven,
The hillside's dew-pearled;
The lark's on the wing,
The snail's on the thorn,
God's in His Heaven—

A LITTLE girl came from school saying it over and over. She thought it was beautiful and would never forget it. The inspiring Browning verse was in her reader. She said all the children in her grade were required to commit it to memory. We have always thought that there isn't enough of this sort of thing in moving pictures. Attempts are constantly being made by high school and other teachers to have students memorize or know "memory gems," but some way they will not retain the verses. Young America's knowledge of poetry is not thorough. Poetry can be taught by means of the moving pictures. Some of it has been done, notably "Enoch Arden," "Evangeline," "Hiawatha," and others, but there is room for more. What is more educational or refined and, at the same time, interesting and entertaining than the dramatization of classical or popular verse? Quotations from the masterpieces should be used as the subtitles. In this manner the boys and girls of our land can be constantly placed in touch with that which is refined and beautiful. We need more poetry to sustain us. Life is intensely practical for long stretches at a time and we need something to break into it—something diverting and optimistic, and appealing like this verse of Browning. We look to the moving picture to further a worthy cause.

The moving picture shows are said to be driving drama out of the Chicago field. Historic McVicker's theatre is now presenting film productions.

Kinemacolor promises to show the ladies the very latest fashion modes in a special film. If Kinemacolor will then produce an educational, showing hubby how to button the waist up in the back without breaking his finger nails, a long-felt want will be fulfilled.

As we come nearer to the real summer season, the moving pictures assume increasing prominence. Nearly all the theatres are announcing special features of some unusual kind, and the lovers of the moving pictures have no reason to complain of monotony. Special films, foreign films, news films, scenes afloat and ashore, are now to be seen on the screens. The Industrial moving picture is coming into its own this summer. The possibilities of the moving picture in advertising are wonderful, but at all times the advertising power must be cleverly developed by the special writer. Telling arguments must be "put over" and the film, when finished, must be circulated advisedly. There is a field for the industrial picture which very frequently is more educational than industrial.

Forty Cleveland clergymen the other day witnessed a presentation of "Pilgrim's Progress," and every pastor voiced unqualified approval. "It is uplifting and teaches a helpful lesson," was the sentiment. Not one of these forty clergymen hereafter will be an enemy of Cinematography. They have been enterprising enough to visit the pictures and see for themselves the value of the films. It remains for those who have never visited the picture theatre, and gain their information by hearsay, to be most energetic in "reforming" the industry.

Even if the scenes showing the assassination of a President of the United States are "handled in a masterly manner" to quote advertisements, nevertheless poor judgment is shown. Even by suggestion such scenes should be taboo, for only a few months ago, former President Roosevelt was shot by a would-be assassin. Such ideas are best left alone in the pictures. The Censor Board may have approved these "assassination scenes," as is stated. However the idea, no matter how delicately handled, or how faithful to history, is not one conducive to the uplift of Cinematography. It is just another case of dense judgment upon the part of the producing company. We need no films rehearsing Presidential assassinations.

We are pleased to notice that our crusade against "the fascinating criminal" in moving pictures, has been taken up by others and we hope well-meant warnings of trade journalists, and others, will have the desired effect of eliminating "criminals of the higher class" and their adventures from the picture screen.

Motion picture men, producers, and theatrical men throughout the country, will be interested to hear that a daily motion picture news service, inaugurated in Cincinnati, proved a prime success. The innovation was tried out last Sunday at Keith's theatre. Pictures covered all news events and matters of interest in Cincinnati and vicinity. Pictures made on Monday will be shown the following day and so on during the week. It is claimed that the idea will be utilized in many sections of the country before long. The daily picture news service will not interefere with the weekly film news pictures now so popular.

You will be obliged to hand the poseys over to Vitagraph once again. That company is now producing the stories of James Fenimore Cooper. Scenes are being photographed in the exact locality of the tale. The first story filmed was, "The Deerslayer," which describes the early adventures of the hero of "Leather Stocking Tales." Probably "The Pathfinder," "Last of the Mohicans," and the rest of "Leather Stocking" will be produced. And then after the filming of these stories, we suggest that the accomplished Vitagraph editress, and the directors, turn their attention to Cooper's sea stories. "Wing and Wing," "The Water Witch," and the rest will make pleasing films—having a tang of the salt sea. James Fenimore Cooper is one of the older American authors whose works will live forever. We cannot have too many of his stories produced in a convincing manner.

By the way, we notice that piratical stories are to have a vogue. They will come as a relief to the Civil War drama that has outlived its usefulness. Invariably the Confederates win, although everyone knows that honors were even, and that this end is played up so that the stories will be more popular abroad. Edison, we believe it was Edison, filmed Stevenson's "Treasure Island." We would like to see Edison put "Treasure Island" into about three reels the next time and then, if the "Jolly Rodger" proves popular with the people, follow up "Treasure Island" with R. M. Ballantyne's "Gascoign, the Sandalwood Trader." a corking good piratical story, for the film. Poe's "The Gold Bug" is long on hidden treasure and Conan Doyle has some blood-stirring tales of pirates that can well be utilized. Give us some of the good old stories of Captain Kidd, Blackbeard and the rest, with plenty of piratical craft and rich color. Will Selig or Edison kindly look into the matter?

"The Photoplay Philosopher," of the Motion Picture Story Magazine, wonders what great names of Thespians of Filmland will be left to posterity, and mentions some of the sterling actors of bygone years. We confess we are unable at present to name the Booths and Barretts of Filmdom but we feel sure that G. M. Anderson and Billy Quirk will long be remembered.

A correspondent sends us a tale of woe. She paid good money it seems, for training in a so-called school for picture players. It was a correspondence school, of course. A position was guaranteed upon "graduation," but all the complainant received was a highly-colored diploma. There is no "school for Pictureplayers" worthy of the name. Some of the best actors and actresses in this country are on the reserve lists of the picture studios, and when newcomers are needed the reserves will get the first call. It is a shame that these fakers who conduct "schools for film actors," "schools for script writers," and those who offer to buy song poems and music, are permitted to wax fat through the innocence of men and women. The majority of the ill-gotten gains which flow into the purses of these parasites come from hard-working people who are led to believe that it is the easiest thing in the world to pose in moving pictures, or to write moving picture plays. Neither art can be taught in any "school." Believe us, we are telling you only the truth!

A film censor in Cleveland reported to council that twenty-seven motion picture theatres in "The Sixth City" were a menace to public morals. Samuel Bullock, spokesman for the exhibitors, demanded the names of these theatres so that conditions, if as alleged, could be corrected. It is an outrage that exhibitors are obliged to be unjustly persecuted by mushroom politicians.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO. NOTES

Some jocular comments have been made on the caption which adorns the poster issued in connection with the film made on California's poultry industry by President Hutchinson. The statement beneath the picture, reads: "$10,000 a day income from 100,000 chickens." Certain critics have commented on the enormous number of eggs necessary to maintain such a financial gait and the prolific character of hens essential to such an income. The $10,000 a day, it should be explained represents not only eggs but fancy breeded stock for sale, broilers and fertilizer.

R. D. Armstrong, the America's first scenario editor, is again, after a lapse of almost two years, back on the old job. Mr. Armstrong is one of the best known scenario editors in the business and is the author of a book soon from the press entitled "The Making of a Negative." Mr. Armstrong is sending out a call for good stories for one, two and three-reel stories.

Charles A. Ziebarth, factory superintendent of The American Film Mfg. Co., has perfected a device to automatically time development of positive prints so as to obtain a perfect print. Under the old system the developer was compelled to gauge his own time. The device in question, however, does away with any possibility of error and the result is a print timed to the fraction of a second and therefore perfect. The American has ever been in the vanguard of manufacturers aiming at clear, stereoscopic photography and its reputation will be further enhanced by the automatic timer. Mr. Ziebarth is the inventor.

Despite the season, the arrival of some beautiful costumes at Santa Barbara, in anticipation of a two reel French subject of the Louis XIV period, was the cause of a fancy dress ball given by the American players at the Arlington hotel at Santa Barbara, last week. No one knew the costumes were ordered save Producer Hale and the property man. Hence, no one had seen the other's costume and the result was a fancy dress ball of an elaborate order with the "props" as costumes. Everyone had a good time and Producer Hale's only regret was that the affair occurred at night. Otherwise the ball would have been incorporated in the two-reel now in course of preparation.

The American Film Mfg. Co. is now in a position to offer to exhibitors cuts of popular players, glass slides containing pictures of Kerrigan, Richardson and Miss Lester, handsome lithos of all players, a matrix service where desired, weekly press sheets, etc. Exhibitors are invited to take advantage of the service.

J. C. GRAHAM GOES TO THE UNIVERSAL AS BUSINESS MANAGER

J. C. Graham, for several years prominently known as an exchange man, and identified with the Mutual Film Corporation since its organization, has accepted the business managership of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

In his position with the Mutual Film Corporation, Mr. Graham was in active charge of the concern's exchanges and is widely known as one of the pioneer organizers of exchanges throughout the country. In his new office with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company he will have supervision over the various business departments of the organization, and his position will virtually include the general managership of the company.

Announcement of his acceptance of the offer tendered by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company was made last week by Mr. Graham and officers of the company.

"I have no information to give concerning my intentions regarding my new position," said Mr. Graham. "I intend to work hard for the interests of the company, and, incidentally, the industry as a whole. There are truly wonderful possibilities in the manufacture of motion pictures as yet untouched, and many new avenues of operation will be opened in the near future."

Mr. Graham, before entering the film business, was interested in a large central western lumber company, operating through Missouri and other southern states. Previous to the formation of the Motion Picture Patents Company he entered into a partnership with Mr. Aiken, now with the Majestic Film Company, and an exchange company was organized. Following the operations of the Motion Picture Patents Company, Mr. Graham relinquished his holdings in the St. Louis exchange company, and joined the Mutual Film Corporation as supervisor of exchanges.

He is thoroughly conversant with the technical departments of the industry, as well as the selling branches. His experience has been varied and broad in scope, taking in practically every angle of the manufacturing of pictures, their sale and exhibition.

Mr. Graham will assume his new duties next week, with offices at the general headquarters of the Universal in the Mecca Building at 1600 Broadway.

Miss Louise Glaum, clever leading woman with Nestor's Comedy Company, has joined the New York Motion Picture Corporation and will work in their Kay-Bee and Broncho films, under the direction of Thos. H. Ince.

Adam Kessel, Jr., president of the New York Motion Picture Corporation, has become a yachting devotee. He has purchased a veritable floating palace, named "Orson," and intends cruising with her up to his summer home on Lake Champlain this summer.

RELIANCE DEFEATS POWERS

The Reliance baseball team added another victory to their list, when they defeated Powers by a score of eight to nothing in an exciting game on their home grounds at Lenox Oval, Lenox avenue and 145th street, on Saturday, May 24th.

The two Reliance leading men, Irving Cummings and Alan Hale, showed themselves to be as much at home on the diamond as on the stage and gave new thrills to the matinee girls, who turned out in force to see the actors in the role of baseball players. Sam Smith, who was a baseball player before he became an actor, filled the pitcher's box "to capacity," striking out twelve men and allowing but two hits during the seven innings of play before the game was called on account of rain.

Reliance will play Kinemacolor on Saturday, May 31st, at Lenox Oval, and will meet the Lubin team on the same grounds on Saturday, June 7th. Captain Cummings is putting his men through their paces at every available opportunity as both Kinemacolor and Lubin games promise to be attended by record-breaking crowds, before whom he is anxious to have his team prove their worth.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

The Powers Contest

OUR little inquiry anent the status of the Powers Prize Contest has evidently excited widespread curiosity. Really, we did not wish to stir up anything, we just wished to know, that is all. Editor C. B. Hoadley originated the prize contest a year ago, and all went lovely until the merger of all Universal script departments into one clearing bureau for the Universal Company. Hal Reid took command. You all remember Hal. He was Lord High Executioner, etc., etc., and he also grabbed the responsibilities of the prize script contest out of Hoadley's hands. In due time the winners were announced and the prize money paid. Messrs. Carroll and Armstrong won the big prizes, with a St. Louis physician a close third. To fulfill the contract, the winning scripts were to be produced with the author's name under the firm title.

If we remember correctly, Mr. James Carroll, as first prize winner, posed for the Animated Weekly. Mr. Armstrong then got into a dispute in the columns of The Photoplay Author with "Gorenflot" as to the size of a crucifix to be used in his winning picture. There was intense interest and expectancy. And now every one of those prize-winning scripts have been pigeon-holed; Hal Reid is Universal script editor no more; and the crucifix that Mr. Armstrong submitted with the story has been mislaid somewhere (as is customary with Universal scripts and exhibits). It is claimed that Mr. Armstrong proposes to have that crucifix returned or know the reason why; no director has been yet discovered willing to tackle any of the stories bought and paid for; and the end is not yet.

The Universal Company should carry out all the conditions of that prize contest. It is not enough to assert that the winners were paid and should be satisfied. The world was told that the winning stories would be produced as such with prominent credit to the authors who submitted their work, as did hundreds of others, in good faith. These winning scripts must have merit. If so, it is up to the Universal to produce them and exploit the writers thereof. If the scripts are without merit the Universal, through its then editor, has done a great injustice to others who submitted contest stories that have been since produced, although purchased elsewhere at regular market prices. These prize winners are entitled to know what has become of their work and are justly clamoring for production with their cognomens on the screen as promised. And the moral of the entire situation to script writers is this: Universally avoid prize-winning contests!

Now Vice-President

Mr. Walter MacNamara, formerly of the Universal script staff, has become vice-president of the Phoenix Film Company, a new concern about to be launched on the uncharted seas of Filmdom. He is thinking of going to Ireland to produce some pictures. We look for some big things from MacNamara, for he is a brilliant writer, clever and aggressive.

Improvements Planned

F. Arthur Metcalf, of Springfield, Mass., has taken financial interest in the Photoplay Author and many improvements are planned in the make-up of this lively monthly publication. Homer Croy will grind out human-interest personal sketches of script writers and editors. Croy's copy is invariably good. The May number will necessarily be issued late in the month because of changes in progress, but thereafter the magazine will be issued promptly. Editor Lenendre writes that the publication will be built strictly on merit and that no improper advertising will be carried.

An Appreciated Letter

The letters we receive daily are of all kinds and all designs. There are many readers who pass us kindly words, and they encourage us. Others pass along unkind words and fail to discourage us. Maybe we shall be pardoned for publishing a portion of a letter received from a New Orleans reader:

> "After reading to-day your column in the News, a thought and a feeling has arisen in me on reading prior messages of yours to the tyro in the moving picture field, and has caused me to write these lines. Why is it that these weekly messages lighten up the gloomy spaces in the heart of the disgusted amateur? It is indeed a question of psychology how they affect me.
> "I am a young professional man, with a legal training and associated with prominent men; but I am a 'bum' amateur in the scenario world. Therefore, notwithstanding my other training, I have been beset with all the fears, discouragements and suspicions of the average tyro who tries and fails. I have written—and write—with all my might, but the scripts still come home to roost. With each succeeding failure I propose to quit in disgust, and just at that time the News comes in, and I take up my pen again.
> "I have another occupation to keep me busy and therefore the lucrative end has really been secondary. It is the fascination of achievement, and the intellectual pleasure in developing the imaginative faculties that has prompted me. But with all these actuating motives I have not been immune from despair. I have a little motto: 'Don't start anything you cannot finish,' and I want to put over one script before I quit.
> "I want to state that your weekly bon mots are certainly bracers for the brain-fagged and the disgusted. I thought I would write you to let you know that at least one appreciated your efforts, and believed in the midst of unreasonable suspicions that there was at least one authoritative person who was sincere. And, I might add, that your stand on the question of schools has not a little to do with this opinion, although I have not matriculated myself. I write that your cheery messages have encouraged me to try anew, that I might let you know how I look on them and encourage you in return."

This may be rather a personal letter but we take pardonable pride in it, just the same. If we can encourage the beginner to persevere, we shall not have labored in vain. The motto: "Don't start anything you cannot finish" is indeed a good one and we pass it, and the spirit of the above epistle, along to others.

"Scene Six"

Scene 6 of the "sample script" submitted in this department has created somewhat of a sensation. A few writers think it overdrawn and Will T. Henderson, of Chicago, has pasted it up as a "horrible example." We are assured that "the little girl with crutches picking wild flowers while in prison" is a bonafide scene written into a script submitted to Walter MacNamara. And we pause to remark that there are other scenes just as improbable which reach the editors daily. See that you do not attempt the impossible in some of your scripts!

How She Succeeded

Miss Maibelle Heikes Justice, author of Selig's "Roses of Yesterday" and Cosmopolitan's "The Other Man," has within a few short months risen to an enviable rank in the army of picture playwrights. This week she kindly informs our readers of her methods of work and how she has succeeded:

> "To comply with a request for a review of one's experiences which might be of help to others in the photoplay field, is not always an easy task, for the reason we might say, we cannot tell just where the experience began, and we certainly know it has not yet ended by any means. To my mind, photoplay writing is all experience—even the success is but one phase of it. As the motion picture itself develops and moves to the higher plane it is headed for, so must the playwright keep abreast and help the uplift along. The only way to begin is to learn how—and learn how right. I do not doubt in the least but that there are many good scenario writers in embryo, if they only knew how to 'go about it.' This, however, is the secret of the whole thing. And it is something that must be acquired by one's own self—it cannot be asked of another, because in most cases, every writer has had his own method of working up. Another might not understand the method if it were set before him. Personally, all the experience in photoplay writing I had, was what I had gleaned in watching the pictures on the screen. I noticed that there was a certain individuality in the pictures of almost every film manufacturer—each in some way was different from the other. This puzzled me at first, because I knew that of the many directors employed by each company, that in the production of plays, no two could he of the same individuality—of the same temperament—or have the same conception of an idea. The solution presently came of itself. The scenario editor was back of it. His was the hand at the helm. And it was, in all probability, his selection and discrimination in scripts which decided for the most part, the policy in plays of the manufacturer he represented. Some of the pictures remained with me. Others I forgot as soon as I saw them. With those plays that appealed to me as a lead, I felt I might he able to write something which would please the editors. And so began my work. In almost every instance, since success has come, I have learned that the editorial sanctum is the one to first he pleased. But in no case has an editor ever been found an ogre or the 'terrihle tartar' some script writers take him to he. I can't imagine anything more undignified or ludicrous than to turn ahout and write an editor a hoiling 'letter of exceptions' hecause he has returned a script, or to herate him into thinking he did not know his own joh. If I were such an editor I can imagine myself having a lot of fun all hy myself. Again, personally speaking from an experience I knew nothing about a few months ago, one might say one must enter the photoplay field as a good listener and observer. In silence ahsorb everything that can be ahsorbed. And for the henefit of all coming photoplaywrights this can he said. Scripts are read. They are eagerly read. Recently, I have sat at the side of scenario editors who have since become friends, and while talking, have watched them sift through their mail and go about their work. The editor is there to discover any new hit of genius that comes along. It is only the old plots, the old ideas, the impossible situations—the plagiarisms he is ahle to detect at sight, and occasionally the 'chesty letters' he receives, questioning his own intelligence after a script has heen returned, that causes him to turn with the reproachful query—'What do you think of that?'

"And I don't suppose there is such a thing as profession, creed or color that would prohihit a script from heing accepted, if it was worth it. I know of one which came from an inmate of a penitentiary with an idea as optimistic as a ray of sunshine itself, which did not go back, so it is the script, not the person, not always the reputation, which counts, don't you know? One can make a very good friend of an editor, if one shows the tiniest inclination not to ohtrude upon his time with useless questions, self-opinions and advice to him. It is a far greater pleasure to have an editor 'find you.' He will, if you keep on—put the best ideas you have in your script and learn how to prepare it according to order and technique. Original ideas have heen preached so much that it is not necessary to preach them further—hut without them and the technical manner of presenting them—there is not much show for success. You learn all this only too quickly after you have heen in the work awhile. All have not got the real germ in their systems to hegin with. But as our good friend Mr. Wright says, it is the 'insistent, persistent, consistent plugger who succeeds'—so there is hope for anyone.

"After all, the greatest stimulus to any writer is appreciation. Any honest, earnest effort deserves at least a hearing. This alone will inspire the self-confidence necessary to accomplish things, if it is in anyone's make-up at all, to accomplish them. One has honest admiration for the one who is turned down and bohs up again. I should rather fancy that the photoplaywright will have to he a great deal like the ruhher hall that it is stepped upon—as soon as he gets out from under, hounce on to the next. And let me say right here, either in the literary or photoplay field, it is not the writer who 'knows it all,' who is going to gain success. It is the one who truthfully acknowledges he knows little and is striving to learn more, who is going to play the successful game. A little time and patience will teach much. Then write slower and achieve better work. I really helieve if I wrote as many scripts and received as many rejections as I read of, that when the last came hack and I had it safely within the fold, I should run and hide and never come out again. It is my policy to do less and do good. I believe too, in taking things with a grain of humor. Old King Cole's Army who 'marched right out, turned around, and marched right back again,' knew they didn't belong where they were going—and I fancy a great many scenarios feel the same way, had they the power to protest—before they ever start from home.

"A word about the directors, too. The motion picture studio in full working regalia is one of the most interesting places I have ever heen in. My appreciation also was very keen when the producers permitted me to sit and watch the production of my own plays. Ahout the first thing one ohserves is that the director's job is not that of holding down a feather pillow. He works. One play is not off his hands until another is on. He is often tired and excusahly so. If he is cross the scene often swings that much better. But he is not peeved with the scenario writer. Something has gone wrong with his flock of players. A very amusing episode of the kind occurred recently in one of the big studios. The writer sat at one side on a pile of properties, watching the make-up of one of the scenes of her plays. Presently a mighty rebellion rose in the center of the floor. The producer, wrothy and exasperated, was veritably eating up alive two young actors hecause of their tragic aspect to a hit of comedy. It required hut an instant for the actors to acquire the comedy. It was a hig scene—two cameramen stood abreast filming it—and the whole swung off with acumen. After it was all over, mopping his brow, and with beatific smile, the producer crossed the studio to the writer with the question, 'Did you like that scene?' She certainly did—she 'liked it' enthusiastically, with a glance at the actors. But the director, nevertheless, is a very friendly, get-at-ahle person.

"These are all points mainly, of the outsider looking on the inside. Having heen on the ground in the inception work to see and learn all these things, I grant has been a great advantage, but there is such helpful advice in the many motion picture publications to guide the heginner, that the ambitious writer cannot but profit. The motion picture husiness is a vast industry—with all departments under splendid husiness management; but withal, the scenario author plays a very, very large part. While the field is now limitless, it will he more so. The literary author is being called in to fill the demand and prices for scripts are certainly going up. Indications point to the fact that all film manufacturers will sooner or later include the author's name on the screen in the worthy cases, and that directors will hold as closely as possible to the original script. The field could not be more encouraging for good work. And the pecuniary reward is not the greatest result to he gained. It is the friendly understanding between author, editor and director, all of which must be entailed to produce the perfect picture. There is lots of room on top, for just now, editors tell me, the top is a very wide and roomy place. One point I might yet add. I never yet have been aole to get my synopsis down within the prescrihed 300 words. It is possibly the story-teller's instinct which carries it heyond, and while I have apologized to editors for the overflow, they have so far advised me to 'put in as much as I want.' Additionally, in my scripts, if there are any foot-notes I can append to help a director—such as references to hooks, illustrations of costuming, or locations for exteriors, I never fail to add them."

Mr. Posner's Letter

Mr. George Posner, successful picture playwright, writes us an encouraging letter in which he commends our attitude on the school question and kindly attributes to us the quality of sincerity and "getting right down close to those you are endeavoring to teach." A part of Mr. Posner's letter:

"I commend your aggressive attacks on the fakers in the teaching, producing, yes—and even picture playwriting divisions of the industry; I enthuse over your justifiable attacks on quarrelsome writers; I admire your pluck in exposing the unfair portion of the manufacturers; I applaud your persistency in getting after that most despicable set of grafters, 'the schoolmasters.' There is another class of leechers, however, that has thus far not been driven from cover nor given their deserts—I mean the 'schools for picture play actors,' those who promise their graduates 'immediate employment upon graduation.' To conclude: I agree with you in the following points:

"1. That as a prime requisite for success in picture playwriting, one must possess talent, not tuition fee.

"2. That picture playwriting is an art, and must be treated as such.

"3. That the happy ending to a picture play is not a necessity.

"4. That a picture play need not necessarily contain a moral; story-telling was primarily only a diversion. One would have to search long to find stories in any of the present-day magazines that even profess to teach anything."

Short Sixes

Richard Willis has resigned as script editor for the Universal Pacific Coast branch.

Hal Reid has returned to script writing and is at work on an "Abraham Lincoln" picture.

Vitagraph and Reliance are rejecting half-reel plots. Good ones are hard to obtain.

Mrs. David Miles and Miss Daisy Smith, formerly with Kinemacolor and Kalem script departments, are with Vitagraph scenario staff at Santa Monica, Cal. Both are versatile writers.

Giles R. Warren, formerly script editor for Imp, Lubin, Powers and Victor, has turned his attention to "big stuff" and will be heard from soon. He recently turned down editorial offers from four film companies.

Bernard M. Corbett, hustler for The Motiograph, was born in Massachusetts, also has a tool chest and writes good short stories and scripts.

E. M. Wickes, who writes script lore for The Writer's Magazine, also wrote the song, "He Laid Away a Suit of Gray." He has other good songs to his credit, too.

A bunch of picture plays produced for Comet when Editor Horace Vinton was with that concern, made a big hit in England recently.

JUST GOSSIP

By The Mahoney

Hooray! Hooray!

I've been noticed.

A querist interrogates The Mahoney.

"Do you think it true art, to resort to extravagant gesture and distort your features on the screen, in order to convey the extreme of emotion?"

And The Mahoney answers:

So long as sincerity of purpose is properly depicted, and the ring is true, art is in evidence.

There is no standard keynote for the expression of emotion.

One person entering a room and finding a dead body might scream and shriek with fright, while another would accept the shock without extravagant display.

In stage work, the author is the proper authority and should describe to the portrayer of the character the nature of the temperamental make-up of the person he had in mind when he wrote his story.

In pictures, the camera operator is an important factor in knowing situations, and should always be in close touch with his director—that is, if the director is wise.

He was a fat man. A very fat man. A German. And like most fat men when once settled, resisted being disturbed.

It was on an Eighth avenue trolley. The Mahoney boarded the car at the Circle, and sat down.

Some foreign substance obstructed his "right of way," when the fat man above referred to, in a burst of fright exclaimed:

"Mein butter! Mein butter! Ach Gott! Look oud! You are sitzin on mein butter!"

The Mahoney apologetically removed from the seat a pound brick of "choice creamery" in a very shattered condition, while the fat man scowled.

It is currently reported that "Smiling Pat" has sat on Carl's brick of Cinematography butter and crushed it into an unrecognizable shape.

Of course, this is only rumor.

Ah! Them wuz the happy days!

The chaotic condition of affairs in and around that haven of rest at Eleventh avenue and Forty-third street has occasioned great consternation among The Mahoneys who were wont to gather there.

The desertion of King Baggot, Herbert Brenon and Harold Shaw has, to all appearances, wrecked the ship and a veil of uncertainty seems to envelope that first home of Ed Porter and the "Rex."

Don't worry, boys and girls, the Cinematography soil is too fertile to long remain non-productive. Be of good cheer, for doubtless there will be a captain of industry at the helm who will guide you safely out of the storm into placid waters.

He stood like a statue at the entrance of the Majestic Theatre in Columbus Circle, gazing into space.

A faraway look was in his eyes.

His make-up was immaculate and startling. It was close to the hour for "ringing up" on the matinee. The lobby was empty, save for the elaborate frames displaying the photos of his artists.

One who knew him could readily divine his thoughts. His mind was a prey to memories of past dramatic achievements on his native heath, the boundless prairies of the West, where he was as popular and well beloved as in the later home of his adoption, Brooklyn.

As The Mahoney drew near, the lips of the silent watcher were seen to move:

"Two-thirty and not a soul in sight," muttered he. "It's them darned 'movies'—they've killed every branch of dramatic art!"

The speaker was the redoubtable Corse Payton.

Howard Messmer, for the past three years a notable and talented member of the Essanay forces in Chicago, recently seceded from that company and is now in New York.

Mr. Messmer would be a most valuable accession to any studio having had an extensive dramatic experience prior to his association with the world of motion pictures.

He possesses a striking personality, and is equally efficient in comedy and roles requiring dramatic tenseness. His work and presence are strongly suggestive of Charles Kent, of Vitagraph fame, who has been too little seen of late in that company's releases.

Baseball excitement is running high. Kinemacolor game at the Reliance-Lenox Oval, Saturday at 3 p. m., with Lubin to follow on June 7th. And the Lady Giants want a game!

Director Lawrence McGill is making a specialty of children and dog stories. "The Dream Home," released on June 16th, has the following interesting juvenile cast: Runa Hodges, Rosanna Logan, Clifford Perry, Viola Siddone, Helen Conelly, Gladys Eagan and Hazel and Alberta Perry, all well under the ten-year mark, with the two rival dog actors, Peggy Apfel (Rowdy) and Gypsy McGill well in the foreground.

Oscar C. Apfel has the ground plans completed for a three-reel starring vehicle to introduce Rosemary Theby as a Reliance standard bearer. "The Tangled Web" is the name of the drama which will be released on June 28th.

Thomas Mills and Irene Hunt will be seen as the two crooks in "Wallingford's Wallet," which will be presented on June 21st. Edgar Lewis is responsible for the stage direction of the drama.

Rodman Law is on his way to St. John, N. B., where he will find the highest spot above the St. Johns' Falls from which he can slide down a rope and plunge into the raging waters as the hero of a coming Reliance drama. Edgar Lewis, with a company of Reliance players and four camera men, will join him there in the near future.

The convict ship scenes for the two-reel dramatization of "Half a Chance," the well-known novel by Frederick Isham, were taken on the old convict ship "Success," built in 1790, which is now moored in the Hudson River. The result lends a particularly happy realism to the drama which would have been impossible under ordinary circumstances.

CHERRY KEARTON ANIMAL PICTURES AN EDUCATIONAL SENSATION

An unusual series of animal pictures, with many startling educational and sensational features, are now being presented on the state right basis by Adolph Zukor, who has organized the Arab Amusement Company, to exploit these rare films. The pictures were secured by Capt. Cherry Kearton, who stands pre-eminent as the greatest living explorer of the jungle and the world's most daring animal photographer, after years of unremitting labor, severe hardship and privation. Captain Kearton has devoted his life to a diligent study of the beasts of the universe, and the results of this vast knowledge and experience are recorded in these motion pictures.

The series comprise a wide range, covering a complete review of zoölogical life, from an ant to an elephant. Captain Kearton secured these views from opportune vantage point, at obvious peril of life and limb, thus obtaining the most natural reproductions possible of the lion, the tiger, the ourang-outang, and many other beasts of the jungle, not a few of the pictures being the first ever taken with a motion picture camera.

But perhaps the most thrilling reel of the whole set is that one devoted to the native lion hunt in the heart of the African jungle. On the screen are seen Captain Kearton and a little band of naked savages attacking at top speed the so-called king of beasts, unaided by the white hunter's modern resources or the high-powered rifle, in native fashion subduing and spearing the infuriated beast. Captain Kearton evidently risked his life to bring these thrilling scenes, with all their movement and dramatic value, before the eyes of the civilized world, and incidentally secured the most remarkable animated photographs of the noted warrior race of Africa, the Masai, hunting and spearing lions as their ancestors have done before them for a thousand years, armed only with spear and shield.

A THRILLING SCENE FROM THE CHERRY KEARTON ANIMAL PICTURES

But Africa alone has not been his field. In Borneo he has penertated the jungle and taken moving pictures of the ourang-outang, the nearest approach to man, swinging seventy feet high amid the trailing rotan vines—the first motion picture ever taken of this interesting cousin of the human family. In India he has made a twenty-days' trip on an elephant's back, bringing away with him films of surpassing interest, obtaining a wonderfully close view of a tiger from behind a screen of leaves, as well as a remarkable picture of a python, the largest reptile in the world, measuring thirty feet in length.

But it is not always the big game that has attracted him while in the wilds of the jungle. The intimate life of birds and reptiles, and even insects, he has caught; chameleons of new species, ants and bees, and even a caterpillar during its metamorphosis into a chrysalis, a revolution which is consummated in exactly forty seconds, and which required six years of constant vigilance to record in motion pictures.

These films were enthusiastically endorsed by Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt, America's most distinguished hunter of big game, who personally appeared at the Playhouse in New York City several months ago to introduce Captain Kearton to his first American audience. Colonel Roosevelt met Captain Kearton in the jungle on his last hunting expedition, and became greatly interested in Captain Kearton's work, of which he voiced the following unstinted approval:

"In moving pictures of wild life there is a great temptation to fake, and the sharpest discrimination must be employed in order to tell the genuine from the spurious. With regard to Mr. Kearton's work, my attention was particularly directed toward it because of its absolute honesty. If he takes a picture, it may be guaranteed as straight. With regard to his pictures of the Masai warriors in East Africa, I can personally vouch for their fidelity to the actuality. His views of the charging lion, in which several natives are trampled and torn by the infuriated beast, are wonderful—really wonderful! It is a really phenomenal record of a really phenomenal feat, and I congratulate Mr. Kearton with all my heart on what he has done."

The films are endorsed by the American Museum of Natural History, the New York Zoölogical Society, the National Geographic Society, and the American Museum at Washington.

In a few years, owing to the swift advance of civilization on the great plains of British and German East Africa, the vast herds of wild animals will soon have disappeared; the elephant is already doomed; the lion will soon be seen only behind the cages of the zoölogical gardens, and the rhinoceros and hippopotami will be remembered only by the pictures of their uncouth shapes in natural histories. It is of tremendous interest to posterity that concerted and well-directed efforts are now being made to record and exhibit these animals alive, unwounded and roaming in their natural haunts, with reproduced realism in moving pictures. The films are entertaining and instructive, and are entirely in keeping with Adolph Zukor's purpose to present educational and inspiring subjects at a nominal cost.

REAL LIFE PICTURE CO. ENTERS FIELD

Samuel Sheindelman and Alfred A. Grundy, inventors of the Real Life Talking Pictures, gave demonstrations all last week at the Berkeley Theatre, Forty-fourth street, near Sixth avenue, New York City.

Many prominent managers from all over the country were in attendance. They state that plans for a large studio to cost $100,000, siutated in Brooklyn, N. Y., have been accepted.

Steve Porter, the world-famous talking machine record-maker, is affiliated with this concern in the capacity of chief director. He will also appear on the screen in one or more of the six weekly releases which will be the output of the Real Life Picture Co., Inc.

Upwards of one hundred subjects, consisting of both operatic and popular song numbers, and comedy and dramatic talking sketches, are ready.

HEARTH LIGHTS

By VIRGINIA WEST

THE garden of the old country home of the Nortons lay in flaming grandeur under the autumn sunlight. The chrysanthemums, asters, dahlias, and all the old-fashioned flowers of late summer were filling the place with indescribable richness of color. That the garden fence and the out-buildings were in a sad state of decay made no difference. The worm-eaten pillars of the porch and the sagging shutters were not even seen by the beauty lover. In fact, these things added to the scene. All who passed the place invariably stopped and exclaimed, "What a beautiful old place! What must it have been thirty years ago!"

But to Paul Norton and his mother, although they dearly loved the old place, the beauty that it still retained was not sufficient to hide the fact that the house and garden and everything else were so rapidly decaying that soon they would be past reclaiming.

But this was their home—their only home. Long ago they had been obliged to give up their apartment in town and live the year round in the old house.

"I don't mind for myself, mother," Paul had said. "It is to me the most beautiful place in the world, even if it is going to ruin. I can get all kinds of inspirations here. But I know you must get lonely with me at my pictures all the time."

"No, dear, with you near me I am never lonely," was the mother's reply. "But I feel that you ought to be in town where your pictures could be seen. Oh, dear," she finished, "I wish your father had left you something besides an artistic temperament."

"Never mind, mother," laughed Paul, "it will all come out right in the end, I am sure. I have faith in my own talent, and I know that it must win. In the meantime, we must get the very most out of this old place that we possibly can while it lasts."

And so they lived on in the same way. In winter they sat in the spacious living room with the old fireplace piled high with cracking logs, and in summer the garden was the favorite spot.

Often Paul took long tramps over the hills and through the fields and woods, stopping now and then to chat with some of his humble country neighbors.

One day in the early autumn of which we speak, he came home from one of his walks with great news for his mother.

"Kent Rankin is visiting at the Marvins," he informed her breathlessly. "He is an artist himself, although he hasn't yet won recognition any more than I have. But he is rich and knows all the people of wealth and influence. I've met Old Man Marvin and I'm going to pocket my pride and go over there with a picture."

"But, my son——"

"Never mind, mother. I must do it. I want to exhibit in the spring and I must meet all the people I can who might do me any good. I'm going. Now, come help me to select a picture to take along."

The mother obeyed and protested no more.

"Good luck to you, my boy," she whispered as she bade him good-bye.

The young artist had chosen as the picture to show his distinguished neighbors, a group of children wading in a sun-lit brook.

The Marvin country house was about a half mile away, and there Paul walked with his picture, his heart beating a little abnormally.

"Mr. Marvin and Miss Marvin and Mr. Rankin are just leaving for town but I'll tell them you are here," a servant informed him.

Paul's hopes sank a little, but meeting them for a moment was better than not seeing them at all, he thought.

"I am Paul Norton. You were acquainted with my father, I believe," began Paul when Mr. Marvin appeared.

"Why, yes, I remember your father. He was a fine man, but not much business head—not much business head," the elder man replied. Then, as his daughter and young Ranken came onto the porch, "This is my daughter, Mr. Norton, and this is Mr. Kent Rankin, the artist."

"We are neighbors," explained Paul, "and as I knew Mr. Marvin had known my father, I thought we should be acquainted. I have wanted to call all summer but I have been very busy."

"What is your work, Mr. Norton?" asked Marvin.

"I paint, and I took the liberty of bringing a picture with me." Paul brought his picture from where he had placed it in the corner of the porch.

"That is very pretty, indeed," Mr. Marvin remarked. "I think I recognize that spot."

Rankin looked with a critical smile. "Rather pretty subject. The lighting is rather difficult for a beginner, though, I should say. But don't be discouraged, my boy, you will probably make greater progress later on."

"Pardon me," Paul replied in a low, dignified tone, "I am neither a beginner nor discouraged. I am an artist, and I know it. Unfortunately, in this part of the world a man's work is not taken on its merits alone."

Rankin stared for a moment and then turned away to light a cigarette.

"Come, we must be starting," Mr. Marvin announced. "The car is waiting. You will excuse us, Mr. Norton? Sorry you didn't come earlier."

Marvin and Rankin started for the car, but Ula Marvin stayed behind and spoke to Paul.

"Oh, Mr. Norton," she exclaimed, half embarrassed, "I want to tell you what I think of your picture. It is beautiful. The lights and shadows are perfect. The sunlight on that little girl's hair is wonderful. Every one of the children seem alive. You must love children, don't you?"

"Yes, I do love them. I thank you, Miss Marvin, more than I can put into words, for your opinion. It is very sweet to hear you give it without bias or prejudice."

"Ula!"

"Oh, father is calling. Good-bye, Mr. Norton. I am sorry we did not meet before. I wish you very great success. Please take this for good luck."

She placed a white rose in Paul's hand, which he discreetly slipped into his coat pocket before going with her to the car.

As he went along a path by the side of the road Paul's feelings were very mixed. He was happy and yet he was sad. His heart beat rapidly at sight of the rose and thought of Ula, but he felt depressed when he remembered Kent Rankin's words. He knew perfectly well that it was only jealousy on the part of the other artist, but his pride was hurt.

However, he continued to work in his quiet home, with ever-increasing force. With the picture of the girl he had seen but once ever before his mind, he seemed to have a new inspiration.

One day, in the late fall, Paul received a letter from Kent Rankin which gave him a great surprise. He stated that he wished to purchase several small outdoor scenes. Paul was pleased and quickly forgave Rankin his unjust criticism of several months before. He packed and sent him three small pictures, charging the absurdly small sum of twenty-five dollars apiece for them. But, he told his mother, it was better to do that and be sure of a good beginning.

Constantly, in reading the newspapers, Paul saw the names of Ula Marvin and Kent Rankin together. This meant but one thing to him. He knew he had no right to resent it, and yet he did resent it with all his heart.

During the long winter months Paul took many long tramps around the country. Often his mind was restless and walking was the best thing for him.

One day, in the late afternoon of a cold day, he was returning from a walk when he saw at the side of the road near his home an automobile apparently without an occupant. When he came up close to the car in passing he saw something move under a bundle of robes. He stopped. Then he saw that it was a woman.

"Pardon me, madam," he said, "Can I be of any assistance to you?"

"Oh, please," said a voice from the depths of the robes, "I am nearly frozen. I've been sitting here for ever so long waiting for James. He went for gasoline and I'm afraid he has gotten to drinking. He does sometimes."

"Why, it's Miss Marvin!" exclaimed Paul, unable to keep the joy from his voice.

"Oh, Mr. Norton, I'm so glad it's you. You will tell me what to do."

"Indeed I will. You will come right home with me and get thawed out. My mother is there and she will make you some tea."

As Ula arose, Paul saw that she was stiff from the cold. Without a word he leaned forward and gathered her in his arms. It is only a short distance to my home," he assured her when she protested.

After Mrs. Norton had given the girl some hot tea and made her comfortable on a couch by the fire, she left the two young people alone.

Soothed by the pleasant warmth, Ula fell asleep, and as she slept Paul sat in the shadow and watched the flickering firelight playing over her face and hair.

"What a beautiful picture that would make," he thought, and gradually the thought grew upon him until it amounted to an inspiration. "I must paint it," he said aloud.

Ula awoke. "Oh, I didn't mean to go to sleep. Pardon me."

"Instead, I will thank you," Paul replied, "for you have given me an inspiration for a beautiful picture."

Then he told her what he saw and how he wished to make his painting. "I shall call it 'Hearth Lights,'" he said.

"Oh, begin it now and I shall stay right here on this couch and be your model," cried the girl enthusiastically. "Would you like that?"

"More than anything in the world, but——"

"Well?"

"I am afraid Mr. Rankin would not like it."

"Mr. Rankin?"

"Yes. He has the right to object, has he not?"

"You mean that I am engaged to him?"

"Yes."

"I am not."

"Not engaged to Kent Rankin? Thank God!"

Ula sat up and looked at Paul in astonishment. Instantly he was on his knee beside the couch. "Forgive me," he pleaded. "I know I had no right to say that, but now that you know, I must say what is in my heart. I love you. I have seen you but once before, but I love you. Your face has been constantly before me since the day you gave me the rose. Forgive me, I cannot help it. What can you say to me?"

She did not speak for so long a time that Paul looked up into her eyes.

"Ula!" he cried, can I be right in what I seem to see in your eyes?"

"Yes, I love you."

His arms were around her and he held her close for a moment. Then he drew back and said almost bitterly: "But what right have I to make love to a woman. I am practically penniless. I must not see you again."

Ula laughed. "Never mind that, but get to work on your picture now," she told him.

Paul obeyed her and by noon the next day his picture was far enough along to enable him to do without a model.

The next day the sober and repentant James drove the car with Miss Marvin in it back to the city.

Paul worked with a light heart. He was no nearer the goal, but somehow the road seemed very bright.

A very few days after the completion of "Hearth Lights," the young artist was greatly surprised by a visit from Rankin.

"I came to look around and see what you have for sale. I am looking for a picture for my library—something striking and unusual," Paul was informed.

He showed Rankin what he had on hand. Rankin passed the pictures by without comment until he reached "Hearth Lights." He stood in silence for a while. Paul watched his face and knew that he admired the picture more than he was willing to admit.

"I'll give you two hundred dollars for that," he said, patronizingly.

Paul knew that the picture was worth much more, but he also knew the advantage of having a really fine picture in the house of a wealthy man where other wealthy men would see it. So he let the picture go at Rankin's price.

A few days later Paul received from Ula a newspaper clipping announcing a contest to be held by a certain club to secure a painting for its gallery. The prize was to be five thousand dollars.

Immediately Paul thought of "Hearth Lights," but it was too late. He had nothing that would do to enter, so the only think left was to paint something. This he did, and entered it in the contest.

Paul knew that his entry was not worthy of him, still, when he entered the exhibit room and saw it in an obscure corner, he was bitterly disappointed. He seated himself near his picture and waited for Ula. He knew that she would look for his picture.

At last Ula came. Paul watched her from where he sat. When he saw the expression of disappointment that came over her face upon seeing his picture, he remained in his corner without making his presence known. Ula walked disconsolately away.

Paul was about to go, hurt far more by Ula's disappointment in him than in the placing of his picture.

As he was crossing the main gallery his attention was attracted to a small crowd gathered at the other end. Some one was speaking in a loud voice. Paul heard two words that drew him to the spot—"Hearth Lights." Then he heard Ula's voice say, "I know it is Paul Norton's for I posed for it myself."

In a moment the gallery was in an uproar. In the confusion a man pressed past Paul and he felt something pushed into his hand. He looked and found that it was a check for five thousand dollars, made to Kent Rankin. But that gentleman had disappeared.

Paul went to the manager of the contest, who was standing near, and showed him the check. "Who are you, please?" Paul was asked.

"I am Paul Norton."

"Is there anyone here to identify you?"

By that time Ula and her father had realized the full situation.

"Yes, this is Mr. Paul Norton," said Mr. Marvin. "Surely there will be no trouble about the matter. My daughter posed for him for that picture, and the fact that Rankin gave him the check and has disappeared is proof of his guilt."

"You are right, Mr. Marvin. The matter is soon adjusted. In a moment the check was changed and Paul's name placed on the announcement of the prize winner.

"Come home with us, Mr. Norton," said Mr. Marvin, cordially. And Ula quietly slipped her hand into Paul's, unconscious of the watching crowd.

HARSTN BRINGS CHARGES—LOSES SUIT

On Monday, May 19th, Mr. Justice Schmuck at Special Term of the City Court rendered a decision in favor of General Film Company in the suit brought against it by Alfred Harstn, a former employee. Harstn had refused to leave the premises of General Film Company at 219 Sixth Avenue and, in connection with Alfred Weiss and Herman Smidt, claims that he was forcibly ejected, as a result of which he became "sick, sore and bruised" to the extent of two thousand dollars ($2,000).

Harstn's statement of his troubles was embodied in seventeen paragraphs, but Mr. Justice Schmuck held that ten of them were so scandalous and irrelevant that they must be struck out, and in addition ten (10) dollars costs imposed. Mr. D. O'L. Cohalan appeared for General Film Company and Mr. Hoffman for Harstn.

Two alligators, a canary, a dog and a parrot are the pets of Miss Julia Swayne Gordon, the well-known Vitagraph player. At the studios she made great friends with Prince, the tiger, and Nero, the Nubian lion, with both of which she will soon be seen on the screen. The titles of the plays will be "The Lion's Bride" and the "Tiger Lily."

MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

"Please bear in mind that an invention is something an inventor creates and adds to the wealth of the world. He goes to the clouds for his inspiration, but before the world gets any real benefit he must shed quarts of perspiration. Suppose we look to the future. There are numbers of people that believe we have everything invented that is likely to be invented, and many seem to desire to take away from the successful inventor the fruits of his labor. But we must look to the future and to the inventors that are yet to come and to decide what is best business policy to be adopted on behalf of the Government in remaking the patent laws. I would like to give you an imaginary instance. Suppose some chemist somewhere has been working for the last 5 or 10 years, perhaps living on bread and milk, in order to find a tablet which he can put in a quart of water to make a quart of milk. If such a tablet could be bought in every corner store for 4 cents per tablet a man could make milk at 4 cents a quart which now costs him 8 cents. The public saves 4 cents a quart. Are you ready to say that that inventor or assignee should not get all the millions that he may make out of his invention, even though his tablet may not cost him a quarter of a cent? Are you not ready to hold out to the inventors of the future the hope that whenever they give us a complete new invention, they shall have everything out of it without any dispute as to how much profit they make out of it for 17 years? Is it not a fundamental principle that for every million dollars the owner of a patent gets the public gets more than a million? Are you not ready even to permit such an inventor to take out a dozen alternative patents and pigeonhole them if he wishes to do so? But there seems to be great jealousy for the man that happens to make a million dollars. I am a little jealous myself. But nevertheless, on the basis of a patent law, it strikes me that the United States Government should be more liberal rather than less liberal. The provisions of this bill certainly are a great deal less liberal to the inventor than the patent law we have to-day. I think it would pay the Government to offer greater inducements rather than less." Congressman Danforth of New York on the Oldfield Bill.

In the matter of the appeal in the case of Uebed v. Zialcita, from the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, to the Supreme Court of the United States, the latter held that one whose trade-mark is manifestly an imitation of an earlier but unregistered trade-mark cannot restrain a third party from using such mark, and that imposition on the public is not a good ground on which the plaintiff can come into court, but it is a very good ground for keeping him out. In the course of the decision, Mr. Justice Holmes, who delivered the opinion of the Court, said: "With or without right, the earlier trade-mark was in widespread use and well known, and the obvious intent and necessary effect of imitating it was to steal some of the good-will attaching to it and to defraud the public."

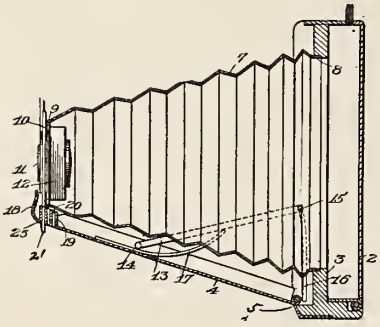
In the case of Theodore W. Foster & Bro. Co. v. Tilden-Thurber Company, the Circuit Court of Appeals, First Circuit, Circuit Judges Colt, Putnam and Dodge, decision by Justice Dodge, has affirmed the decree of the District Court and held that a patent may be granted for a design although its ornamental character consists merely in a new and original shape given to an article of manufacture. In the District Court the patent was held valid and infringed. The decision of the Circuit Court goes on to say that the record contains evidence tending to show that the patented design has been found acceptable in a trade where attractiveness of appearance is a matter of importance. The District Court thought this evidence sufficient for the conclusion that the design shows a patentable degree of artistic invention "and we are of the same opinion."

The Kraft and Stendel Fabrik Photographischer Papiere Gesellschaft Mit Beschrankter Haftung, Dresden, Germany, has been granted registration No. 91,584 for "CELLOFIX" as a trade-mark for sensitized photographic paper, etc., claiming use of mark since Feb. 8th, 1906.

lack of light for the suitable projection of motion pictures on the curtain can find no legitimate excuse these days. Within the last forty years the possibilities of artificial illumination have developed from 54,000 candle-power to 3,000,000 candle-power. That is to say, in 1873, when oil lights were used in light-houses, the highest power was equal to 54,000 candles. In 1883, when the electric light was introduced, the power rose to a maximum of 820,000 candles. Since then improvements in electric lighting have been so rapid that the most powerful light-houses are now able to project an illumination exceeding 3,000,000 candles, and the end is not yet. So give us ample light. The game is worth the candle-power.

The Societe "Savola Film" of Turin, Italy, has been granted registration No. 91,612 for the accompanying Trade-Mark for Moving Picture Films, Machines for Taking, Projecting, Printing and Perforating Moving Picture Films, used since April 6, 1911. Exclusive right to "Savola Film Torino" is disclaimed.

A folding pocket camera of light, compact structure is the object of John Linder, of Deer Park, Washington, as set forth in Letters Patent No. 1,060,610, issued to the Eastman Kodak Co., assignee. The accompanying view is a sectional elevation showing the parts in extended position. It comprises a box portion 1, a back 2, through which access is obtained to a chamber 3 for the sensitized material and a door 4 at the front, hinged at 5, and serving, when extended, as the camera bed. A bellows 7 is connected at its rear end 8 to the body 1 to fold within the latter when the camera is shut, and connected at its outer end, as at 9, to a front 10 that folds against the bellows, to allow the lens barrel 11, together with its associated shutter casing 12, to be housed within the body. The bed 4 is maintained in extended position by a link 13 pivoted thereto at 14 and having its free end provided with a projection 15 traveling in a slot 16 in a wall of the body with the link in a braced position under the influence of a leaf spring 17. At its forward end, in rear of lip 18, is a block 19, pierced by a plurality of slots 20. The front 10 constitutes a lens board which has an extension 21 forming a stem adapted to fit the sockets 20. The purpose in providing a plurality of sockets is to permit changes in the position of the front for altering the focus of the camera according to the distance of the object from the lens.



Some time ago we had occasion to note the advent of M. Dussaud's "Cold Light." Consul General Mason, of Paris, has something to say in this connection that is of interest. Speaking of the innovation he says the light is now being utilized on a commercial scale by La Société Internationale de Lumière Froide, whose office is at 27 Rue Mogador, in Paris. It is well known that electric lamps when subjected to a higher voltage than that for which they are designed are unduly heated and soon burn out and become useless. Mr. Dussaud found that if a lamp adapted to a certain voltage were subjected to a current of higher intensity during a fraction of a second, and then, by breaking the current, the lamp is allowed to rest for an equal period of time, it not only produces a light of greatly increased brilliancy, but the lamp itself remains cool and does not deteriorate. Working on this idea, he has apparently succeeded in perfecting a system by which, for example, a current of 16 volts is passed through a lamp intended for 8 volts, with 16 interruptions of the current per second, with the result that the lamp itself remains entirely cool and incapable of igniting by contact a substance so inflammable as a Cinematograph film. What is still more important, the lamp remains uninjured and produces a light far more intense than could be generated by a 16-volt lamp used with a current of the same degree. The fact that the lamp does not overheat is of great importance in Cinematograph practice or for other projections, as it permits the light to be safely placed close to the lens, thus increasing greatly the clearness and sharpness of the picture on the screen. An ingenious arrangement for Cinematographs consists in an adjustment by which the current interrupter is geared to the film reel, thus timing the extinction of the lamp with the passage before the lens of the blank spaces on the film between pictures, so that the momentary interruptions of the light becomes imperceptible and the projections on the screen practically continuous. It is thought that this system can be applied with advantage to rotary electric lanterns for lighthouses, as a greatly intensified light can be obtained with a diminished current during the period when the lens faces the sea, while the lamp rests during the remainder of its revolution. Other valuable applications claimed for "cold light" are for navy and military searchlights and for photography, in which it would replace the magnesium flash with its suffocating fumes and other disadvantages.

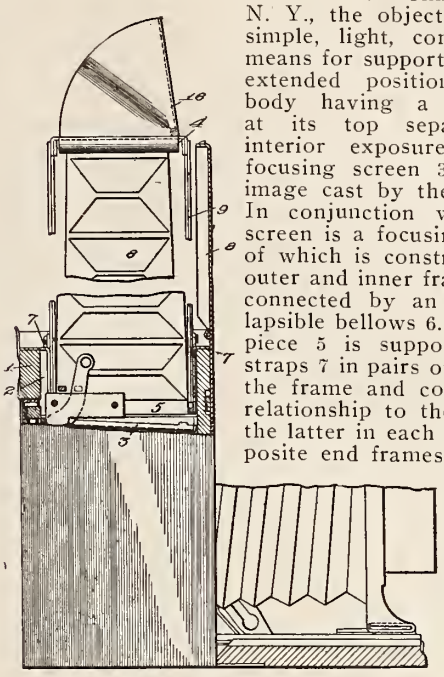
one, neither Sir Hiram Maxim of noiseless gun fame, nor anyone else so far as we are aware, has succeeded in producing a silent Cinematographic projector, much to the annoyance of auditors, particularly those (usually of the female persuasion) who like to hear themselves anticipate the pictures by several yards, or otherwise audibly prognosticate or criticise the reel for the benefit (?) of unfortunate adjacents. The orchestra ought to have the right of way during the unwind—otherwise "silence is golden." Eye and ear should be in harmonious synchrony—the incongruous rattle of machine or adlepate is disconcerting. A muffler is needed for both.

In the entire German Empire there are, including the traveling shows, about 2,000 motion picture theatres. Paris has 200 such establishments, which are visited on each Sunday by about 100,000 people. London has about 400 and the rest of England 2,500. New York is stated to have 470 and the nine largest cities of the United States more than 1,400 motion picture theatres, whose annual consumption of new films costs about $17,000,000, with receipts of about $55,000,000.

The accompanying view is a side elevation of a camera partly broken away to show the focusing hood which forms the subject matter of Letters Patent 1,060,834, issued to the Eastman Kodak Company as the assignee of the inventor, William F. Folmer, of Rochester, N. Y., the object being to provide simple, light, compact, yet strong means for supporting the hood in its extended position. 1 is a box body having a focusing well 2 at its top separated from the interior exposure chamber by a focusing screen 3 upon which the image cast by the lens is reflected. In conjunction with the focusing screen is a focusing hood, the body of which is constructed of opposite outer and inner frame pieces 4 and 5 connected by an intermediate collapsible bellows 6. The lower frame piece 5 is supported upon stirrup straps 7 in pairs on opposite sides of the frame and connected in spaced relationship to the adjacent side of the latter in each instance. The opposite end frames 4 and 5 are connected for relative movement in a manner permitting the hood to be collapsed or folded within the focusing well beneath a suitable cover 8 therefor, or supported rigidly in an extended position by means of a system of pivoted levers 9 that constitute lazy-tongs, the free end members having slot and pin connections with the frame pieces. Simple means are provided for locking the lazy-tongs 9 in extension to support the hood and eye-piece 16 in position for use. In its collapsed position, the hood and its supports, including the eye-piece, are readily accommodated within a relatively shallow focusing well and being of a unitary structure, distinct from the body of the camera, the device can be assembled conveniently and then attached bodily to the camera at any stage of the latter's construction.



We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of The Moving Picture News.

THE KING CAN DO NO WRONG
Rex (3 Reel) Release June 12th.

FROM THE EDISON STUDIO

Marc MacDermott's first message after arriving in England is one of despair. Wonderful actor though he undoubtedly is, he is a rank failure as a sailor, for poor MacDermott was deathly sick. All went well the first day out but then he "ate something that did not agree with him" (we have heard that one before, Marc) and prayed for sudden death all the rest of the way over. MacDermott wrote that he had always loved his native England but that it had never looked so good to him before.

Charles M. Seay has left the Edison studio for an extended trip through the South, where he will make his headquarters in Rome, Ga. With the director are Mabel Trunnelle, Bliss Milford, Herbert Prior, Harry Beaumont and Arthur Housman. They will make a number of films, using places of historical interest as settings.

Few pages in English history are more interesting and romantic than the struggle between Mary, Queen of Scots, and the great Elizabeth for the possession of the English throne. The three-reel Edison subject, "Mary Stuart," portrays exquisitely the closing incidents in the unfortunate Mary's career.

"The Twin Brothers," shortly to be released by Edison, stands unique among all films. There have been other releases in which the same man appeared on the screen as two different characters at the same time, but in this one Augustus Phillips, who plays the part of both brothers, actually shakes hands with himself and snatches a picture out of his own hand! The illusion is perfect. The story itself is not sacrificed to photographic wizardry. however, but relates a tale of self-sacrifice.

At a recent performance in the 69th Regiment Armory, New York, Edward O'Connor, the Edison comedian, told a story about a parrot who could talk five languages. The story made a hit and O'Connor was loudly applauded. The next speaker was another motion picture actor and, to the intense delight of the audience, he began the same story! As soon as it was apparent that he was telling the story over again, his hearers began to laugh and the actor, greatly encouraged by this demonstration, spread himself and elaborated the details, drawing out his triumph to the fullest extent. When he finished, the audience was in convulsions and he retired smiling and bowing, convinced that he had made the hit of the evening. His parrot spoke seven languages.

The California situation has revived the Yellow Peril talk concerning the Japanese, but Ben Wilson owns the only original article in the shape of a yellow racing roadster which he purchased shortly after his return from California. With all the pride of new ownership, Wilson continually "hits it up" until he has terrorized the nervous mothers in the neighborhood of the Edison studio.

William Wadsworth has just received a letter asking if he is connected with a family of the same name. The writer states that she is anxious to locate her stepson and that the Edison comedian strongly resembles him, on the screen at least. Several adventurous spirits at the studio urged "Waddie" to claim the relationship for the fun of it and "see what was in it," but he declared that romance was not in his line.

Mabel Trunnelle does a beautiful piece of impersonation in "Love's Old Sweet Song," in which she plays the part of a girl whose mind is affected by the reported death of her lover. When he returns she does not know him but shrinks from him in terror until the familiar strains of the beloved old song reawaken her memories of the past and lift the cloud from her mind.

POWER'S CALIFORNIA NEWS

Director Harry Matthews, of the Powers Photo Plays, Inc., has taken all the big scenes in "Sleeping Beauty," one of the finest fairy picture plays ever produced. Mr. Matthews has taken full advantage of his opportunities of putting on big scenes full of life and color. The christening of little Beauty makes a wonderful scene and there are some mightily pretty bits in the courts of the different fairies who come to do homage to the baby and to present their fairy gifts. Mr. S. S. Norton, who has been Mr. Matthews' photographer and camera man for so long, tells me that "Sleeping Beauty" will surpass both "Snow White" and "Beauty and the Beast," which Mr. Matthews did for the Universal. This means some fine pictures.

Elsie Albert makes an engaging Beauty, and a pretty one withal. Little Early is a delightful little Fairy Sunbeam, and other good parts are in the hands of Joe Burke, Charles Manley and Allan Forrest, Mr. Matthews' new juvenile lead.

Director J. Farrell Macdonald, of the Powers Photo Plays, Inc., has just finished a beautiful photoplay in "Pagliacci," one of the classics which lend themselves to picture play treatment. The settings and properties are beautiful in the extreme and the acting quite beyond reproach—an all-star cast, in fact. The famous English actress, Constance Crawley, Arthur Maude, Joe Harris, Edith Bostwick and other good people fill the parts, and fill them well. Altogether a notable production.

Mr. Macdonald is now producing "Francesca da Rimini" with the same actors and actresses, and another great production may be looked for. The Powers Photo Plays, Inc., are certainly putting on a class of plays which should earn for them a great reputation.

Mr. J. A. Crosby, of the J. A. C. Film Manufacturing Company of Los Angeles, is turning out some fine films as well as doing much laboratory work for the other studios. In a recent drama, directed by Frank E. Woods and entitled "The Strong and the Weak," some excellent performances were given. Natalie de Lontan took the female lead, Louis W. Chaudet took a dual role capably, Richard Willis was the father, and Carl Von Schiller was good as the son. The sets were excellent and the whole play well produced.

Charles Manley, of the Powers Photo Plays, Inc., was quite badly hurt recently whilst attending a picnic. Mr. Manley was induced to enter a running race and fell, which is not surprising when one remembers that he is eighty-three years of age. He has nearly recovered and is in the cast of "Sleeping Beauty."

SCOTT'S RECORD AT LYRIC

The motion picture records of Captain Robert Falcon Scott's thrilling adventures to the South Pole will be the attraction at the Lyric Theatre, beginning Monday, June 2.

Captain Scott was the first explorer to make photography an important department in such an expedition, and therefore for the first time the world is able to observe the daily routine of intrepid pole hunters. Then, too, he was fortunate in obtaining the services, as photographic artist, of Robert G. Ponting, F.R.G.S., who had already illustrated some thirty different lands and acted as war correspondent with the Japanese army.

NATHAN HALE (3 Reels).—Hale is discovered teaching school when he hears of the battle of Lexington and the call to arms. He enlists and is next seen in the camp of Revolutionists. At school he made an enemy of the town bully, Seth Brown, which later is his undoing.

General Washington, desiring information as to the number and condition of the British troops, calls for a spy. Hale offers to go, dressed as a country school teacher, inside the British lines. He secures the desired facts for Washington, but is seen and betrayed by Seth Brown, who has joined the British. He is captured, the papers found on him, and is condemned to be hung without trial. Later we see his newly made grave with an old man mourning for the brave youth.

The picture ends with a view of Nathan Hale's statue in City Hall Park, New York, and the subtitles, "137 Years Later, Lest We Forget."

This is a great historical picture, official records having been consulted for all action and subtitles. It shows both American and British camps, and the celebrated picture, "The Spirit of '76" is reproduced in this film.

THE BERNESE OBERLAND, SWITZERLAND.—1. The Kursaal Interlaken. This is one of the finest buildings of its kind in Switzerland. A floral clock in the beautiful gardens is photographed—a very pretty picture.

2. The Jungfrau. At the foot of this imposing mountain haymakers are at work, and the scene is most artistic.

3. The Lauterbrunnen Valley and the Lauterbrunnen Falls. An electric train passing. A distant view of the Jungfrau.

4. Murren, a charming village situated on a terrace high above the Lauterbrunnen Valley. It commands many beautiful views. A lovely panorama is given of the district, and also views of the picturesque streets of the village. In the background is the Wetterhorn, a station on the Grindelwald Railway.

5. Grindelwald, an excellent starting point for excursions and a favorite winter and summer resort. In the background is the Wetterhorn.

6. The Eiger Glacier. Two girls with alpenstocks on the way to the Eiger Glacier.

WOMAN—PAST AND PRESENT (June 4).—Miss America is a mannish, presumably advanced type of womanhood, who refuses to surrender her rights by marrying the young man she loves, because he has what she considers "too old-fashioned ideas" concerning the femininity of women. She gives out her ideas in a hail-fellow-well-met way to the modest man and he retires to sadly think it over as she goes joyously on to "whoop it up" at a suffrage meeting. Returning from a day of strenuous service in disorder and window-smashing, she casts herself in exhaustion upon the couch in her study and falls asleep. Then comes to her in dreams a picture of the quiet, delightful days of old, so well remembered from the tales told by her grandmother. Old Father Time makes hold to intrude, and conduct her back along the path of the storied past, decade by decade, until she arrives at the age of gallantry, when great-grandmother was a girl. It shows the courtly old days in the quaint Colonial mansion, where grand dames, powdered beauties, periwigged old gallants and lively beaux danced the stately and dignified minuet. This is all in striking contrast to the syncopated ragtime and "animal dances" that hold cheap and unworthy possession in current esteem. She awakes in shame at the present conditions, tears the banner calling for "votes for women" from the wall of her room and again surrenders herself to the gentle surroundings of her true sphere. The disappointed lover, having gained in manhood correspondingly, comes to claim his own, in view of the fact that the right to love and be happy is absolutely constitutional.

DELIVERING THE GOODS (June 4).—Percy volunteers his services to an aged couple to deliver a piano, which they had purchased, to their home. He enlists the aid of a helper and they set themselves to the task. The piano experiences many mishaps before its arrival, and ludicrously falls apart from its rough treatment as the picture closes.

On the same reel:

THE ARMADILLO.—The Armadillo is a queer little animal in South America. Its body is covered with a bony, flexible shell, and in many respects resembles animals of other species. Its nose resembles that of a rhinoceros and its mouth that of a pig; its claws are long and powerful, and by their aid it can hury itself in a few minutes. Being a nocturnal animal, the armadillo searches for food at twilight, and feeds principally on worms, insects and roots. Sometimes, digging its home in an anthill, it does not stop until the anthill is completely destroyed. Some species are more carnivorous than others and devour the semi-putrid carcasses of wild animals. It is naturally a timid animal, hut it is not difficult to catch, and, although becoming accustomed to captivity very quickly, it takes advantage of the first opportunity to gain its liberty. Good fortune aided the producers to focus this peculiar little animal in all its different habits, which are vividly shown on the screen.

CINES—GEORGE KLEINE

THE RING (June 7).—Gaston, bidding good-hye and pledging eternal fidelity to his wife, leaves her and his child for another country of greater opportunities. Gaston almost immediately succeeds to the road of fortune. Back home, his daughter is seriously ill and his poor wife, reduced to meager circumstances, is ohliged to toil hard for a livelihood.

After some years, Gaston returns to his native land, but cannot find any trace of his wife, poverty having driven her out of the old home. Established in business, he employs a secretary who is engaged to a poor but charming young girl. Gaston one day sees the girl leaving a pawnshop and, impelled hy curiosity, he stops and inquires what she has disposed of. To his great surprise, he finds it is the ring he had given his wife as a parting gift. He escorts her to her home, where he is once more with his wife and daughter and where supreme happiness thereafter reigns.

On the same reel:

ORBETELLO AND ENVIRONS.—Here you are shown panoramic views of the towns and the embankments, the ancient walls which surround them, and the Port of Ercole, with Mount Argantario in the background. It is altogether a most interesting series of landscapes.

EDISON

DON'T WORRY (June 4).—The wife of Mr. Mortimer, a business man, is one of the worrying kind of women who, upon the slightest provocation, allows herself to become mentally agitated almost beyond control, and without good cause.

One evening Mr. Mortimer is detained at his office, and, as the telephone repair man has taken his telephone apart, he is unable to get into communication with his wife. When he fails to come home in time for dinner, his wife begins to fear that all sorts of awful things are happening to him and, as it gets later and later, her imagination begins to run riot.

She sees three villainous-looking desperadoes, who are somewhat of a cross between pirates and cowboys, bind and gag him in his chair. As two of them point murderous-looking revolvers at him, the third picks up the safe and walks off with it.

Then she sees him start home, only to be struck down by an automohile, which dashes away, leaving his mangled form in the gutter. He is carried into a drug store, where it is made evident that the bones of his legs are terribly shattered.

He is removed to the hospital, where he is subjected to hrutal handling by the doctors and attendants. His condition is pitiable, for the suffering man is a mass of bandages and splints, from which an agonized face protrudes. The flint-hearted orderlies lift him from the operating table and drop him on the stretcher and a heartless nurse feeds him nauseating medicine because he is too helpless to resist her.

She rushes to the telephone and tries vainly to get into communication with her hushand, hut the repair man still has everything disconnected. But in the meantime, Mr. Mortimer has finished everything up and has started home. His distracted wife is just about to launch off into another wild flight of imagination when he enters the house, smiling, and without a mangled limb. Then she realizes what a fool she has been—but will probably do it again, just the same.

MERCY MERRICK (June 6).—When Mercy Merrick left the refuge in London where she had heard words of comfort that put her again on the right path, she thought she had turned her back forever on the old life and all that might remind her of it.

From the refuge she had gone to South Africa as a nurse during the war, and while there met Grace Rosebury, the daughter of General Rosebury, who had come for temporary shelter to one of the field hospitals. The general's daughter was wet and cold. Mercy loaned her a nurse's uniform. The two girls, during their brief acquaintance, became good friends, and Grace Rosebury told Mercy that she was going to England to stay with friends of her father whom she had never seen and that it had been arranged that she was to marry one of the nephews of the house.

Suddenly a shell hit the hospital and a flying splinter struck Grace Rosebury on the head. In the confusion that followed, the surgeon, seeing her in a nurse's uniform, mistook her for a nurse and, after a rapid examination, pronounced her dead. An opportunity had arisen and Mercy could not resist the temptation. She had never known happiness, and Grace had never known misery.

She took Grace Rosebury's effects and declared herself to be the general's daughter. She arrived safely in England, and was received with open arms by Lady Janet Roy and her nephew. She soon won her way into the hearts of all the family, but her happiness could not last. She must be found out sooner or later.

One of the first people she met at the house of Lady Janet Roy was Julian Grey, the pastor of the refuge. He remembered her at once, but she denied all knowledge of him. To make matters worse, she fell in love with him and he with her, despite her nominal engagement to Lady Janet's nephew. The crisis came when the real Grace Rosebury, who was not dead, arrived on the scene and denounced Mercy as an impostor.

Everyone immediately turned against Mercy except Julian Grey, who loved her and offered her his care and protection.

NESTOR

THE MAN WHO TRIED TO FORGET (June 11).—Richard, a young man of moderate means, is infatuated with the adventuress, Stella. The woman is the wife of Robert Kelton, a gambler, but Richard believes her to be a woman of beautiful, unsullied nature. He takes her home and introduces her to his mother and eventually gives her a ring and other handsome pieces of jewelry and, proposing to her, is accepted.

Kelton is in hard luck. The cards will not run right for him, and he and Stella are up against it. He persuades her to call Richard up and get him to come to her and then to get all the money she can from him. She does this and he promises to come at once. Stella and Kelton clear the room of cigarettes and cards and put them quickly in the inner room.

Richard arrives and Kelton hides behind the curtains. Richard listens to Stella's tale of woe, and makes out a check to her for a large amount. He kisses her impulsively and starts off. He remembers that he has forgotten his checkbook and goes back for it. He hears and sees Kelton and the woman he thought so much of gloating over his simplicity, and, in mortification and anger, he tears the check up and goes.

Thoroughly disillusioned, he goes West and engages in mining. Years pass and things are adjusting themselves—as they always do—when a young fellow, Jim, stumbles upon Richard's cabin. He is all in. Richard takes him in and attends to his wants and persuades him to stay with him. They become great friends, and Richard makes him a partner. Some months go by and Jim continues to write to that little girl he left behind him and to enjoy the society of his friend.

They take turns in going to town for provisions, and one day Jim's turn comes and he starts off. Arriving in town, he is attracted to a new gambling house. He enters and sees Stella and Kelton, who are running it. Stella quickly gets him in her toils, and her new victim is well bled and takes the opportunity to take her for a ride and proposes to her.

Richard, who is worried about the lad, follows him to town and sees him with Stella. He follows them to the gambling house, and when the game is in progress, steps in and denounces the couple. Jim goes with him, thoroughly broken up, but, youthlike, he soon recovers. Richard persuades Jim to go back home to the girl, who receives him with open arms. The gamblers depart for fields new, and Robert lights his pipe and takes it all like a philosopher—even if a rather sad philosopher.

FRONTIER

THE CALL OF THE ANGELUS (June 12).—Both Rafael and Pablo are so strongly attracted to Carmelita that each desires her to be his wife. Carmelita does not care to choose between them, for while she likes each and has coquetted with each, she is not in love with either.

Both the young men are prosperous ranchers and both call frequently upon Carmelita, her mother being present at the calls, to preserve the quaint Southwestern proprieties. One day, as Pablo comes from the house of Carmelita, he meets Rafael at the gate, and their jealousies burst forth in a quarrel. Nothing serious comes of it at that time, but the seed had been implanted and later it bursts and grows.

The bitterest break comes when Rafael interferes with the laborers who are at work irrigating Pablo's fields. He holds that the water is his, not Pablo's, while the laborers believe just the opposite. Under the leadership of their major domo, they put up quite a pretty fight, in which Rafael is aided by a party of his own ranch laborers. Pablo learns of the fight and presses home a quarrel with Rafael, who, to tell the truth, hardly needs to have it pressed home.

The young men agree to fight a duel, and go to an open field behind a church for the purpose. There Rafael wounds Pablo, as he thinks, mortally. He is overcome with remorse and makes efforts to help the stricken man, but is met with curses. Pablo tells him that the angelus, which at that moment rings forth from the church, can never afterwards be heard without his thinking of the dying man on the field behind the church. Rafael is convinced that he has killed Pablo, and feels that he must flee the country to escape the penalty of his crime.

He is not content to leave Pablo alone, however, and stops at the sacristy of the church to leave a note summoning the priest to aid Pablo. The priest gets this, and shortly starts for the field of honor. Before he gets there, however, Pablo has sufficiently recovered from the wound, which is not so serious as he had thought, to crawl away. He crawls to Carmelita's home, and there the girl and mother take him in and the girl nurses him back to health.

While Pablo convalesces, Rafel is far away, working on a cattle ranch. Daily he hears the angelus and daily the curse of the supposedly dying Pablo rings in his ears. Finally, as he passes a roadside shrine one day, he hears the call again. He stops and prays before the little shrine. As he prays there comes to him the solution of his troubles. He determines to return and confess his crime, standing the punishment and obtaining forgiveness if possible.

Along the weary road back to his home he walks, and late one afternoon he stands again outside the sacristy door where he left the note to the priest. He calls the padre and begins a confession. The good priest lets him tell the whole story, then he tells him that Pablo did not die from the wound inflicted in the duel, but that he is now at Carmelita's and is recovering.

Thither go priest and repentant. There they find Pablo and Carmelita, whose feeling has ripened into love. Rafael asks and receives the forgiveness of Pablo, and as the angelus rings out again he joins the hands of the girl he loves with those of the man she loves and who also loves her, as behind them the priest recites a henison.

THE PRETENDER (June 15).—Occupying a menial position as maid to the Warrentons, an ostentatious family whose chief ambition is social recognition and the marrying of their daughter to a man of money, Betty cherishes a secret ambition to be a lady just once.

This opportunity is granted her unexpectedly when the Warrentons close their summer home and leave for two months' visit to the seashore. The servants are given a vacation for that period.

Bowing to the temptation, Betty draws her savings—amounting to $500—and decides to make one supreme effort to realize her dream. She slips away in secret, renews her wardrobe, and registers at a renowned beach resort hotel.

Blessed with physical beauty and carriage, liberally enhanced by her carefully selected wardrobe, her dainty appearance captivates the guests at the hotel, likewise engendering an air of romantic mystery.

Bert Royal, considered in social circles the catch of the season, becomes interested in Betty, particularly so when she deliberately snubs him, which is in direct contrast to the snobbish attention displayed by other marriageables. It is only after marked persistency that friendship is permitted, which unconsciously merges into the romantic.

The Warrentons, meanwhile, have received a social tip that Bert Royal is at this hotel, and all engagements are canceled in order to likewise register, they believing their daughter eligible to a possible engagement.

Betty, with Bert at the time, sees the approach of her employers and hastily leaves, packing her belongings and slipping away before Bert discovers the fact. He promptly packs and follows in a wild but persistent attempt to locate her. Consternation reigns at this unexpected change on the part of the guests.

A few months later the Warrentons are entertaining and Betty occupies the same position as maid. At a dinner it is discovered that there are thirteen guests at the table, and, in order to pacify the superstitious, Mrs. Warrenton, unable to resort to other means, compels Betty to don her daughter's gown and dine, to offset the fateful number.

An envious impression is created as she enters, but as they prepare to dine she is stricken dumb with amazement to discover among the guests her seaside friend, Bert Royal, he at the same time calling her by name in unfeigned surprise and pleasure.

Casting aside dignity, Betty dashes in mad flight from the dining-room, followed by the persistent Bert Royal, who at length captures her, listens in amusement to her tearful confession and—well, the story ends as all would have it.

THE GRAND OLD FLAG (2 Reels) (June 10).—Spanish tyranny had, through centuries, crushed Cuba and the Cubans until the cry "Cuba Libre" meant not only liberty, but life. Don Lopez had tried to remain faithful to the Spanish king and crown, until the cruelty of Weyler had driven him to side with the downtrodden insurrectos, and with money and influence furnish them with arms.

Ametza, his dark-eyed, beautiful daughter, is courted by El Donza, who, by courtly manner and courtesy, has covered his identity as a Spanish agent from her father and won liking from Ametza.

About this time a terrific storm on the sea throws two American soldiers of fortune on the coast of Cuba, near the home of the Lopezes. Ametza by chance sees them, and, getting aid, rescues them. Ametza's attentions to the Americans causes El Donza to swear vengeance against them, and his anger is aided by a good American thrashing at the hands of Harold Logan.

Going back to the Spanish camp, he gets his henchmen, and determines on an attack on the Lopez home. A skirmish occurs, and the timely action of Ametza saves Harold from death, but her father and sister fall victims of Donza's vengeance. Ametza and the two soldiers of fortune escape from the Spaniards and, reaching the rocky shore, see the grand old flag fluttering from an American gunboat. The officers see the signal of distress made by them and send a small detachment asbore.

Meanwhile, El Donza has reached the shore, being told of the Americans' escape by a Spanish spy, and pursues the Americans. The marines land, but are insufficient to cope with the Spanish. The battle results in the capture of Harold, Sherman and Ametza, who are taken to prison.

In prison the Americans are offered the choice of being branded with a bot iron or swearing allegiance to the Spanish flag. Sherman is branded, but ere the iron reaches Harold, Ametza sets the prison on fire and tbe guards rushing to subdue the flames, the Americans escape.

Reaching the American scouts, they are conveyed to the American camp. A battle is imminent, and a Spanish scout reports to El Donza, who has escaped the flaming prison, their line of march. The Spaniards dig pitfalls; but the Americans, by chance, change their route and, attacking the Spaniards from an unlooked-for quarter, rout them and El Donza falls a victim to his own pitfalls.

Harold raises Old Glory, to the accompaniment of American cheers, over the Spanish blockhouse, and Ametza and victory are his.

THE COMEDIAN'S MASK (2 Reels (June 9).—King Baggot is a comedian out of work. He finds it very difficult to get a job, but finally secures a position as principal comedian with "The Girl from Wayback" company. King is devotedly attached to his wife and child, but his wife is very vain and shallow, and accepts the attentions of Basil Graham, the foppish tenor of the company, who, while professing friendship for King, takes every opportunity of flirting with King's wife. This is done to such an extent that it arouses the attention of the stage hands, with whom King is a great favorite. On the opening night of the play King scores a great triumph, his power as a comedian making the audience laugh and cry at his will. He has left his child in the dressing-room and she is playing with some poison King has been using for a burn on his arm. King finds it in her possession and hurriedly takes it from her, showing her the danger of playing witb it. King is very hurt by the coldness of his wife's manner, but his audience never suspects that behind the comedian's mask is a breaking heart. His child strays from the dressing-room to the side of the stage, and while her father is on the stage she plays with the button on the door of the wing, making it necessary for King to exit behind the other wing, where he discovers his wife in the arms of his false friend. They do not see him, and, broken-hearted, he goes to his dressing-room and takes the poison, determining to end it all. He rushes back to the stage for his last scene, and his wife and the tenor determine to elope. They are hastily leaving the theatre, when King, at the finish of his scene as the curtain falls, drops with agony to the stage. The manager frantically goes before the curtain and asks if there is a doctor in the house, and one comes forward and King's child shows the doctor the poison bottle. The doctor calls for milk, which is instantly produced by one of the property men. The doctor gives is to King, who is anxiously watched by the crowd in their stage garb and motley for the sign of life. The child in the meanwhile has strayed outside and shown her motber the poison, and when she realizes the terrible truth, she runs from her would-be lover and flies to her husband's aid. Somewhat disgusted, the tenor follows her, and when she finds that King is recovering, she begs him to forgive her, realizing that it is the comedian she loves, after all. The husband and wife are united. The tenor is thrown out of the theatre and goes on his way to look for another home to wreck.

"All the world's a stage, and men and women merely players."

AN EXPENSIVE DRINK (June 15).—Hubby is addicted to the use of liquor and refuses to stop drinking the same, despite his wife's pleadings. After business he invariably visits the saloon and keeps his wife waiting for him for supper. One day she buys a bottle of Cura-Lusher, which is guaranteed to cure all craving for liquor. That evening hubby brings bome a new bottle of whisky, and wifey immediately doctors it with the Cura-Lusher. Hubby drinks some and immediately detects that there is something wrong. He thinks the saloonkeeper swindled him and immediately goes over and has the bottle changed for real whisky. Wifey puts some of the cure into the coffee, thinking that the best way to cure hubby of the habit. Hubby's boss calls that afternoon on a friendly visit, and unsuspectingly wifey invites him to have a cup of coffee. They all drink, and the real liquor has the usual effect. The boss makes love to his employee's wife and tries to kiss her, and buhby tbrows him out the window. The result is that he loses his job, but when wifey explains her reason for doping the coffee, it is the means of making him swear off, and he vows never to drink again.

On the same reel:

HER JOKE ON BELMONT.—Belmont is a flirt. He is riding around town on a bicycle. A doctor who has forgotten his bag telephones his sister to bring it to bim. This she does, and Belmont, seeing her and being smitten with her beauty, follows her. She notices him following her and is angry, but pays no attention to him. After delivering the bag to the doctor, she returns home, Belmont still following her, and while looking admiringly at her he is tbrown from the bicycle and hurt. She enters the house, and Belmont, mistaking her for the doctor, goes in after her. She decides to play a joke on him and treats him. She tells him that he has a hole in his head and uses some red ink to prove it. She then shaves off his hair, leaving him totally bald. She then pastes court plaster on his head in such a way that it spells the word "fool." She then chases him out and he goes home. Taking off his hat, he sees the joke that has been played on him and he rushes back. There he is met by the young lady, who laughs at him, and by the doctor bimself, who, having arrived home, also enjoys the joke. Belmont, seeing that he can get no satisfaction, runs wildly from the house, bemoaning the loss of his hair and determining never to flirt again.

THE GREAT PEARL (June 7).—Walter Trask, a young college man, receives news of his father's death and the loss of his fortune. He resolves to go to work and try to retrieve his affairs. With the aid of the family lawyer, he secures a position as bookkeeper with a large lumber firm in the South, and, bidding his fiancee farewell, departs. On his arrival he finds favor in the eyes of the superintendent, who takes him to his boarding house and introduces him to his landlady and her daughter, a pretty, frivolous village coquette. The young lady immediately begins a conquest of the new boarder's beart and plays off one man against the other. Trask and the superintendent finally become piqued and begin to quarrel. One day, after a slight discussion, in which Balk is the victor, Trask moodily walks away, and in strolling along by an old oyster bed, accidentally unearths a wonderful pearl. Balk and Myrtle follow him, and a new quarrel ensues, in which Trask drops tbe pearl. Balk picks it up and Myrtle greedily demands it. Trask comes up and asks for the pearl. Balk and he have words, and Myrtle slyly scapes with the pearl. She jumps into a buggy and drives to the village jeweler's. Balk and Trask discover her absence and follow her. They find her trying to sell the pearl. Balk insists she return the pearl to Trask. He, much disgusted with her, refuses to receive it and tells Balk to keep it. Balk refuses also, and Myrtle retains the gem. On Trask's return to the hoarding-house he receives a telegram from his betrothed, telling him to return at once, as much of his fortune has been discovered. He determines to do so and, reconciled to Balk, leaves for the North. Some weeks later, Myrtle, anxious to regain her influence over Balk, makes overtures of peace, but he gently repulses her, having discovered her unworthiness. She accepts Balk's rehuff calmly and goes to her room to gloat over her great pearl. She takes it out and fondles it, and while admiring it, it suddenly explodes, thus exemplifying "All is vanity and shall crumble to dust."

AMERICAN

CALIFORNIA POULTRY (June 9).—S. S. Hutchinson, president of the American Film Manufacturing Company, hooks for release a decidedly novel and interesting educational subject, centering around a much talked about but little understood industrial enterprise. The picture opens with some views of model housing, shows incubator eggs three days from hatching, chickens one day old, with some splendid views of California's largest hatchery, having a capacity of 165,000 chickens. The process of feeding and a group of 2,000 expensive White Leghorns make interesting diversions. A number of Leghorns, all of which have taken world prizes, are included. All this occurs in the famous Petaluma district.

The scene of action now switches to the Pasadena district, long noted for its tremendous chicken facilities. This district caters to Los Angeles and vicinity and makes enormous shipments eastward. The Anthony poultry plant is a model of its kind. Here we find the finest specimens extant, including Barred Plymouth Rocks, Buff Orpingtons, Partridge Wyandottes, White Wyandottes, Buff Wyandottes, White Plymouth Rocks, Black Minorcas, Rhode Island Reds, Light Brahmas, Black Langshans and many others. Other fowl come in for consideration, too, and some delightful pictures were obtained of White Muscovy Ducks, Burt's White Mammoth Pekin ducks, Mammoth Bronze turkeys, a prize-winning golden pheasant, Chinese, golden and ring-neck pheasants, some varieties of Brahma cockerels and numberless varieties of other fowl. The picture winds up with "the ultimate consumer," two very happy darkies making the most of a friend chicken.

HEARTS AND HORSES (June 12).—Bessie received a note from Uncle Dan, along with a pony, and was more than delighted with the handsome gift. Her sweetheart, Bill Walters, grew quite peeved at the way in which Bessie forgot him for her horse.

Some days later Bessie's father, the sheriff, received a note that horse thieves were operating in his vicinity. He notified Bessie to watch carefully over her new pony, and Bessie, alert to the possibility, promptly rode to town to obtain a strong lock for the barn. She returned and handed it to Bill, asking him to attach it. But Bessie had been seen by the horse thieves, who promptly laid plans to capture the horse. Bill, receiving the lock from Bessie, tucked it into his pocket and went into the corral to brood over the lack of interest in him. That night Bessie's horse was stolen. Bill, conscience-stricken, went to her father, the sheriff, and at his request was made a deputy. Then Bill started off for the border.

The following day he crossed into Mexico and was present at a horse sale. He recognized Bessie's horse and bought it, tendering a check in payment. This the bandit refused to cash. Then Bill, having arranged with the local sheriff to have a strong posse on the American side of the border, asked the bandit to come across to the American side, where he would cash the check. This the bandit agreed to do. On the American side Bill pulled his gun and a bandit was caught—hut only for just a moment. The secret band of thieves, lying close hy, rushed upon the American. A fast fight and a long chase followed before the thieves were finally rounded up.

"A MODERN PSYCHE" (June 4).—Carter Weston, a novelist, notices a pretty young girl on the train reading his latest book, A Modern Psyche. He is greatly struck by her beauty and sweetness but does not speak with her as he has to get off at the next station. The girl is June Harmon, the daughter of John Harmon, the book and curio collector. She is returning from college and is going to help her father in cataloging his somewhat extensive library.

The next door neighbors of the Harmons are Mrs. Bradley and her daughter Nell, a college friend of June. Just after the girls' return from college, Mrs. Bradley sends out invitations for a fancy dress ball, to which she invites June. Mr. Harmon refuses permission to his daughter, but she makes up her mind to do just as she pleases and sets about designing a suitable costume. Looking over her new novel she sees a picture of Psyche and determines to go in that character.

Among the other guests invited to the house is Carter Weston, who happens to he a cousin of Nell Bradley. He was on his way there when he saw June on the train and since his arrival has been looking after the preparations for the celebration. On the night of the hall, after most of the guests are assembled, Mrs. Bradley is suddenly taken very sick and the festivities have to he stopped. This happens before June's arrival at the house, and when she arrives she finds nothing but a deserted hallroom. It is there that she again meets Weston, and both at once recognize each other. Weston introduces himself and greatly admires June's costume, so plainly modeled after the illustration in his novel. June, on the other hand, is equally delighted to find that this entertaining young man is her best friend's cousin. He takes her home and leaves her at the gate, asking her permission to call upon her on the morrow.

The next day Weston calls at the house with a letter of introduction to old Harmon and gains further acquaintance with June through the pretence of consulting books in the lihrary. He does not hother much about the books after Mr. Harmon has left the room but, taking June in his arms, tells her that she is the real object of his search, that he has come to bring her the love so long sought by the real Psyche.

RELIANCE

ITALIAN LOVE (June 2).—Rosa, the belle of Little Italy, is heloved by Luigi, a hootblack, hut her heart is with Antonio, in Italy, to whom she sends enough money to bring him to America.

When Antonio comes, instead of being faithful to Rosa, he spends most of his time in the wine shops of the quarter. And one day Rosa finds him flirting with another girl. This so angers her that she turns on him and refuses to have anything more to do with him.

He comes to explain hut she will not relent. Seeing Luigi's faithfulness, she accepts him. They are married and live happily for a time —then one day Rosa loses a locket bearing her picture and Antonio finds it. In a wine shop he shows it to Luigi, claiming Rosa gave it to him. There is a quarrel and arrangements are made for a duel. Rosa hears of this and, with her father and a policeman, arrives in time to prevent the fight. As Luigi turns to Rosa Antonio makes a lunge at him, but Rosa throws herself in front of her husband, receiving the knife thrust into her arm. Antonio is taken into custody and Luigi attends to his wife, who isn't so very hadly hurt. Her explanation about the locket wipes out the faintest suspicion from his heart and all is peace again.

FAITHFUL SHEP (June 4).—When Runa's big sister marries, she takes the little girl with her to the new home. Things go smoothly for a time but later big sister and her husband are entertaining a great deal and give a great many parties and so, in consequence, haven't much time for Runa, who, left to the maid's care, feels rather neglected.

One day she runs away and is lost in the woods. Shep, her faithful pet, follows and finds her unahle to get up as she has sprained her ankle. He hurries home and, although he harks loudly, no one heeds him—for all are out searching for the lost child. He manages to get into the harness of his little cart and drags it out to the child. She lifts herself into it and Shep takes her home.

That night when dog and child kneel down to say their prayers hig sister is there to hear them and to assure the little girl that she is not in the way, hut a very necessary part of the little household.

little cabin in the hills. Phil Carey, a mountaineer, is in love with Tess, who returns his affection but delights in teasing him. Kingston Ford, a handsome stranger, comes to the hills to hunt and, overtaken by a storm in the woods, asks shelter at the cabin. Tess immediately loses her heart to the stranger, and he, tempted with the chance of flirtation with a pretty girl, makes ardent love to her. She believes his intentions to be honest and neglects Phil, her true sweetheart. But the sweet, serious face of Nell, the elder sister, attracts his fickle fancy also, and one day, finding her asleep in a leafy bower, he plays the part of Prince Charming and stoops over and kisses her. Nell is fascinated by his manner and allows him to caress her. Tess happens upon the tryst and is heartbroken at his perfidy. The lover happening along also sees the two together and, in a rage, confronts the stranger, accusing him of abusing the girl's hospitality in a despicable way. He raises his gun to shoot but the agile young Easterner quickly disarms him and he is hurled to the ground, his head hitting a sharp rock. He is unconscious. Believing him dead, Ford becomes terrified, and while Nell goes for help he flees to the woods. At the cabin he comes upon Tess weeping. Terrified at his own danger he gives no thought to her tears but gives her an account of the quarrel and then asks her to save him. In the meantime, Nell finds the sheriff and her father and they start out to find Ford. They first restore Phil to consciousness and then in a rage go after the stranger. Tess at first refuses to help him, but the sight of the approaching posse and her lover's plight softens her and she hides him. When the men arrive she acts in an unconcerned manner and feigns surprise at the news of Phil's being wounded. They ask her whether she has seen Ford, and she says no. They depart. Tess then liberates her lover and when he tries to embrace her she bids him go, having given him some of her father's clothes in which to escape. He changes them under a tree in the woods. A few weeks later Tess comes upon them and, taking them up, she accidentally drops a letter out from his coat and her curiosity overcoming her, she picks it up and reads it. It is a letter from another girl begging him to return to her. She then realizes the baseness of the man and, thoroughly disgusted at the thought of him, she takes the clothes and walks to the stream to throw them into the water. Phil, now entirely recovered from the wound, had followed her and has seen all that has happened. He thinks she has gone to the water to end it all and rushes after her to save her. He begs her not to take her life and she laughingly reassures him that she hadn't intended to do anything of the sort. Phil's love overcoming him, he cannot resist and again declares his love for her. And Tess now willingly accepts the man who has so truly loved her.

THANHOUSER

THE CAGED BIRD (June 6).—The beautiful young princess was weary of the formality and ceremony that encompassed her. She had read many books and from them had gained the idea that she would be far happier as a simple peasant than as the daughter of a king. Even when it came to her marriage she sadly reflected there was no romance, for her father had arbitrarily contracted an alliance for her with a neighboring prince.

The princess was taking her drive one day and was sadder than ever. She saw a wedding procession issue from a neighboring cottage and pityingly watched the mother of the bride as she turned into her lonely house. In a field the princess noticed a young farmer, and she thought that the romance which had been denied her might come into her life. By the time she had returned to the castle she was pitying herself exceedingly, and had decided to be a caged bird no longer.

The princess secured a peasant's gown and, well supplied with money, stole away from the palace, as she thought, forever. Before going she opened the cage of her pet canary and watched him fly away, happy at his new-found liberty.

In the life outside the castle the princess found she was handicapped by her ignorance. She gave alms to a crippled man, and he scandalized the community by spending it in riotous living. She met the young farmer and he horrified her by roughly kissing her. She procured a home with the mother of the bride and her money was stolen by that depraved old woman. Disillusioned, the princess returned to her castle. Just outside its gates she came upon the little bird she had set at liberty. It, too, had found itself unfitted for an adventurous life. Strange, fierce birds had attacked it, and the little canary was feebly trying to return to the castle when its mistress came along.

The bird was glad to be placed in its gilded cage again. The princess was glad to return to her old life, marry the prince, who was really a very decent young chap, and retain the place which her birth and breeding entitled her to fill.

MAJESTIC

THE FRATERNITY PIN (June 1).—The president of the fraternity in the girls' college was very pretty and her family was rich, but the reason why she was the most popular girl in college was not the possession of wealth or good looks, but because she was instinctively the protector of the friendless.

There was one shy little country girl who regarded the college idol with mingled awe and admiration. She was timid and retiring, and her lot in college would have been a very lonely one if the fraternity's president had not taken pity on her. A firm friendship sprang up between the two. The college leader helped her protege with her studies and even was instrumental in securing the girl's election to the fraternity.

The country girl left college and married a rich man, who died a few years later, leaving her independently wealthy. The widow had many handsome jewels, but the one she prized most was a little gold pin, the emblem of her membership in the college fraternity. The pin was missing one day and the widow, thinking that she might have lost it in the street, telephoned to the police. Soon word came that the pin had been found, and she hastened to the police station to claim it.

The lost pin was not hers, but it was the emblem of the same college fraternity. The woman who had been arrested when she attempted to pawn it stood nearby in the custody of a policeman, her face averted. The widow, anxious to know who the owner of the pin could be, stepped forward and gazed into the prisoner's face. Their eyes met and the wealthy woman recognized in the unfortunate the college favorite of years gone by, the fraternity president who had been her friend. Misfortune had come upon her her parents and fortune had been swept away, and she had failed in the battle of life.

The ragged woman and the lady of fashion left the station together and the "most popular girl in college" found a home and loving care with her former protege. She was proud and did not want to accept any favors, but her protests were silenced by a loving kiss from her benefactor and a reminder that they were both sisters of the same fraternity and sworn to aid one another. And so the friendship which had begun in college ripened in after years into lasting love.

THE QUEEN OF THE SEA NYMPHS (June 3).—The young guest of the summer hotel decided that it would be easy to acquire a reputation as a hero. He did it through the aid of a poverty-stricken newspaper man who agreed to act as his press agent. In this way he became famous as a life saver when the fact was that he could hardly swim at all.

His ruse was so successful that all young women admired him. Among them was a girl admired by a young college boy, who resented his boastful rival. And he vanquished him, too, through the aid of "The Queen of the Sea Nymphs."

Did you ever hear of this fairy creature? She demonstrated that the "hero" was very much overrated as a life saver, and made him such an object of mirth that he was driven from the hotel, leaving the field clear to the college boy.

When you see "The Queen of the Sea Nymphs" you will at once realize why it is a laughable disgrace to be beaten in a water race with her, even though one is not a life saver.

SOLAX

MATRIMONY'S SPEED LIMIT (June 11).—Billy Brown is a broker. He has lost his fortune and is ruined. He decides to break off his coming marriage to his wealthy sweetheart. He leaves his office and goes to her home. Tells her his circumstances. She offers him money; he refuses; she returns him his engagement ring. Billy leaves; she is heartbroken. Suddenly she thinks of an idea to make Billy marry her and recuperate his fortune. She sends him the following telegram:

"Your aunt died out West, leaving you a fortune, provided you are married by 12 o'clock on Wednesday, June 18th.

"Clay Lambert,
"Attorney-at-law."

His sweetheart sends the telegram by messenger, who takes it to Billy's office and finds him completely broken up, with his head on his desk. He receives the telegram and reads it. Grabs messenger, kisses him, lights a cigar, turns to wall, sees big calendar on wall, showing date of June 18th. Cigar drops from mouth; he turns slowly to look at large clock over calendar, finds it 15 minutes to 12. He has only 15 minutes to marry or lose a fortune. He dashes away after looking at his watch. In the meantime his sweetheart has gone to a clergyman's house and they get into an auto and speed away to Billy's office, only to find when arriving there that he has left. Billy, in the meantime, meets a lady acquaintance, drops on his knees and starts proposing to her. She runs away. He has five minutes to get married. He rushes down the street, looking for a woman. Billy's sweetheart is shown after coming from his office in her auto jumping up and down urging the chauffeur to speed faster to find Billy. Billy sees a veiled woman on the street. He stops her, gets on his knees, starts to propose. She lifts her veil, showing her to be a negro. He decides he can't get married by 12 and win the fortune, and so will commit suicide. He gets in the middle of the street and, an auto coming in his path, he turns his back and waits. The auto stops against him; he turns, and his sweetheart and clergyman are in it. He dashes to auto, gets in, shows telegram. They are married one minute to 12. His sweetheart confesses she sent the telegram. Billy at first is angry, but finally gives in to a happy ending.

HER MOTHER'S PICTURE (June 13).—Mr. Joseph Bleeker, a hardy, honest, rural type, lives with his daughter in a home rather unhappy by the absence of a mother. The death of Mrs. Bleeker has made her husband downcast in spirit and all his daughter's attempts to liven him up are unavailing. About the picture of his wife, which is prominently hung in the center of the living room wall, crystallize all his thoughts and dreams. In some intangible way this picture guides the destiny of the family.

This is forcibly illustrated by a little love affair of his daughter, Marian, who elopes with a metropolitan actor. She comes back after she is deserted and only the spirit of the picture of her mother prevents her unforgiving father from turning her away.

The story is dainty, human and pathetic, and has an unusual climax. It is forcibly emphasized by striking characterizations.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 23 (June 2).

DREDGES AND FARM IMPLEMENTS IN THE WEST (June 3).—The problem of settling the arid wastes of the Far West was solved with the success of the first irrigation project, but there arose a demand for machinery that would lessen the undertaking of irrigating immense tracts of land which could be made available for farming purposes. The result was the elimination of the horse entirely, and in this film we see canals being dug by traveling dredges and engines. Also there is a dredge, conceived by a genius, which digs up the beds of dried up creeks, extracts whatever gold the dirt contains and drops the refuse behind it.

On the same reel:

A MARKET IN KABYLIA (ALGERIA).—A film that is a personally conducted tour through a far-off land, showing everything of interest therein.

THE SAVING LIE (June 4).—Cyril Jackson, an author, is so intensely occupied with his art that he takes his wife's love as a matter of course, paying her none of the little attentions which make a woman happy. Willard Martin, a friend of Jackson, becomes infatuated with Mrs. Jackson and jilts Mabel Wallace, whom he was engaged to marry, because of his new fancy. Mrs. Jackson repulses Martin, but the latter persists in his attentions until finally Jackson learns of his friend's double dealing. Armed with a revolver and a desire for revenge, Jackson calls on Martin for an explanation. Martin is at a loss for an answer, but his jilted sweetheart tells a lie to save his life, and after Jackson and his wife are reconciled, Mabel tells Martin how glad she is to be rid of him.

WHAT THE GOOD BOOK TAUGHT (June 5).—A girl journeying to a more suitable climate with her sick mother, is seized by a band of bad men. While held captive by them she finds a dusty copy of the Bible which was given to Joe, the leader of the band, by his mother. In a particularly affecting scene

Marion shows Joe the inscription on the Good Book and pleads with him to help her and her mother. Joe is so deeply touched that, although it is a difficult task, he forces his companions to feel as he does, and not only renders every assistance possible until Marion's mother is well again, but when they depart for the next town, Joe is driving the horses and Marion has agreed to pay a visit with him to the first parson they can find.

BIRDS AND ANIMALS OF BRAZIL (June 6).—The strange birds and animals that inhabit Brazil are the subject of this interesting film. Red and blue parrots are shown and then follow crocodiles, half a dozen of them in characteristic attitudes; a forty-foot boa constrictor, the largest and most powerful of the snake family, and specimens of the various monkeys that comprise the Cobu species. The antics of these monkeys are very amusing and they supply any number of laughs in addition to being of keen interest to every student of the Darwin theory of evolution.

On the same reel:

TANANARIVE (MADAGASCAR).—An old, old town in Madagascar, showing the customs of the natives, their principal industries and some very exciting horse races held on a feast day.

GET-RICH-QUICK BILLINGTON (June 7).—Billington has a fine social position but no cash with which to maintain it. At his club a flood of unpaid bills caused him to confide in Jake Coben, a mine promoter, who had cash but no social position. Cohen offers Billington a half interest in his business if the latter will sell some stock to his rich friends. At a dance in the home of the Billingtons, Cohen delights the fancy of Billington's rich Aunt Nancy, a spinster. The next day the authorities haul Cohen and Billington out of bed and off to a cell on a charge of swindling. Aunt Nancy, when she learns that Cohen is in trouble, writes a check to cover the claims against him. When Billington and Cohen are free Aunt Nancy holds out her arms to Cohen. Cohen looks at her, then at a passing train, and takes the train.

PILOT

FOR OLD TIMES' SAKE (June 5).—In a little house at the edge of the village, and set in a garden of old-fashioned flowers, Mary, the "old maid," lived alone, looking out upon the passing work with bravely smiling eyes that gave no hint of the sorrow that might lie within her heart. Beyond her house lay the rich estate of Squire King, the wealthiest man in the community.

It had long been the desire of Squire and Mrs. King that their only son, Hal, should contract a wealthy marriage, and when the Squire discovered an attachment between his son and Dora, a poor girl of the village, he promptly attempted to stop it.

In her hour of sorrow Dora came to Mary, to whom she told her story, and here, later, Hal came, having decided to assert his manhood and marry Dora against his father's wishes. To this Mary did not agree, but decides to sacrifice her own pride to win the Squire's consent.

Mary set out to find the Squire, and their meeting was fraught with many memories of the past, especially as Mary recalled to his mind their own love affair of many years before, of their brief happiness and their sorrow as the Squire is forced by his father to marry a wealthy bride, while Mary remains true to the memory of the man she once loved, and lives to be an old maid. She pleaded for the happiness of Hal and Dora, but seemed to fail. Later, however, the Squire, "For Old Times' Sake," gave his consent and assisted in the marriage of his son and Dora, bringing happiness even to himself as he sat alone in his fine, lovely house, dreaming of those he had made happy.

By Ralph Knaster

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION OF GREATER NEW YORK, INC.,

LOCAL No. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Secretary-Treasurer—Robert Levy.
Recording Secretary—John Rickards.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—Ralph Knaster.
Assistant Business Representative—John Rickards.

Telephone—Stuyvesant 619
Office—133 Third Avenue.

How many moving picture operators have read the EX-CATHEDRA, or the editorial, in the issue of the Moving Picture News of May 24, 1913, entitled "A Plea for the Operator"? This Ex-Cathedra by Brother Alfred H. Saunders, editor of the M. P. News, is a priceless article to the operator, not only in New York City, but to every operator throughout the world; and words are inadequate to express the gratitude due to this great thinking and unselfish editor, who has so often come forward to assist the moving picture operator in all undertakings. He is not only a dear friend and brother to the operator, but is likewise a guardian angel to the thousands of wives and children of the men who are compelled to earn their daily bread by the sweat of their brows behind a picture machine in some living dungeon, which is actual solitary confinement. Brother Saunders has taken up the cry of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York (Inc.), a cry to the Board of Health of New York City to assist the operator to more sanitary booths, and to check the spread of tuberculosis, which not only is dragging the operators to the grave, but is doing likewise to the families of operators. Only this week came an operator to the office of the Union and begged for one of the letters which was recently printed in the Chat to the Board of Health; this operator fell on his knees and thanked the hospitable editor of the Moving Picture News through the business representative of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Local No. 1. I do not care to mention this brother's name, but he is a married man and has a wife and three children depending upon him for support. The unfortunate brother is in the last stages of the white plague, and his eyes were filled with tears as he sobbed and explained his most pitiful tale.

This brother worked steady, was a sober man and was the type of what is called a model husband and a loving father to his dear children.

Is there no law in this great city or country that can be enforced for humanity sake, he said, with tears rolling down his cheeks; I know I have but a short time to live, but let me be the sacrifice that others may benefit by it. I can work no longer, my dear ones at home who depended upon me for support can do so no more, and worse than that I am going away with my youngest child, who has contracted the terrible man-eating disease from the father; yes, I am going to the mountain air, which is the last resource. What will ever become of the rest of my family after I succumb to this white plague, God only knows, but my tears this day are tears of joy, because a savior has come forward in the name of the editor of the Moving Picture News who has taken up the cry of the M. P. M. O. U. of G. N. Y. through the Chat column, and I pray that the Almighty will assist him to the success of this battle for the saving of souls that are crushed out by the negligence of the laws of the health and other departments of this great City of New York.

This story, my brothers, is a truthful one, and believe me, no stronger drama could ever be placed upon a picture screen than the one which was pictured in my mind when this brother old this pitiful story to me. I will say that Brother Saunders did not give the full details of conditions which exist in the operating booths, but this is because he did not have an oportunity to spend the time that I spend in them, on my journey every day from one theatre to the other. Can you imagine that what I have seen is so disgraceful that such conditions do not prevail in a pigs' pen. Many places have a continuous show and the operator cannot get enough time to perform the duties of life in the way of discharges from the body. There are pails in the booths for fire purposes and instead, the operator is compelled to use these pails, and then think of the pail remaining in the booth all day and all night until it can be emptied by the operator, and there it remains in that terrible hot booth with no ventilation, for ventilation is prohibited by the building and fire departments, and with these conditions some bosses demand that the operator cannot leave the booth or give an intermission, and with that terrible odor being breathed into his lungs all the time, not saying that he has a sandwich thrust into the booth by some good-natured boy that is sent out to get it, and then the unfortunate operator must eat his lunch under these prevailing conditions. This is terrible, and I ask that every operator, regardless of organizations, and if he never cared to join an organization, he is duty bound to join in this crusade of stamping out these conditions. Call at the office of Local No. 1 whether you are a member or not, and ask the business representative to give you one of those letters to the Health Department, and do it at once; don't delay it, and for God's sake help yourself as well as your brother operators, their wives and their children, to a better and peaceful life.

OPEN MEETING NOTICE

The Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Local No. 1, will hold their regular meeting on Monday, June 2, 1913, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street. All members are requested to be present as very important business will be taken up. I wish to inform all operators that an open meeting will be held on Monday, June 9, 1913, at the same hall herein mentioned, for those who may wish to take the last opportunity of joining this Local for the initiation fee of $5.00; then there will be positively no excuse for any operator in the way of not being able to join on account of the fee being too high. The last meeting for applications for this amount will be Monday, June 23rd, then you will pay $50.00 if you wish to join this organization. Applications can be made daily at the Union office.

RALPH J. KNASTER, Business Representative.
Office 133 Third Ave., New York City.

RELIANCE TO RECEIVE LUBIN WITH A BRASS BAND

The Reliance Company will be out in force to meet the Lubin special train when it brings the Philadelphia moving picture players to New York on Saturday, June 7th, for the Reliance-Lubin baseball game.

Both J. V. Ritchey, of the Reliance, and Siegmund Lubin are enthusiastic baseball fans and would back their respective teams to the sky limit.

The two well-known film manufacturers promise to be very much in evidence at the game and both of their teams will be in excellent form for the occasion.

The Reliance automobiles will carry the Lubin players to the field of battle at Lenox avenue and 145th street, where the first ball will be pitched at 3 p. m. sharp.

Last reports from the sleepy city claim that fully two hundred loyal Lubin rooters will accompany the team on its trip to New York.

SOLAX FEATURE AT THE UNIQUE TWO DAYS

Fourteenth street, New York, has been called by theatre managers "a hot-bed of competition." And to attract business they try to out-do each other in matters of display advertising and feature programs. Fourteenth street "eats" features alive. The feature exchange man cannot serve them up fast enough. The above cut shows what the managers do with the front of their house when they secure a big feature.

Onalaska, Wis.—The contract has been let for the erection of the Crystal theatre on the former Thompson store site.

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES

Mr. Will C. Smith, assistant general manager, has been on a short business trip, attending conventions at Richmond, Va.; Wilmington, Del.; and Philadelphia, Pa.

The following 6A Cameragraph installations have been made: Weiting Opera House, Worcester, N. Y., through Rex Film Exchange, Albany; Frank Horton, Arcadia, Fla., through Consolidation Film & Supply Co., Atlanta, Ga.; two to John Beella, Trenton, N. J., through Calehuff Supply Company, Philadelphia; two to H. S. Slagle, Sixth Street Theatre, Coshocton, Ohio, through Oliver Moving Picture Supply Company, Cleveland, Ohio; with motor and mechanical speed control to Jones Theatre, Fulton street and Grand avenue, Brooklyn, through S. Rosenbaum; with motor and mechanical speed control to T. J. Henreham, Nevada, Iowa, through Laemmle Film Service, Chicago.

HALLBERG A. C. TO D. C. ECONOMIZER AT NEWBURGH, N. Y., MORE THAN SATISFACTORY

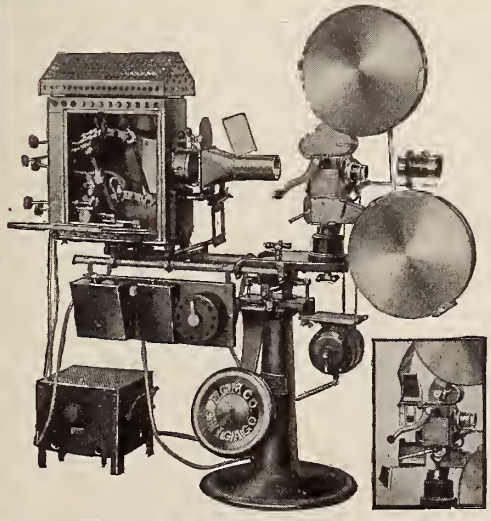
Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," has just received from Mr. F. M. Taylor, proprietor of Academy of Music, Newburgh, N. Y., a letter under date of May 22, 1913, reading as follows: "I thought it might interest you to know that we did not get your A. C. to D. C. Economizer connected until 5 p. m. yesterday, and therefore did not have any opportunity of testing it out before the performance; but when the current was turned on everything worked to perfection and the results were more than satisfactory. It made the Kinemacolor pictures remarkably clear and steady."

This letter speaks for itself. Mr. Hallberg reports that he has just booked order from The Scenario Company, Newark, N. J., for a special 100 amp. A. C. to D. C. Economizer for the operation of two moving picture machine arcs at the same time, and he has also sold this company two Simplex machines. To W. C. Brainard, Auditorium, Greenport, N. Y., one Powers No. 6A with current saver; to Thompson & Schmidt, Elizabethport, N. Y., Powers No. 5 with Hallberg Economizer and flame arc lamps. To E. Lee Schrum, Newton, N. C., a Powers No. 5. An unusually large number of Economizers are being installed in open air shows all over the country.

Evansville, Ind.—Plans for the remodeling of the interior of the Colonial theatre in Main street are being drawn by Architect Clifford Shopbell. Cost about $5,000.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Shaughesy & Wiler are estimating on moving picture theatre at the corner of Germantown and Herter streets for Moyslin Block.

Doland, S. D.—Plans have been prepared for an opera house to be erected by F. J. Riley, a local capitalist.



The Approved Machine for Motor Drive

THE MOTIOGRAPH MOTOR DRIVE MACHINE (known as No. 1002 Chicago) has been approved for use in Chicago—New York—Boston—Philadelphia and other large cities, and by The National Board of Fire Underwriters.

—NO OTHER MACHINE HAS AN EQUAL RECORD—

Have you examined our Motor Drive? Our constant speed, fully enclosed motor is far ahead of the old variable speed type. Our speed control is continuous. No sudden jerks to damage film. Our switch is approved and the various parts of the motor equipment assembled into one compact unit.

NO MATTER HOW MUCH YOU SPEND—THERE IS NOTHING BETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

"The Toll of War" was not friendly received in Washington. Though passed by the National Board of Censorship, it was further censored here by the cutting of the assassination of President Lincoln. It did not please the nation's capital to have counterfeited in pictures a national calamity that is still vivid in the minds of many residents. The picture has had but one presentation here and will probably not be popular if further exhibited.

The Kalorama Film Company is progressing and will soon be ready to announce releases. An Oriental play is now in course of production. It is Manager Rogerson's desire to place before the public later a series of Biblical subjects which will carry with them an educational value. Some very big scenes will be pictured.

The "swat the fly" film recently released met unfavorable criticism in Washington. Many patrons left the theatre during its exhibition, or expressed disgust at the repulsive scenes of the fly pest. Such films are of great scientific value, but scarcely have a welcome place in the daily program of the moving picture theatre, where the spectators are composed largely of those who seek recreation, amusement and pleasant teaching.

The Washington Times is weekly devoting considerable space to moving picture news and advertisements. This is the second local newspaper to recognize the moving picture, the first one being the Herald, which still continues its daily column of interest to the industry and the fan.

Many of the theatres in the residential districts are having special Saturday matinee performances with programs suitable for school children. The Saturday morning exhibitions at Moore's Garden, under the jurisdiction of the District Board of Education, continue to increase in popularity.

Manager Bangs of the Acme is using several multi-reel productions during the week selecting those of educational and historical nature when possible. The Acme, with the Mutual program, has found a place of its own in the northwest section.

The Lyric, under Manager Greenberg, has proved that a 10 cent show with four reels can prosper in the midst of 5 cent competitors. The Lyric, with a seating capacity of 500, is Washington's latest picture house. It is well ventilated and lighted, with comfortable seats and it always exhibits to capacity houses.

Manager Davis of the M Street theatre is featuring George Powell in illustrated songs and the singer always finds a warm welcome.

The Arcade mingles education and topical reels in its daily program. Manager Adler is always seeking to please his patrons and he succeeds.

* * * *

Tom Moore anticipates making extensive improvements in the Garden this summer with a view of giving it a greater seating capacity. During the running of the Noakes Electrascore at the Garden, the patrons of the Plaza are having the benefit of the orchestra of ten of this theatre. The Plaza is therefore showing to overflow audiences.

* * * *

The Colonial has become known as the multi-reel house of the downtown section. Excellent first-run pictures are always found here.

* * * *

The Edison talking pictures are becoming more popular at Chase's, our largest and handsomest theatre for big time vaudeville. The Kinemacolor scenes and plays are perhaps as popular as the Kinetophones.

* * * *

The Captain Scott Pictures of the South Pole had a two-weeks run in Washington at the Belasco, one of the Schubert theatres. These were largely attended by educators, scientific, and official folks, while the matinees have been especially popular with school children and teachers. No better idea of the frozen pole could be obtained than from these views. The supplementary address by Ernest Torrence was very interesting, adding many educational points. He had a way of picking out humorous features that pleased his hearers. The "Undying Story of Captain Scott" should be seen by everyone.

Airdromes are opening. The Royal Park, La Grande, Truxton, and M Street are offering good bills for fresh-air patrons.

THE OLDEST SHIP AFLOAT IN A RELIANCE MOVING PICTURE DRAMA

While making a picture dramatization of "Half a Chance," the well-known novel by Frederick Isham, Producing Manager J. V. Ritchey of the Reliance, found himself faces to face with a difficulty that seemed impossible to overcome. The story deals with events that took place during the era when Great Britain was exiling prisoners to Australia and part of the action is on board one of the old convict ships of that period.

Manager Ritchey was just about despairing of finding a ship that could be made to look like the genuine article when he located a real "hell-ship" at his very door.

The Success which lies moored in the Hudson River, is an old convict ship which carried thousands of the one hundred and sixty-five thousand convicts that left English ports while that disgraceful system of transportation lasted—a ship which, in the days of her activity, carried eighty pairs of handcuffs and three hundred basils with chains to torture the miserable convicts who were forced to make the entire voyage in irons.

The convict ship Success is said to be one of the oldest boats afloat, as her timbers were laid down in Moulmain, British India, in 1790. She is built of teak wood throughout and, in spite of her 123 years of active service, made the voyage across the Atlantic last year—under her own canvas—a trip which took ninety-six days.

The weird old hulk with its rows of gloomy dungeons and its paraphernalia of punishment and torture, fitted into the Reliance dramatization of "Half a Chance" as if the book had been written with this very ship as a background.

The picture will be presented in two reels on Saturday, June 14th.

SELIG POLYSCOPE CO. TO ERECT MILLION DOLLAR STUDIO—LARGEST ZOO IN THE WORLD TO BE FEATURE OF LOS ANGELES PROPERTIES—W. N. SELIG TO PURCHASE HOME NEAR EDENDALE STUDIOS

Mr. William N. Selig, president of the Selig Polyscope Company, returned this week after a prolonged visit to the Selig studio and wild animal farm in Los Angeles.

Before departing from Los Angeles he made public some of his plans for a greater studio and zoo in the Southern California metropolis.

These plans include provisions for extensive tracts of land, enlarged and completely equipped studios, the largest zoo in the world, and an elaborate outlay of rare plants and foreign vegetation which will be imported to this country.

The main plant and studios are in Chicago, on the northwest side of the city, where they occupy several acres of ground. On the Chicago property are two studios, the largest of which is three stories in height and covers almost one-fourth of a city block. In addition to the studios are several smaller buildings, an electric light and power plant, carpenter shops, machine shops, developing and printing plants, a private fire department, artificial lake, etc. The present Los Angeles properties consist of the studios, carpenter shops, plant, artificial lake, etc., which are located at Edendale, a suburb of the city, and the 320-acre wild animal farm adjoining Eastlake Park, which is to Los Angeles what Central Park is to New York and Lincoln Park is to Chicago.

FOREIGN CONSULAR REPORTS

ENGLAND

(Consul Augustus E. Ingram, Bradford.)

The popularity of the moving picture palaces in the populous manufacturing districts in England is attracting attention. It is reported that the licensing magistrates look seriously on the extension of these picture theatres, and in the near future these annual licenses will not be granted so freely as in the past.

In Bradford, with a population of 289,618, over 20 theatres and halls have already been licensed for cinematograph entertainments, and 14 of these have been specially built or adapted for that purpose. The daily attendance at these places of amusement is estimated at 30,000. There are also 3 picture palaces in Shipley, a suburb of Bradford. In addition, 11 or 12 new halls in Bradford are applying for licenses. In Halifax 5 picture houses are doing good business, and a new cinematograph theatre in the center of the town is projected. At Keighley there are 5 picture palaces, and a sixth is now being planned on an elaborate scale. There are also cinematograph theatres at Silsden, Cross Hills, Haworth and Bingley, all in this consular district.

Government Restrictions

Under the cinematograph act of 1909 county councils and borough councils are given wide powers in regard to the licensing of "exhibitions of pictures for the purpose of which inflammable films are used." The recent introduction on the market of a non-inflammable film has raised the possibility of some of these entertainments becoming later outside of the scope of the act, but the musical accompaniment, which is nowadays so indispensable a feature of Cinematograph entertainments, necessitates a license from the licensing justices—thus effecting a dual control—who have much the same discretion in granting or withholding licenses and in imposing terms, conditions, or restrictions as the local authorities under the cinematograph act.

Introduction of New Films

The London Daily Mail recently said in regard to the trades which have reaped a golden harvest from the introduction of this new form of entertainment:

There are no fewer than 65 firms whose business it is to buy and let out films on hire, while another distinct business is done by some 40 manufacturers and agents in London from whom the buyers and hirers get the films. The picture passes through many hands before the public see it. When ready to be shown it is first of all taken to the manufacturers' or agents' premises, where a private theatre is fitted for showing. Its coming is duly announced to the buyers, who attend at specified times to see it. If the picture is a particularly good one, and one which it is believed will draw the public, they "book" so many copies. The price is usually 4d. (8 cents) per foot, so that a buyer booking a 1,000-foot film will pay about £16 ($77.86) for the copy. Naturally, if only one copy were brought the manufacturer would lose heavily, as it is impossible to produce a fairly good story of 500 feet under a cost of about £40 ($195). Some idea of the possibilities in the way of money making in a good film may be gauged by the fact that recently a firm of agents in Wardour street sold in London 146 copies of an American picture for over £4,000 ($19,466).

Renting prices of films usually run at about £4 ($19.47) per 1,000 feet the first week of release, £3 ($14.60)) per 1.000 feet for the second, and £2 10s. ($12.17) the third. The value of a film showing drops on the average by 10s. ($2.43) a week, the period showing being three days at each theatre. The buyer's price is about £16 ($77.86) per 1,000 feet, so that he would need to let out at least four copies before he would see his money back.

Board of Censorship

The recently established Board of Censorship for Cinematograph Films has commenced work in London, offices and a miniature cinematograph theatre having been opened in Shaftesbury avenue. The duty of this board (which will be under the direction of G. A. Redford, former examiner of plays) will be to examine every picture intended for exhibition in British picture theatres. All films released by the manufacture on or after March 1, for exhibition, whether of domestic or foreign origin, will be submitted to the board as shown in the private theatre before the staff of reviewers. The suppression of questionable pictures will not, however, rest with the staff. Anything of an improper character will be brought before the notice of Mr. Redford, whose decision will be final. Each film passed will bear upon it a notice beneath the title to the effect that it has been approved by the censor, whose signature will be appended.

Film Censorship in Prussia

(Consul Herman L. Spahr, Breslau, Germany.)

In view of the suggested legal censoring of motion pictures in New York and other American cities a brief account of the method pursued here may be of interest.

The censorship of motion pictures in Breslau is exercised by the police department, which is under the authority of the Prussian state. Since April 1, 1912, all films to be shown at the 24 Cinematograph theatres are tested on a police machine at headquarters. The photographic series examined averaged about 200 weekly, and four regular days have been set for the task. Objectionable scenes are clipped out, or when necessary an entire roll is prohibited. The inspectors shorten their labor by rehearsing the motion plays in a greatly accelerated tempo. The task is further lightened by the fact that a large number of films come to Breslau after passing the censorship of the Royal Prussian Police in Berlin, and the inspection of these pictures is a mere formality here except in rare cases. They may be turned in for inspection 24 hours before exhibition, while all others must be presented fully 2 days before.

The supervision is not confined to the pictures, but extends also to the printed programmes, to the interpolated text, and to the spoken explanation still practiced in many theatres. In the last case the text to be read is submitted, and police detectives make frequent unannounced visits to the shows in order to watch for substitutions or deviations.

The censorship, like the increasing rigor of the license regulations and the amusement tax, seems to strengthen the position of the leading motion picture houses, while the scattered small theatres gradually decrease in relative number and importance. For example, the high-class shows generally exercise a censorship over their pictures, so that the authorities seldom find cause for action. The smaller theatres, however, often buy secondhand films that no longer satisfy the more exacting demands of the censor, and losses are therefore more frequent.

TURKEY

Growth of the Moving Picture Business

(Consul General George Horton, Smyrna.)

In the November issue of the bulletin of the French Chamber of Commerce for Smyrna the present status of the moving picture business in this city was reviewed. Beginning with one such theatre seven years ago, there are now five important Cinematograph establishments on the quay (which, toward evening, is the general rendezvous of the inhabitants of Smyrna). In these five theatres new films are shown; none will put on a film already shown by his neighbors, and as the programme is changed at least twice a week, about 13,000 yards of films are required weekly.

Combined these five establishments seat over 4,000 people. The interior decorations of the theatres are good, and the auditoriums are well ventilated. A considerable sum is being spent by their managers on street and newspaper advertising, programmes, etc. Secondhand films are handled by all other establishments in Smyrna and suburbs to the extent of about 40,000 yards weekly. There are 14 other moving picture theatres in the Smyrna district, as follows: Mytilene, 2; Aidin, 2; Adramyti, 1; Samos, 2; Aivali, 1; Manissa, 1; Nazli, 1; Sokia, 2; Mersina, 1; Adana, 1. They use about 40,000 yards of films a week.

French films are said to be the most popular, although other makes find favor also. Dramas, military scenes, and reviews are the subjects most frequently shown.

Have You An Idea?

Are You a Writer of Scenarios?

So many letters with crude scripts have come to us for our editor to advise upon that it takes up too much time; some of the writers enclose a dollar for advice. We have always returned script, letters and money, asking the sender to forward writings to the various manufacturers. Some have written to us complaining about their treatment at the hand of some schools of scenario writing, and requesting us to open a page for this work. This is also too much for our capacity. We have therefore made arrangements with our Miss Virginia West, whose stories appear each week, and who from her training in scenario writing and dramatic school, is fully qualified to criticise and advise, and Wm. Lord Wright, who as author of "The Art of Scenario Writing," and of the column "For those who worry o'er plots and plays," is capable of handling this branch.

The fee is One Dollar per Script.

SPECIAL MULTIPLE-REEL FEATURES

RELEASED ON SATURDAY, MAY 31st

"The White Slave"

A beautiful story of the days before the War. A series of thrilling scenes, following one after the other in rapid succession, with a love story running all through.

Produced by the talented VITAGRAPH players, headed by Clara Kimball Young, Lillian Walker and Earle Williams. Two reels.

RELEASED ON MONDAY, JUNE 2nd

"When a Woman Loves"

The story involves two political factions, one of which is led by the Duchess Charlotte. She becomes fascinated with Marco Flamma, a young enthusiast, but he does not reciprocate her affection. The revenge she plans forces her suicide, and results in Flamma winning the lady of his choice. CINES-KLEINE, three reels.

RELEASED ON WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4th

"The Law and the Outlaw"

One of the two most sensational "Westerns" ever released. Bucking bronchos and dare-devil cowboys in death-defying stunts. The outlaw (Tom Mix) chases a maddened steer, leaps on his back and actually throws and ties him without assistance. Sounds like pure fiction, doesn't it? Well, wait till you see the picture. SELIG, two reels.

RELEASED ON FRIDAY, JUNE 6th

"The Accusing Hand"

A novel story told in a novel manner. Written by and acted under the direction of LUBIN'S popular producer-actor, Romaine Fielding.

"The accusing hand" greets the criminal at every turn of the road, and eventually draws a confession from him. "The silent third degree" in practise. Two reels.

SATURDAY, JUNE 7th, 1913	"The Tragedy of Big Eagle Mine"	KALEM. Two reels.
MONDAY, JUNE 9th, 1913	"The Final Judgment"	ESSANAY. Two reels.
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 11th, 1913	"A Regiment of Two"	VITAGRAPH. Two reels.
FRIDAY, June 13th, 1913	"The Governor's Double"	PATHEPLAY. Two reels.
SATURDAY, June 14th, 1913	"Alone in the Jungle"	SELIG. Two reels.
MONDAY, JUNE 16th, 1913	"The Rival Engineers"	CINES-KLEINE. Two reels.
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18th, 1913	"The Weaker Mind"	LUBIN. Two reels.

A LIST OF SINGLE REELS AVAILABLE THROUGH GENERAL FILM SERVICE WILL BE FOUND ON ANOTHER PAGE OF THIS ISSUE.

THIS SOUNDS ALMOST TOO GOOD TO BE TRUE

On May 10th, our Dallas office received notice from an exhibitor in Pecos, Texas, to discontinue service. He stated as his excuse for giving up General Film Service that his patrons were "clamoring for new faces and new actors." We discontinued his service, with regret, of course. On May 14th he wired our office as follows: "My patrons don't like —— stuff. Ship me show at once and continue shipping every day." The only part of this transaction we cannot understand is the ability of the exhibitor to get along without General Film Service for even so short a period as four days!

Quality Films Reasonable Prices Efficient Service

A popular service must necessarily include these three things. Of what good are quality films if prices are out of all reason? And what do low prices amount to, if the service feature is not in evidence?

No one denies that the films known by the trade names, Biograph, Edison, Essanay, Kalem, Kleine (Cines-Eclipse), Lubin, Melies, Pathe, Selig and Vitagraph are the quality films of the industry.

Any exhibitor who uses General Film Service will attest that the prices charged for it are reasonable, In fact, one exhibitor was good enough to say not long ago that he would insist upon General Film Service even at twice its present cost.

The efficiency of the General Film organization is something you must learn through association.

We're ready any time—now—to talk about serving you. Are you ready to talk with us? Just write "show me" on a postal card, mail it to the home office at 200 Fifth Ave., New York, or any of our distributing offices in the principal cities and we'll do the rest.

EX-CATHEDRA

A DISGUSTING FILM

ONCE more, in the highest interests of Cinematography, I want to revert to my editorial of last week. I feel more than gratified with the results of that editorial. It has certainly shown me that my efforts to eliminate all the films that have a lowering tendency from the market, meets the approval of all right-thinking men and women in the industry.

A prominent member of the Exhibitors' League called in to thank me on behalf of the exhibitors of one of the largest states in the Union for voicing their sentiments against "The Wages of Sin." He assured me that, as far as lay in his power, not one single theatre in his state should exhibit that film, even if he had to make a personal campaign to visit every exhibitor. He said, the time is rapidly coming when such effete censor boards as New York possesses must become a thing of the past, and authority must be given to men who can, without fear of losing their emoluments, dare to express their opinions.

He said: "I have been anxiously looking through every paper since I have been in New York to ascertain what action the so-called National Censor Board has taken regarding this backward film. What is the Censor Board composed of? Are they jelly fishes, or rubber backbones, or are they afraid of losing their jobs, or a few paltry dollars that they are now raking in, doing little or nothing to uplift the industry? I have searched the columns of the News from cover to cover to find a statement from the National Censorship Board stating that they unqualifiedly condemned the "Wages of Sin" but not a word can I find."

I have tried to be just in my criticism of this film, which I understand has been considerably altered since last week by changing the whole of the titles, eliminating the names of the principal characters, and generally making it appear a different film. The onion will not change its perfume, neither can the leopard change his spots, and this film, called by whatever name it may be, or whatever titles or sub-titles may be placed therein, still has the same objections I voiced in my last week's editorial.

In further confirmation that my attitude is the correct one I quote herewith three letters. First from the Rev. Canon Wm. Sheafe Chase:

"My Dear Mr. Saunders—

"It is perfectly splendid of you to act so promptly and efficiently to prevent the Motion Films picturing the gun men who murdered Rosenthal from being exhibited in New York next week.

"The parents who are concerned about the mental influences which surround the amusements of their children and care for the souls of our young people, will applaud your courage in this matter.

"Those who want to see the motion picture business protected from the disgrace of becoming a rogues gallery will honor you.

"It is a shame that there is no New York City or State Censorship board that has authority to suppress evil pictures before they are shown, as in the cities of San Francisco and Chicago, or, as in the States of Ohio and Kansas.

"Eventually Congress which passed the pure food law will have to use its Inter-State Commerce authority to enact a law forbidding Inter-State traffic in any motion pictures which gives impure food for the minds and imaginations of the young.

"The Nation must protect itself from the germs of crime.

"Yours faithfully,
"WM. SHEAFE CHASE."

The second is from the National Director of the Loyal Order of Moose:

"Dear Mr. Saunders—

"Your editorial in the Moving Picture News of the May 31st issue, censuring the picture entitled "The Wages of Sin" is to my mind a great achievement in building up the moral character of the Moving Picture Business.

"With your kind permission I will send a copy of the Moving Picture News to the Editor of the Call of the Moose, the official organ of the Loyal Order of Moose, and ask him to print the editorial so that it may be read by 750,000 members of the Order throughout the Universe.

"Assuring you the hearty support of every Loyal Moose, in your efforts to keep clean a business in which this Grand Order has so many active members, I beg to remain.

"Yours fraternally,
"I. W. CUNNINGHAM,
"National Director."

The third excerpt is from a lady in Newark, who is specially interested in the Public Welfare Committee, whose name for obvious reasons I cannot give, but she assures me that she will do her utmost to keep Newark clear and clean from that film.

"Dear Mr. Saunders—

"I have just read with great interest the Ex-Cathedra regarding the film 'The Wages of Sin.' What can I do to keep it out of this City? I am in touch with the Public Welfare Committee, especially those interested and looking into the moving picture industry and will see them at once, but thought probably you could give me some advice. Your articles are so good and one can see what you expect and wish for in this motion picture field."

I have been taken to task for my attitude on this question, and have been asked, if I cannot see the morality of the film, if I cannot see the beautifulness of the film. These I utterly fail to see. It is simply making heroes of men who should retire to private life and obscurity, and I have no patience with any manufacturer who dares to flaunt such films in the face of public opinion as it stands to-day, and to say the least, it is bad taste, it is bad policy, and it will react in a very critical manner upon the industry.

Since setting the above up in type I learn that the New York Board of Censorship have passed this film, and their excuse is that they have no power to suppress any subject whatsoever. Shame on the Censor Board. Why does it not resign, and allow men and women who have the courage of their convictions to take the reins and compel manufacturers to destroy any such subjects, that offend the public taste in any small degree. They acknowledge that they are only an advisory board, and I sincerely hope the day is not far distant when the Exhibitors of New York City and State will have the courage to take up and force through the Board of Aldermen and the State Legislature at Albany the Ohio Censor Bill, the most sensible bill ever placed before the industry.

Details in the construction of Machinery Hall at the Panama-Pacific Exposition are being recorded by a moving picture machine set to take a picture automatically every five minutes. The camera is placed upon the roof of the Service Building, one of the completed exposition structures, and has an inclusive view of the new structure.

Under the magic influence of the "movies" a full-grown building will be conjured up, beginning with the bare ground and finishing in eighty minutes with a structure completed to the topmost pinnacle. Like the Temple of Solomon, it will be built without the sound of a hammer.

The records will show ninety-six pictures for each working day, or a total of 6,912 for the three months required for completing the building. When the pictures are reproduced the reel will be run at the rate of 864 pictures per minute, or more than a week's progress in that time.

This is a new departure from the usual custom of taking photographs of buildings at different stages of construction, and aside from the interest of the picture, it will furnish the exposition officials with a valuable record of the building operations, as they expect to study the effectiveness of various methods of construction through the slower reviews of the films.

Machinery Hall will be the largest wooden building in the world; more than 7,500,000 feet of lumber will be used in its construction, and more than four carloads of nails; 1,200 tons of steel and iron will be used. The dimensions of the building are 967 feet long, 367 feet wide, extreme height 135 feet, with three great naves running throughout its length.

MOVING PICTURE ACTRESS ASSISTS RESCUE WORK AT CALIFORNIA DISASTER

Miss Virginia Brissac, who played the leads in the recent Universal Hawaiian pictures, rendered valuable service to the sufferers in the Long Beach pavilion disaster on May 24th. The Los Angeles Examiner gives a very glowing testimony to her work in caring for the wounded and says:

The tender hand and soft voice of a pretty woman came to soothe the suffering of those who had been injured in the Long Beach disaster yesterday.

This woman, Miss Virginia Brissac, a young actress who was recently entered in a beauty contest at Long Beach, joined hands with J. H. Bixby, president of the Chamber of Commerce, and J. H. Duree, president of the Pike Association, in leading the rescue work.

Never during the long and racking hours which followed the catastrophe, when from every side came the anguished cries of pain, hysteria and grief, did this young woman falter in the mission which she had nerved herself to accomplish.

Despite the fact that the young woman had little or no knowledge of first aid or surgery, she replaced this deficiency by a cool-headed insight.

Once the young woman was seen straining at a huge beam which lay heavily across the body of an unconscious child. The feminine hands, tugging with a determination which gave her added strength, moved the obstruction, and soon she was carrying the little one to a cool, soft spot upon the sand.

All through the chiaroscuro of running figures, waving arms and contradictory orders this young woman was seen now and again stepping resolutely from this sufferer to that. Here she would bend down and raise some injured one to a comfortable position, there sustain a drooping figure until stretchers arrived.

From time to time seeking the advice of some of the physicians who were constantly arriving at the scene of the horror, the volunteer rescuer would set out on some new humanitarian errand, regardless of danger.

Late last night it was reported that the young woman had become seriously ill as a result of the nervous shock which came as a reaction after her tension of the day.

ROOSEVELT AND DR. OSLER TO VIEW "DREAD OF DOOM"

Interested by wide comment on the intimate study of a man infected with tubercular germs as shown in the Itala "big film," "The Dread of Doom," the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis proposes to aid them in its exploitation. Philip P. Jacobs, assistant secretary of the society, and Harry R. Raver will probably arrange to exhibit the film before members of the executive board of the association. Expected to be present among others are the honorary vice-presidents, Theodore Roosevelt and Sir William Osler.

Of specific interest to the society will be the peculiar manner in which the physician in "The Dread of Doom" is inoculated with the germs of the Great White Plague, i. e., arterially, through the bite of a monkey. Cases of infection from this source are of such extreme rarity that many physicians contest the possibility of inoculation in this way.

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP EXPLAINS

June 4, 1913.

Editor, Moving Picture News,
30 West Thirteenth Street, New York City.

Dear Sir:

As there is some discussion about the film "The Wages of Sin," you may wish to publish the enclosed interview from Dr. Frederic C. Howe. If your paper is carrying a discussion of this film, we should regard your publication of the interview as a favor. Very truly yours,

JOHN COLLIER,
General Secretary.

There is a discussion at present as to the film "The Wages of Sin," and as to the action of the National Board of Censorship of Motion Pictures in passing it. Dr. Frederic C. Howe, chairman of the National Board, when interviewed on the subject, said:

"The film 'The Wages of Sin' was passed by our board as being an ordinary, harmless melodrama. There was nothing either in the titles or scenes to suggest crime or to degrade moral standards. There was no portrayal of the details of crime in any way that could be either attractive or imitated.

"All mention whatever of Messrs. Rose, Vallon and Scheppe was eliminated from the main title and sub-titles before the board approved the film. The board did not consider that it had any right to prohibit these men from going on the film stage, but it had a right to prevent the morbid exploitation of these men's reputation. The board's control does not go beyond the film. The way it is advertised—the kind of posters or verbal advertising which the exhibitor gives the film—is outside the board's jurisdiction, and within the jurisdiction of the local police authorities anywhere in the country. The board has frequently called attention to the need for local regulation of posters and advertising, but has never been able itself to undertake local regulation.

"It is worth mentioning that Rose, Vallon and Scheppe were not convicted of crime; but even if they had been and had gone to the penitentiary, this board would not have felt justified in forbidding them to go on the film stage. As stated above, the board is concerned, with the moral effect of motion pictures, not with the moral character of the people who produce motion pictures or act in them.

"Some years ago the board condemned a film in which Beulah Binford was featured. This film exploited the name of Beulah Binford in its titles and was in fact a dramatization of her own life history, or part of it. In the present case the facts are reversed. The film as passed by this board makes no mention of Rose, Vallon or Scheppe, and does not pretend to dramatize the facts of their life in any way.

"Before any one condemns the board for action on this film, he ought to take the trouble to see it."

THE PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Pennsylvania held their second annual convention at the Continental Hotel in Philadelphia on May 27 and 28. National President M. A. Neff, who was in attendance, appealed strongly to the members for a national congress of censors with branches in the different states and said:

"What we want is for Congress to pass a bill creating a national congress of censors, this body to be composed of persons from all walks of life, the merchant, the manufacturer, the social reformer, newspaper men, patrons of the motion picture houses, and some of our own representatives. Then let this board, once provided for by congressional legislation, be divided into smaller boards which are apportioned out to the various states, and let each state body be supreme in its decision as to what pictures may or may not be shown; and, moreover, if a picture is passed or discredited by any state board which is a member of the National Congress of Censors, let this decision be effective in all states."

The following officers were elected: President, Edward A. Jeffries, Philadelphia; first vice-president, H. C. Kliehm, Pittsburgh; second vice-president, Gilbert C. Miller, Plymouth; secretary, Harry E. Reiff, Pittsburgh; treasurer, Benamin H. Zerr, Reading, Pa.; national vice-president, Dr. Walter Steumpfig, Philadelphia; sergeant-at-arms, Albert J. Fischer, Philadelphia; publicity promoter, a new office, Frank A. Gould, Reading, Pa., and L. R. Thomas, State organizer.

The following delegates to attend the National Convention in New York, to be held July 7 to 12, were chosen: H. A. Victor, F. J. Herrington, J. G. Hanson, J. Weinrich, Henry Poke, George H. Roth, Maurice Spiers, and Charles Segall.

SOLAX BASEBALL TEAM GIVES BALL AND ENTERTAINMENT

The Solax Baseball team gave its first annual ball and entertainment at Cella's Hall, Fort Lee, N. J., on Thursday evening, May 29th. Several hundred persons attended up to the wee small hours. Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Blache were there to receive guests and join in the merrymaking. The proceeds from this entertainment and ball were used by the ball team for the purpose of purchasing uniforms and a general baseball equipment. After defraying all expenses, $200.00 was placed in the bank to the ball team's credit.

The following program was rendered and was a great success:

1. FINN & WEBB—Novelty Dancing Act.
2. PICTURES.
3. BURKHARDT—Baritone Solo, "The Big Bass Viol." Accompanied by Miss Catherine Reckerman.
4. SKETCH, entitled, "A Horse on Fraunie." Cast: Fraunie Fraunholz, Marian Swayne, Vinnie Burns and James O'Neill.
5. PICTURES.
6. BARNEY GILMORE—Songs and Recitations.
7. BURNS MUSICAL SPECIALTY.

7a. DARWIN KARR will show his dimples.

8. BILLY QUIRK.
9. PICTURES.

DANCING.

C.; Kentucky—Gem Theatre Company (Mr. Sherman Arn & T. D. Buckley), Maysville, Ky.; Louisiana—General Film Company, 840 Union Street, New Orleans, La.

"HALF A CHANCE" A THREE-REEL FEATURE

The picture dramatization of Frederick Isham's novel, "Half a Chance," announced by the Reliance as a two-reel picture, was found to be too worthy a subject to be limited to such brief treatment. Manager J. V. Ritchey decided to release it in three reels and the result is said to be a better feature than even "The Man from Outside" or "The Bawlerout," both previous three-reel Reliance offerings.

Aside from the dramatic value of the picture, the scenes produced aboard the old convict ship "Success," built in 1790, which was actually in service during the period in which the story is laid, are intensely interesting from an historical standpoint.

"Half a Chance" is scheduled to appear on Saturday, June 14th.

PICTURE THEATRE EQUIPMENT COMPANY

This enterprising concern located at 21 East Fourteenth street, New York, is regarded throughout the trade as possessing the qualities necessary to give confidence to its numerous patrons on the basis of a square deal in every transaction. Presided over by Mr. H. T. Edwards, the president, and assisted by an able corps of salesmen it has reached the place it deserves as a representative motion picture supply house of the first class. Mr. Edwards takes especial pride in looking after the most minute detail of every transaction, and the showroom is a model of order, with a display of every machine and requisite for its proper fitting out of model picture houses. This concern has recently taken over the Eastern distribution of the Motiograph machines, and will sell wholesale and retail in cities East of Pittsburgh. All of the other makes, Powers, Simplex, Edison and Standard are handled by them. Mr. Edwards made a very broad statement regarding their selling policy and guarantee of goods which was, "If it isn't right we will make it so without any question." Mr. Edwards' extreme modesty prompted him to decline having his picture in the columns, so we can only suggest that our readers drop in on him in his comfortable quarters, and you will bear us out that he is a courteous gentleman, and thoroughly up-to-date member of the motion picture trade.

MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS THAT WILL BE EXHIBITED AT THE EXPOSITION

The Berry-Wood Piano Player Company has taken spaces numbers 13 and 14, in which they will exhibit their six foot rewind players. These instruments have proved very popular with exhibitors in the South and West. Mr. Carney, the vice-president of the concern, assures Mr. Samuels that the Berry-Wood Piano Player will be a revelation.

The Oshkosh Metal Products Company, located in spaces numbers 211 and 212 will furnish music for that section of the Palace.

Ernest Bocker will feature his instrument with the phonoliszt violin attachments.

Besides these mechanical instruments there will be an Indian band from the State of Oklahoma and a cowboy band from Texas.

Several of the biggest music publishers have taken space to boost their popular songs, so there will be no lack of music during the week.

RELIANCE 12—KINEMACOLOR 6

Heavy hitting by the Reliance players and clever work in the pitcher's box marked the Saturday game at Lenox Oval, New York, between Reliance and Kinemacolor.

Jim Bailey did his usual star twirling for Reliance, holding the visitors down to one run until the final innings when there was plenty of work for the outfield, resulting in five more men crossing the plate.

Sam Smith and Clifford Saums carried off the batting honors for Reliance, the former bringing in the three men who filled the bases when he touched the ball for a long drive which landed him safe on third base. Saums brought in three more runs by a clean two-base hit.

From the all-round good form shown by the Reliance nine, Lubin, will have to look to her laurels in the game scheduled for June 7th when she meets Reliance on Lenox Oval at three o'clock.

"KARR'S CAR IS NO MORE"

Darwin Karr, Solax leading men with the smiling dimples, ran into a Madison Avenue car and attempted to derail it. Unfortunately, however, his own car weighed about a ton less than the Madison Avenue street car and the force of the collision had the opposite effect.

Mr. Karr is now nursing several injuries besides an injured reputation as a chauffeur. Accounts do not tell how the leading man spent the evening or morning before the accident, but he has made an affidavit to the effect that he has been on the water wagon for the last two weeks. He has also an alibi: His wife was with him on the eve of the accident.

All those in the film business who own machines and who try to derail trains, street cars; or uproot telegraph poles, sympathize with Mr. Karr.

COBB MOTION PICTURE BUREAU

"The Cobb Motion Picture Bureau opened its doors to the public Tuesday, June 3, 1913. The location is seventh floor of the Columbia Theatre Building, Forty-seventh street and Seventh avenue, N. Y. Everyone is welcome and an invitation is extended to everyone to call and pay a visit.

"For the information of the trade in general: The policy of the Cobb Motion Picture Bureau is to buy and sell film; to procure and establish a market for new film; to place features on a territorial basis and to supply feature film manufacturers with a ready and substantial market; negotiations for agencies are about to be terminated, and in due time the trade will be notified.

"The president, G. Lang Cobb, Jr., and the manager-treasurer, Agnes Egan Cobb, are known to every purchaser of film of any note in the United States and Canada.

"Their slogan is—'Quality in Film' and 'Honest Business Dealings with All.'

"Never before in the history of the film business has been found such a partnership. They deserve the co-operation and confidence of the trade in general.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO.

They are telling a good one on Kerrigan in Santa Barbara and picture circles in Los Angeles. Jack went to the local picture theatre in Santa Barbara with his brother Wallace, the Western business manager, the other night and watched a reel of Mutual Weekly in which the devastation caused by the Dayton flood was shown. Some views of bodies being carried from the debris hushed the audience when a small boy suddenly piped up: "Gee! there wouldn't have been so many dead ones if Jack Kerrigan 'ad 'a been there!" The audience burst into sudden laughter, and before the reel was finished Jack was spotted and called upon for a speech. As Jack has never made a public address in his life, he grabbed his cane in panic and fled.

"Quicksands" is the title of a coming American two-reel in which Jack Kerrigan will have a unique part. A carload of carefully collected quicksand was dumped at Shore Acres, a village adjoining Santa Barbara, and there the scenes were made in which Kerrigan goes down in the sands. The schooner Santa Cruz was hired and a village of tropical thatched houses were made. It is a pirate story and those privileged to witness initial runs of the sample prints pronounces it the best multiple reel feature ever made by the American.

Last week was characterized by a lot of hustle not connected with the making of negatives, for the American forces at Santa Barbara moved into their handsome new studio quarters in the Mission city. $50,000 has been spent in the erection of an edifice which is not only a distinct addition to the architectural possessions of the town but an ideal studio as well.

In "Tom Blake's Redemption," scheduled for early release by the American Film Manufacturing Company, a big locomotive of the Southern Pacific Railroad was used. The picture carries plenty of action and a stirring fight occurs in the cab of the fast-moving locomotive between Jack Kerrigan and Jack Richardson. Some novel effects were obtained with some new lens attachments, enabling the camera men to photograph from the interior of the parlor car some action occurring on the observation platform.

The American Film Manufacturing Company asks exhibitors to take advantage of an advertising service complete to the last detail. This includes a weekly press sheet, glass slides announcing coming releases, posters of the popular players with three-sheet panel poster for border, interviews with star players for use in local newspapers, photographs and cuts. These can be obtained through the various offices of the Mutual Film Corporation.

PHILIP KLEIN IN HOSPITAL

Philip Klein, president and general manager of the American Photoplay Corporation, has been in a hospital suffering from quinsy sort throat. Mr. Klein, who is the son of Charles Klein, the American playwright, is identified with Selwyn & Co., and controls the product of practically all works of the foremost modern dramatists for picture play reproduction.

HIDDEN FORCES OF DESTINY ABLY CLOTHED THE DRAMA MOTIVES OF "THE FATAL GROTTO"

Strange are the ways of Fate. Their developments in "The Fatal Grotto," are of that strangeness as to approach the fatalistic. How a distraught father, seeking to free himself from malevolent powers, accidentally frees himself, unveils the hidden forces which sway our destinies. Under ground are laid the scenes of this clouded tragedy whose lining is of silver, subterranean in their turgid blackness its swiftly moving scenes.

Held in the bond of his own sinister vocation, a father is confronted with the awful problem of how to escape sacrificing his daughter to his accomplice in misdeeds. His fortune was dependent upon the secret of the grotto as the seat of his nefarious traffic with the man who now held a sword threateningly above him.

It is a problem in sacrifice—shall he permit his daughter to wreck her life by taking the bed and name of a man of ill-fame, or shall he reconstruct out of the ashes of the past the edifice of character?

Melodramatic is the act the father decides to remove temptation by destroying the grotto. The demons of indecision are seen contending in his countenance as he stands, ready to ignite the fuse which shall explode the powerful explosive and bring the rocks of the grotto falling over the place of illicit trade. Terrible moments are they when the parent discovers that in the cave are his daughter and her lover, who, having accidentally discovered it, have sought to penetrate its secrets; when the parent and his workmen race with Death in their endeavor to rescue the young folk who cling desperately to the jagged wall of the grotto beneath, watching with eyes of terror the murky waters which are soon, with the rising of the tide, to submerge them in the lethal flood. Little realizes the father than that a greater drama has, meanwhile, been enacted within the grotto as the arch-villain, seeking to kill the man whose life he covets, has been destroyed.

A story of pregnant power, showing the stern hand of a Nemesis which overtakes the wrong-doer.

RELIANCE DEFEATS KINEMACOLOR

Saturday's victory by the Reliance baseball team, when they defeated Kinemacolor by a score of 12 to 6, gives promise of a hard fought battle with lots of excitement when Reliance meets Lubin on the Reliance home grounds at Lenox Oval, Lenox avenue and 145th street, on June 7th.

Both companies have exceptionally strong teams, and are anxious for a chance to prove their supremacy. The Lubin team will arrive by special train on Saturday morning accompanied by a crowd of Philadelphia rooters, and will be escorted to the field by the Reliance Company, and a large number of picture and baseball fans.

Captain Irving Cummings, of the Reliance, is kept busy answering feminine voices over the telephone seeking information about the game which will be called at 3 P. M. sharp.

MOVING PICTURES OF CAPT. SCOTT'S DASH TO THE SOUTH POLE AT THE LYRIC THEATRE WONDERFULLY INTERESTING

The exhibition of a series of moving pictures of Captain Scott's "South Pole Dash" was well received by an appreciative audience at the Lyric Theatre on Monday evening, and clearly illustrates the educational power of moving pictures.

These pictures were taken by Herbert G. Ponting, F. R. G. S., the official photographer of the expedition, and one could readily see the dangers under which they were taken, and the wonderful results obtained by Mr. Ponting in spite of these difficulties.

The first of the moving pictures showed Captain Scott's stanch whaler, the "Terra Nova," in a most terrific gale, the waves reaching 50 feet in height at times and the ship listing at an angle of 53 degrees. Icebergs of tremendous size (200 feet high) are seen, and it makes a person rather uncomfortable to see how close they pass to the whaler.

Monster killer whales, 30 feet in length are seen sporting in the water, and also in pursuit of a seal and her young ones. The mother trying to protect and assist her young from them is helped by a harpoon thrown from the ship which pierces one of the whales which gets away. Weddell seals are shown diving, sawing the ice with their teeth, playing with their young, and lastly, fighting.

The splendid dog teams used by Captain Scott was another interesting feature of this exhibition and lecture. Captain Scott and Dr. Wilson travelling by dog team were also shown.

This exhibition of moving pictures not only showed the sad and tragic parts of the expedition, but also some very funny and laughable scenes, and these were particularly those of the Adelie Penguins, showing the penguins mating, building their nests, which were made entirely of small stones, and penguins making love to one another. Gulls stealing the penguin's eggs was rather a sad thing to witness as the penguins had to stand idly by, being no match for the gulls and see their eggs carried off in the beaks of the gulls. These penguins look for all the world like little old men dressed in a "boiled shirt" and bobtailed coat, and the way they waddle is excruciatingly funny, and puts you in mind of a "penguin trot" instead of a turkey trot.

Mount Erebus was shown in action, and with its frozen grandeur, made rather a fascinating picture to witness. The headquarters of the expedition were established within 15 miles of Mount Erebus.

A very interesting part of the exhibition was the depicting of the Skua gulls. It showed the gulls hatching their eggs, the mother being driven off the eggs from time to time in order to secure pictures of the different stages of hatching. The little gull is seen breaking the shell of the egg and gradually emerging into the cold, desolate Antarctic.

Near the last of this intensely interesting series was shown Captain Scott and his four companions, Dr. Edward A. Wilson, Lieutenant H. R. Bowers, Captain L. E. G. Oakes and Petty Officer Edgar Wilson, pitching camp for the night, and cooking and serving "Hoosh," their evening meal. After their meal they pulled themselves into their sleeping bags and nestled closely together for more warmth. This was a very sad picture to witness, for it proves afterwards that this tent was their tomb.

The two last pictures, which were recovered from the side of Captain Scott, show them at the South Pole and at the tent erected by Captain Amundsen, who reached the Pole one month before Scott.

The lecture was delivered by Ernest Forrence, whose annunciation was very clear, and who described the pictures in a most interesting way.

The dangers and suffering through which Captain Scott and his companions passed can only be realized when one has seen these wonderful but heartrending pictures. Every one, if possible, should see them as it is an education in itself, and one sees things as they actually happened.

HAROLD F. RENDALL.

AN EXPLANATION

In our issue of May 31st through a typographical error in the story of "Hearth Lights" we failed to give credit to the Reliance Company from whose synopsis this admirable story was adapted and put in story form by Miss Virginia West.

WE have our moments of supreme depression when it seems that every time we get interested in an unusually good pictureplay climax, the gentlemanly stranger and his wife stroll in and, after standing a moment or two in the aisle in front of us, leisurely take their seats.

* * * *

* * * *

When the elderly lady with the poke bonnet, and the cynical look, leans over in her seat with mouth agape, it convincingly proves to us that Lubin's "A Baseball Bug" was entirely satisfactory.

* * * *

One fact worthy of unusual notice is that the product of the Indiana literary belt has so far refrained from attempting to elevate and refine the moving pictures by writing romantic picture plots.

* * * *

"There seems no good reason why a theatre should advertise 'Complete Changes of Pictures Every Day,'" remarks the "Photoplay Philosopher." This is a highly pertinent and truthful observation. Advertising by word of mouth is the greatest advertising of all. Some evening you happen into the "Spare Moments," enjoy an unusually good picture, and next day you tell your friends all about it. They could not attend the night you did, and many of them would go the following evening but, alas, the picture has been hurried away. "Hold on to a good thing" is as applicable to moving picture theatres as elsewhere.

* * * *

Crime pictures are one of the greatest menaces to childhood, said Miss Kate Davis to the recent National Council of Women at Washington, D. C. She asks state legislation to eliminate the crime-suggestive film. Happily, the crime-suggestive films are becoming few and far between. There are too many fascinating questions of the hour, too many problems to be solved by the rich and poor alike, in this day and age, to need the depiction of "gentlemanly crooks" and their adventures on the screen. The moving picture is no place for revolting horror and undue sensationalism, either. Horses plunging over cliffs, presidential assassinations, knifeplay and attempted lynchings have no place in the moving pictures. These scenes may have the desired "punch," but they are not conducive to the moral welfare of children.

* * * *

Old wine, old books, old friends—and why not certain "old" films? We recall with pleasure the rainy afternoons when we rummaged in the attic and brought forth the old story papers and fairly reveled in the good things of five years ago. Old books to the book lover are always a source of pleasure and profit. The ancient authors will never be surpassed. And in the year of Our Lord Nineteen Hundred and Thirteen, when some pictures may not be up to standard, why not revive the more excellent releases of two or three years ago? We recall many pictures of two years ago that have not been surpassed to this day. They would prove a delight to any audience. A good play is worth seeing twice, whether it be a pictureplay or a legitimate drama.

* * * *

The moving picture business is full of toil and trouble, according to one well-known director. He told us the story of an accident that occurred not long ago. He had planned a realistic fire scene. An old house on a Jersey meadow had been purchased and filled with combustibles. He had written a story around the impending conflagration. At the last moment a new camera man had been engaged.

"He was a good photographer," said the director, "but he was new to the game. He got rattled."

Flames spurted out of the windows. Billows of smoke followed. By and by actors and actresses popped out like peas from a flaming pod. The gallant fireman rescued the baby. Another gallant fireman rescued the poodle to catch a chuckle. A tornado of sparks arose, the roof caved in, and it was all over. The new operator had been working frantically. He dropped the crank and mopped his brow. Then he broke into merry laughter.

"Gee," he said, "this is a joke on me. I forgot to take the cap offen the lens."

No "chase" picture was secured that day, because there was no other camera man.

* * * *

Just as soon as you begin to think or do something, you begin to have influence. Influence is something you cannot keep at home, and when it gets away from you, you can never recall it. Influence has no boundaries. Once started, tho' it may seem trifling, yet it may have as its destination the farthermost corners of the earth. It is well to remember that you can't help but give away your influence. A man's responsibility in this world lies in the way he acquires and gives out—his influence. And the manufacturer of moving pictures has the greatest influence of all. He can send it out to scatter sunshine and dispel shadows; he has the power to educate and uplift the masses; his influence has a tremendous bearing upon the total work of the world. The moving picture manufacturer should appreciate his influence—many of them do—his influence is either for great good or for great evil. The futures of many children are in his hands; his influence with the younger generation of this land, we think at times, is greater than even that of parents. Appreciate the influence of the moving pictures and use that power with care and judgment.

* * * *

For interest and good healthful thrills, the railroad furnishes the moving picture with good material. Kalem is particularly happy in producing exciting pictures of the rail and they are deservedly popular. But the viewpoint of the railroad man on the railroad picture is interesting and helpful. In the Railroad Man's Magazine an observing railroader writes:

"I suppose in dealing with other subjects, the film-makers overlook occasional technicalities or small points which cause a smile.

"'The Girl and the Lantern' was mentioned in one of the articles published in the Railroad Man's Magazine. When I saw this play, I wondered what railroad would keep a telegraph-operator working day and night, particularly since it is contrary to the law of the land.

"In one scene in this play the hero is taking care of a passenger-train with the sun shining brightly and everything indicating midday. In another he was working at night. And, in all my experience, I have never seen two trains in danger of a head-on collision on a double-track road when each is on its own track, as they were in this play.

"Another very good motion-picture play is built around the rescue of a little chap who has caught his foot on a trestle just as a passenger-train is approaching. We are shown the boy struggling to free his foot as the train rounds a curve down the line and swiftly approaches the bridge. Then the rescuer climbs to the track, hand over hand up the trestle-work, and the boy is freed in the nick of time.

"The scenes follow so swiftly that the effect is very good; but there was one peculiarity about the train that I never observed in real life. When some distance from the scene of the rescue there were two cars in the train, but somwhere between the first scene and the one in which the boy is snatched from danger it picked up an extra car, and there are three cars in the train when it dashes across the trestle.

"'The Confedcrate Ironclad" is a Civil War play in which an old wood-burning locomotive, driven, of course, by a young lady, takes a prominent part in the transportation of a carload of powder to the scene of battle. The engine is one of those real old ones, but—it was fitted with up-to-date automatic couplers!

"In another railroad play a fireman earns promotion to the right side of the cab and also the hand of the girl of his choice by catching a runaway engine which the little daughter of the superintendent has started and is unable to stop. The little girl climbs into an engine standing in the yard and is left by the engineer, who walks over to some friends. She does not heed his warning not to touch the throttle, with the result that she is soon beginning a locomotive joy-ride. The hero gives chase with another engine and brings her back safely. When I saw this play I wondered how all the switches happened to be set for this particular engine to get onto the main line in a busy yard."

* * * *

There is a great ado made about microbes, roller towels, public drinking cups, etc., but the danger of crowded audience rooms seems unobserved. Pure air in any theatre should be insisted upon, and many exhibitors have recognized this fact and installed ventilation devices. There is danger in the place where people have to breathe impure air over and over again.

We want to say a good word for the moving picture supplements now being carried by certain Sunday newspapers. These supplements gives photographs of the charming actresses of Filmland and scenes from the pictureplays. They are much better than the "boilerplate" service which is disseminating misinformation anent moving picture activities.

PHILADELPHIA CONVENTION VISITORS INSPECT LUBIN FACTORY

The visitors to the Moving Picture Exhibitors' League surprised Sigmund Lubin with a visit to the plant, Twentieth street and Indiana avenue, Philadelphia, Tuesday afternoon. Big as the institution is, it was hardly adequate to the madding crowd which came in upwards of fifty automobiles and sight-seeing cars with pennants and flags of the different states. They swarmed into the yard and corralled the entire staff of executive officers of the plant. Siegmund Lubin, Ira M. Lowry, Tom Cochrane, Tom Hopkins, H. A. D'Arcy and a dozen others were pressed into service to show the crowd the beauties and mysteries of the big film plant. All kinds of work was suspended for a couple of hours to make way for the throng who showed pictures for five and ten cents and wanted to see how and why they cost from $500 to $25,000 to make. The directors were all alert, Arthur Hotaling and his company came up from Atlantic City to assist in entertaining. A score of photographs of the crowd were made in the plant yard, which were developed and shown at the exhibit rooms of the Continental Hotel the same evening. Very conspicuous was the Pittsburg contingent, who had chartered a score of autos and made themselves noisy with pennants in the background of the picture. Among the important visitors were Pop Rock, president of the Vitagraph Company, Alfred H. Saunders, editor of the Moving Picture News, and many reporters of the local press and trade papers. Among others may be mentioned Clem Kerr, J. Hesser Walraven, George M. Roth, M. A. Neff, W. A. Johnstone, H. Berman, Fred. A. Clark, E. A. Jeffries, Walter Steumpfig, V. R. Carrick, Joe Brandt, Will Hanley and E. J. Robin.

GEORGE KLEINE'S PRODUCTION "QUO VADIS"

George Kleine with his marvelous photodrama production of "Quo Vadis" has started a "Quo Vadis" craze all over the country. All the leading stock companies are producing the play in dramatic form, there is a tremendous demand from all the booksellers for Sienkiewicz's romantic novel, from which both play and photodrama were adapted, and hosts of lecturers and public speakers are taking up the subject for platform work. Mr. Kleine's success has been wonderful, both artistically and financially, and, as is always the case, there is the usual horde of imitators, who cannot conceive an original idea themselves, but when another man does, they immediately copy it and trade on his brains and ingenuity. In the present case, however, Mr. George Kleine has the advantage because the whole world knows the Cines creation which Mr. Kleine controls exclusively for this country is a stupendous affair, which no other company over here could attempt to approach. They have not the actors, the local scenic facilities, or what is still more important, the money. As an illustration, however, of the lengths to which these modern pirates will go, an effort was made last week to steal the seventh reel of the picture now being exhibited in Chicago at McVicker's Theatre. A stranger called upon the operator in the booth and said that the main office of George Kleine, which happens also to be in Chicago, had sent him for reel number 7. Fortunately the operator was a wise young man, and, suspecting some trick, refused to deliver the reel without an order and until he had confirmed it. Consequently the trick failed. The seventh reel is one of the biggest features in a spectacular form of the production. It shows the great arena scenes, where the thousands of Roman citizens see the chariot races, the gladiatorial combats, the Christians being thrust to the lines and the conquest of the wild bull by the giant slave Ursus. It is a reel that cannot be made in this country, and is one of the big stumbling blocks to all imitators, pirates or thieves.

All the George Kleine "Quo Vadis" companies now established in New York, Chicago, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore are doing enormous business, outclassing the receipts of the big dramatic attractions even in season. A Southern company opens on June 2nd at Norfolk, Va., and the following week companies will be established in half a dozen of the other important cities of the country.

PILOT PREPARED FOR BIG BUSINESS

For the past several days a number of carpenters have been at work on a piece of land back of the Pilot plant, which the company has recently leased, erecting a large stage for summer use.

Owing to the fact that Pilot is turning out only one release a week, they found they did not need the studio every day, so started renting it to feature film makers for about two or three days of each week. Then they found such a demand for the studio, which is exceptionally equipped, that they decided to rush the outdoor stage. As soon as this stage is completed, it is believed both stages will be worked to full capacity every day, and probably nights as well.

UNION FEATURES AND THE ECLAIR COMPANY

There has been a change in the "Union Features" department of the Eclair Film Company. The resignation of Mr. J. D. Tippetts, the former manager, went into effect on June 1st.

In order that there be no misunderstanding, the Eclair Company wishes it known that "Union Features" has always been simply a department of the Eclair Company. It is still such a department and always will be.

The Union Features department of Eclair will continue to release regularly feature subjects from Europe, such as have built up the wonderful reputation of this "brand." In fact, in the future, these features will be better than ever since the European Eclair Company is making bigger and better productions every week.

The offices of Eclair and Union Features will remain at 225 West 42nd street, as always.

Since former Union Feature branch offices have been disposed of, the Eclair Company is now ready to consider propositions from any buyers in any section of the United States.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

WE believe in fair play, so permit the Director to have his inning. A leading director of pictureplays gives us the following statement:

"If your readers imagine for a moment that a drama, a comedy, a farce, or in a word a play is the manuscript that is handed to the director, well, they are dead wrong! When I am handed a play to read, I am not handed a play to read. Queer reasoning? Not at all. In the same way they may say: 'Here is the music,' putting into your hands some sheets of paper with dots and things strung along a wire fence. It isn't music. It is merely the directions for the music. And again, the play which you fondly supposed you were submitting to the director, is not a play at all, but simply the written directions for bringing one into being, and that play will exist only when the directions for it are being followed out and ofttimes anticipated. It is the director's forte to take those sheets of paper containing directions and make them reality. Sometimes the writers are vague, illogical, impractical, and then the director has to supply added directions of his own providing."

We will not argue with this director. A play is not a play—so be it. But we still assert that in too numerous instances the "written directions" are not followed simply because they do not appeal to the creator in question.

A Fallacy Exploded

That old bromide that poets and writers are always poor is exploded. Homer was a blind beggar; Poe was a bankrupt; Burns a trifler, and Chatterton committed suicide in a garret; but Alfred Noyes slipped over from England the other day, and declared himself to be a poet who made a good living working at his trade. According to Noyes, a man can make a living from poetry alone. There is a fallacy in this claim, somewhere. Most of our American poets have to engage in journalism or go upon the lecture platform in order to pay rent, and this leads us to the subject of pictureplay poets. How many of you pictureplaywrights kept the wolf from the door the past twelvemonth solely by scribbling pictureplay plots? Kindly hold up your inky right hands. Ah, we thought so! The number is alarmingly small. The majority earned their "$1,200 in spare time," to quote advertisements, while the rest had other irons in the fire. If the checks start to coming frequently, do not become dazzled but keep an anchor to windward. Despite the optimistic statements of the correspondence schools, it is a mighty hard matter to make a living solely by turning out pictureplays. There should be other occupations in the daily repertoire to swell the sum total of the joy-of-living.

Handicapping Your Script

Among the many good things in the May number of The Writer's Magazine, published in New York City, is an article by E. M. Wickes. We abstract therefrom as follows:

"The beginner in photoplay writing handicaps his work when he neglects to keep in touch with the various moving picture periodicals which endeavor to lessen the troubles of struggling writers. In The Moving Picture News, for example, Wm. Lord Wright conducts a column that offers more valuable information than could be obtained from several courses in some of the so-called schools. Were the tyro to read a few of these publications he would not injure his chances of success by attempting to write on a level with the inferior pictures he sees at the numerous theatres, as he would quickly discover that practically every reliable company has a staff of writers who can produce ordinary material by the mile.

"You may also prejudice an editor against you and your work by sending him a lengthy letter telling him of your ambitions, your reasons for taking up with scenario writing, and how you came to discover what you consider an entirely original plot. The editor is interested in your work, not in you, and does not have to be told about the plot, as he can ascertain at a glance whether it is original or not, and if he were unable to do so he would not be likely to be holding his position.

"These same editors, while they have done considerable reading, and are well trained in story structure, are not endowed with power of second sight, which would enable them to read into your manuscript the important parts that you may have omitted. And in view of this fact, you would do well to incorporate in your synopsis all the salient factors so that the editor can picture your complete story without wasting time reading through the scenes, for if you fail to interest him in the synopsis you stand an excellent chance of having your manuscript returned.

"The fact that the scenario editor is a well-read person should make it obvious to you that you only stultify yourself when you essay to sell him ancient plots. Of course, it is true that all plots are ancient to a certain extent, but there are so many ways of redressing them, so many methods of adding new twists to the fundamental ideas, that with a little serious thought and patience you can strip them of most of their antiquity and make them refreshing and interesting. What the scenario editor objects to is your use of them in the stereotyped form.

"Even though you may have avoided the above mentioned handicaps, which relate mostly to the elementary stage, there are others with which you may unconsciously burden your manuscript. The forced coincidence is one which not infrequently crops up in the work of new writers. This means the introduction of an action or character not congruous with the remainder of the plot, which has a tendency to make the story unconvincing."

A Fly-By-Night Sheet

A sheet made up mostly from this column, first published at Cleveland, later transferred to St. Louis, now makes its irregular appearance in Los Angeles. The editor jumps on Epes Winthrop Sargent for spelling practice with an s. If the fake editor would practice for a spell what he professes to teach, the unfortunates he has victimized would be far happier.

Editorial Etchings

Karl Coolidge has resigned as script editor of the Keystone Company.

Dr. J. Berg Esenwein, dean of a very successful study course in short story writing, and Arthur Leeds, the well-known pictureplaywright, have collaborated on a new book, "Writing the Photoplay," for the Home Correspondence School, of Springfield, Mass. Both writers are authorities in their lines, and the book should be standard.

James Dayton says he has written one hundred and seven thousand feet of scenario in the past twenty-six weeks, and some of the Universal releases bear out the statement.

Harrison Del Ruth, script writer for Universal, was accidentally shot and killed when a druggist at Los Angeles mistook Del Ruth for a burglar.

The Saturday Evening Post and the Vitagraph Company both released stories on "The Belled Buzzard" at about the same time. Both used the same theme in a different way. "The Belled Buzzard" was shot and killed down in Ohio the other day.

Director Griffith, of Biograph, is working on a production which he will let run until it is time to stop. It will be released in the odd length of 1,700 feet. Griffith always proves the pioneer.

Mr. Rieder's Opinion

Mr. W. M. Rieder, an exhibitor of Niles, Mich., writes:

"I hope you will continue your fight for the names of authors on films. It would drive out the thieves and plagiarists. Last night I ran "When Lincoln Was President." Have run practically the same idea, I believe, a dozen times before. One knew before the first one hundred feet that the hero would not permit his eyes to be bandaged, and that he would be rescued in the nick of time. How original! Publish names of authors; it will help cut out unoriginal stuff."

There are many other exhibitors who would like to see the names of authors appear on films and posters. Some of the directors are being so honored, and why not the writers who make the directors' work possible?

Pertinent Pointers

Be careful with names and scenes in your scripts. Do not draw them too closely to people and places you know.

Remember that even if you get a card from a Universal saying your "script is being held for consideration" you get no satisfaction even if the script is carried around for six months by some director and lost.

There is such a thing as innocent plagiarism. It occurs occasionally—not often. Subconsciously you will be impressed by the plot of some story and picture, and it may pop into your work a year later. Training and study will guard against this.

We never knew but one literary worker who could judge his own work. What you may think ordinary may prove a hit, and that which you feel is your masterpiece may be anything but that. At the same time we believe that the experienced writer can feel when the copy comes "hot." But that does not mean that he can judge to the point of its acceptance or popularity.

Take your time. Don't become hasty in the first flush of enthusiasm. There is no such encouragement to the beginner as the sale of a manuscript, and nine out of ten will sit down to the typewriter on check day and proceed to "earn another." Keep cool; wait while the waiting's good, and do not sit down to write until you have something to write about. Better one good script a month than eight bad ones.

On the University Campus

A Cincinnati concern advertises: "Send a dime and learn to write photoplays." You get a "sample scenario" printed on cheap paper.

A New York "Institute" recently advertised in a string of country newspapers and refused to pay the advertising bills.

A Chicago "College" has been advertising picture plays turned out by their students. The plays were written by those never connected with the "college."

Pathe Freres is not buying scripts, and yet the advertising of a Philadelphia "school" claims that "The Pathe Editor endorses work of our students."

Be Comprehensive

Watch your synopsis. Get it right. Too frequently the synopsis contains promises not fulfilled in the script proper, and other times the script proper will contain a novel idea that has been forgotten in synopsis. If you are writing for the general market keep your synopsis within 300 words and make it comprehensive. The lengthier synopsis, suggestions, and references are for those catering to some particular market. The newspaper correspondent can tell a world of information in fifty words, often the wire limit. You have six times as many words to tell your outline.

Some Fancy Requirements

Editor Horace Vinton got hold of a slip the other day that was sent to an unfortunate in reply to an inquiry as to the style of pictures desired. The requirements: "We use all classes of plays providing they are always strictly high class. Plot must never be a lot of incidents and must be developed by acting and not by any letters, sub-titles or other explanations thrown upon the screen. High-class comedies are also desired." Vinton thinks that any writer who could meet the requirements could also command $1.75 a word. The millenium will have come when scripts meeting the above demands are turned out.

Good Advice

Henry W. Mattoni has Silas Wegged a wee bit in urging all script writers to "stick to it," and not to become discouraged. His verses are clever and remind us of the poetry that James Carroll, winner of the Powers Prize Contest, used to turn out.

A Matter of Pride

Pride cuts more of a figure in the gentle art of writing scripts than one would imagine. We can name several successful writers of to-day who were made so because we pricked their pride a year or so ago. Here is a communication from a Southern writer: "Your comments are of the right character and fit my case. It is a matter of pride that I attempt the art. 'Always try to do what the other fellow is doing, if reasonable or possible,' is a favorite theme with me. I took up script writing as a pleasurable mental effort mainly, and if I have met with difficulties, why your words have helped me to persist in my ambition. After I get a script over I will be content, and then will I determine whether to follow it up." And we prophesy right now that when our friend does get that script over that there will be no question of following it up. A successful sale means enthusiasm and added incentive. This man refuses to quit until he makes a sale. He is proud. What others can do he can do, is his mental angle. And when he sells a script he will continue writing. They all do.

Dislikes Barroom Scenes

Will T. Henderson, the Chicago author, commends our stand against plots showing barrooms, intoxicated persons, women drinking liquor, and other doubtful details. He rightly believes that the author can do much toward uplifting the pictureplay by submitting only decent and high-class work. We hear much anent "the story with a punch." If the "punch" has a "spike" in it, eleminate it. Cast your story in an elevating environment; the barroom picture is an old, old story.

Stories for "Little Mary"

Mary Pickford is working for The Famous Players Film Company for nineteen weeks, and Editor B. P. Schulberg is in the market for the Mary Pickford kind of stories. While Mr. Schulberg's heart is with the script writers, as they all appreciate, he wishes to depend on certain old standbys. So do not take this notice as an invitation to join the Pickford script party and deluge Schulberg with unappropriate material. He will pay the highest prices on record for the kind of stories wanted, but they must be written by those who understand Miss Pickford's methods, and who have written Pickford plots.

Holiday Plots

Do not be tempted to write holiday plots. By these we refer to plots intended for Fourth of July, Labor Day, Christmas, etc. You may land one in a long, long time, but you have one chance in a thousand, and then your plot is no good for the general market. Let the editorial staff turn out the holiday plots.

Not Criticising Scripts

An error was made when it was stated in a recent advertisement appearing in this publication, that we were criticising and revising outside scripts. We have no time, at present, for such tasks, being engaged in criticising and revising our own work.

WM. LORD WRIGHT.

Lottie Pickford, now with the Pilot Company, decided to spend Decoration Day automobiling through the country. According to her schedule she was to be at home again at 11 A. M. of that day. A "blowout," however, changed this schedule just twelve hours. Miss Pickford had to make a hurried change and get her make up on for work at 1 P. M. She did it, but it was warm work.

* * * *

Kenneth Davenport, of the Pilot Company, came back with a broad smile on his face yesterday. He had been out on exteriors in the make-up of a "rube." He said he thought he would quit the "movies" as some farmer has offered him a job at $8.00 a week and board. "The work is hard but healthy," he said, and then they all laughed.

THE SAVING LIE

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Pathé Release)

WHEN the Jacksons were married their friends had said they were well mated, and great happiness was expected for them.

Cyril Jackson was a writer. He had won recognition just before his marriage, consequently his mind was to a large extent on his work at that time, although he was devoted to his bride. She, in turn, was not only devoted to her husband but was greatly interested in his work.

All went well at first. They bought a house and soon had a home to be envied. Mrs. Jackson was untiring in her efforts to please her husband. Especially did she take great care in the arranging of his study.

"I want you to be just as comfortable and happy here as possible," she told him when all was finished.

He put his arm around her and drew her to him. "Thank you, dear, for your good work. This is a lovely place to work, and I am sure I shall be very happy here."

"Is there anything else I can do for you?" she asked.

"Just one thing. I want to make a request of you. It is only a small one, but very important. Please never come into my study without knocking first. I don't like to be interrupted when I'm working. You can just knock and if I don't want you to come in I won't answer. That will be a good way, won't it?"

"Why, yes, I suppose it will," answered the young wife. "I'll be very careful not to disturb you."

She withdrew from his arms and slowly left the room. That evening at dinner she tried to be as usual, but there was a weight on her heart.

Things moved along smoothly in the Jackson household. Their friends were saying to one another how pleased they were that all had turned out as they had prophesied.

The entertainments the Jacksons gave were always harmonious and pleasant, and when they went out together nothing seemed amiss. Cyril Jackson, to all outside appearances, was a model husband.

Then as the social events grew more frequent the author was more seldom seen. "He is so very busy on his book," apologized Mrs. Jackson always.

"I know," said the others, "we really ought not to expect to see much of an author of fame. We should be glad that he comes out of his den at all."

After such an occasion Mrs. Jackson often sat by her dressing-room fire far into the morning, thinking, thinking. "Should I feel like this?" she asked herself over and over again. "Have I the right to wish more of his society when he is engaged in his work? I don't know," she invariably ended, "but I do want it."

Now and then, when she was very lonely, she waited patiently until he emerged from his den, and then she said, nestling up against him, "Dear, do you love me as much as you used to?"

Then he would laugh and say: "Why, what a foolish little woman you are. You have asked me that before. Do you think that I have stopped loving you just because I don't tell you so every hour?"

"A woman likes to hear it sometimes."

"Well, never mind, you can rest assured that I love you. Suppose I asked you over and over if you loved me? You would think I was crazy. I know you love me. I don't have to ask you."

"All right," she answered on the last occasion, "let us have some dinner now."

"Yes, we must. I have to get back to my work."

And so things went on and on until the inevitable and usual thing happened. Another man came. He was a friend of Cyril Jackson who had been away since he was married and did not know Mrs. Jackson.

This man was Willard Martin. He had grown up in the town where the Jacksons lived, and had left it only a year before their marriage.

When he left the town it was with an understanding with Mabel Wallace that upon his return, when his out-of-town business was settled, they would be married.

But Martin had met Mrs. Jackson soon after his return, and the marriage had not taken place.

"I might as well be honest with you, Mabel," he had said. "The simple truth is that I don't care for you as I did. I should like to break our engagement."

Of course the engagement was broken. Then Martin became a frequent visitor at the home of the Jacksons. He always asked for Cyril, and was always told that he could not be disturbed then, but that he might come in and wait for the author to appear. This he always did; and after the second occasion Cyril said to him:

"Martin, I am glad to have you come to the house whenever you care to if you don't mind waiting for me to be at liberty. Mrs. Jackson will be pleased to make you at home, I am sure."

Martin had jumped at the chance, and came upon every possible excuse. Mrs. Jackson was glad of anyone with whom to pass away some of her time, consequently she made her husband's friend welcome.

Soon Martin wanted her to go out with him. "Cyril will be glad to have you go," he told her when she hesitated. "He wants you to have diversion even though he can't give it to you."

Gradually Martin's way of speaking of Jackson to his wife changed. "Don't you sometimes feel that Cyril ought to give you more of his time?" or "Don't you feel neglected?" he asked.

"No," she always answered. "Of course I should like to be with him more and I am often lonely; but he must do his work."

"If I had such a beautiful woman for my wife I should not neglect her for any work in the world," he told her.

"Perhaps—perhaps you are a different sort of man—a different type. It would not necessarily mean that you loved her any more."

"Oh, but I should love her if she were like you. I would give up anything for her sake—if she were like you."

Mrs. Jackson laughed uneasily. "I am afraid you are trying to flatter me."

"No, no," he insisted, "you are the most beautiful woman in the world. I love you, I love you!"

"Mr. Martin, you must not speak like that to me. I do not care to hear you and I feel that you are betraying my husband's confidence."

"Your husband! What does he care? He shuts himself away from you day and night. What kind of a lover is he? When a man acts like that he is a husband alone; a woman wants a lover first and a husband afterward. Tell me, isn't that so?"

The young wife knew that it was so and for a moment she forgot Martin and the fact that he was making love to her. She forgot everything but that she wanted her husband for a lover again. She was even unconscious that the man beside her held her hands tightly in his. Her mind had gone back to the days of her husband's untiring devotion, and for a moment Martin sank into oblivion.

In that moment the door opened and Jackson came into the room. The room was shaded to keep out the heat, and in the deeper shadows were Martin and Mrs. Jackson.

Coming from the light into the darkened room, Jackson could not distinguish anything in the room.

"Hello, is anybody here?" he called.

The man and woman started, and came forward with ill-concealed consciousness.

Jackson started at them in surprise. "Oh," he said with constraint, "I did not know Martin was in here. Since Mrs. Jackson is not alone I shall return to my work."

When he had left the room Mrs. Jackson turned to Martin almost fiercely. "See what you have done! You have made my husband believe of me what is not true. Go! I never want to see you again."

"But surely——"

"Surely I love my husband," cried the distressed woman. "I love him as surely as I despise you. You came here as Cyril's friend and you have been a false one."

"Are you not at all to blame?" asked Martin with a sneer.

"I am to blame only in being so blind that I did not see through your disguise. I did not know that you were making love to me until a moment ago, and then I forgot it to think of him whom you say neglects me. I can truly tell you that I should rather have him with all his neglect than you with all the love a man could give a woman. Now go, please."

When Martin left the house he was pale with anger and disappointment. He went to his own rooms to think things over and calm himself.

Mabel Wallace lived a short distance from the Jacksons' home, and in going from there to his rooms Martin passed her home. She was sitting on the porch as he went by and saw his face and his disturbed manner.

"Something's happened," thought the girl. Intuitively she knew that Jackson had somehow discovered the situation. What was to be done she did not know, but she felt that she might be needed in some indescribable way, so kept her position and sharpened her eyes and her wits.

When a half hour had passed Mabel saw Cyril Jackson coming up the street from his home. She moved closer to the edge of the porch and looked keenly at the man's face as he passed. It was pale and determined, and his lips were pressed together in a thin line.

Mabel watched until she saw him turn into Martin's place. Then, without waiting for anything, she sped up the street.

Just outside the door she paused a brief moment to calm herself, then walked straight into the house. At the door of the room where the two men were she listened.

"I desire an explanation of your actions," she heard Jackson say in a voice of controlled anger.

"What do you mean?" fenced Martin.

"I have watched you lately and your actions in my house have not been those of a friend nor a gentleman. I want an answer, and if I don't get one that satisfies me, I'll shoot you without hesitation."

Martin did not speak and the girl in the hall knew that he had lost his nerve. Thinking nothing of what construction would be put upon her presence there, but only of her desire to save the man who had treated her so badly, she went into the room.

"I could not help overhearing what you said, Mr. Jackson," she began hastily, "and I must tell you that Mr. Martin and I are engaged to be married. He and Mrs. Jackson are good friends, that is all. You shouldn't mind, as I don't."

She forced a smile and put her hand into Martin's.

Jackson was confounded. "I must have been overhasty," he apologized. "Thank you, Miss Wallace, for preventing my carrying my mistake farther. I beg your pardon, Martin."

Martin recovered himself enough to blurt out, "It's all right, Jackson, it's all right. I don't blame you if you didn't understand."

When Jackson had gone, Martin turned to Mabel. "Well, little girl, I guess you must love me more than I thought," he said. "I didn't know quite what I was throwing over. It will be all right between us again, won't it?"

The girl drew back from his approach as she answered, "Thank you, Mr. Martin, for your kind offer, but you must not overestimate what I have done for you. I merely kept you from being shot. I would have done as much for a dog. Good day."

THE SUFFRAGETTES
Great Northern Release June 7th.

MANUFACTURERS WHO HAVE RECENTLY SECURED SPACE AT THE EXPOSITION

Ernest Boecker has taken space to boost his mechanical musical instruments.

The Famous Players Film Company have taken a reception booth where noted players will be assembled. Mr. Adolph Zukor, who in such a short time has become one of the best known men in the industry, thinks this exposition will prove of immense benefit to the entire industry.

Aschenbach & Miller, Inc., manufacturing chemists, will exhibit and demonstrate their Sanozone Disseminator and Perfume. This article is said to possess real merit.

The National Educational Film Company is planning to show the trade some new ideas.

The United Ticket Supply Company has a new idea it is anxious to bring to the exhibitors' notice.

The New York Telegraph booth will be presided over by its moving picture staff who are popular throughout the realms.

The very latest acquisition to the fold is the Moving Picture News. Alfred H. Saunders, Editor, has been a booster of the Exposition from its birth and has repeatedly told the committee that they might declare the News in at any time.

There are now over fifty concerns represented on the Exposition floor, and about fifteen others have declared their intention of getting in. No exposition in the history promises so great a success as the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art.

UNIVERSAL TO HANDLE GREAT NORTHERN SPECIAL FEATURE SUBJECTS

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, of 42 East Fourteenth street, has entered into an arrangement with the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, whereby the latter concern will, until further notice, handle all the feature subjects manufactured by the Great Northern Company. For some time past these features have been supplied for lower New York and New Jersey by the Improved Feature Film Company, but under the new arrangement it is expected that the service will be greatly accelerated by the Universal Company in the territory designated. It has been definitely decided upon by the officers of the Universal that the Great Northern features will be released as part of the regular program and in this manner, it is expected, greater vogue than ever will be given to these sterling multiple reel productions.

Charles Abrams, manager of the Great Northern Special Feature Film Company, explains that the shift from the Improved to the Universal Company was made simply for the good of the service.

"We have genuine features to deliver," said Mr. Abrams, "and our object is to have the lower New York and New Jersey territory covered adequately. With its methodical system and its chain of exchanges, we feel certain that the Universal Company will give the service that our feature productions merit. Our other territories are being looked after with equal care."

LESTER L. KAHN, VICE-PRESIDENT OF THE GOLDEN GATE FILM CO., DIES

Lester L. Kahn passed away in San Francisco on May 11th of scarlet fever. Mr. Kahn was twenty-four years old, and owned a half interest in the Golden Gate Film Exchange.

He was the boy who last July walked into the then newly born Film Supply Company of America and sat around in the sanctum of the Board of Directors day after day and convinced them that his was the house to handle their manufacturers' products on the Coast. He had a story to tell and he told it well. Then he waved five thousand dollars deposit in cash under their respective noses.

Sol. Lesser is the remaining member of the firm. He is an old man of twenty-three and is now in New York with his bride. "Kahn was a real fellow," said Lesser at the Hotel Knickerbocker the other day. "Knew him nine years and there weren't nine minutes I wasn't glad I knew him. Bought a half interest from me three years ago. He has left a big hole in California."

Mr. Lesser states that the policy of the company will be continued.

JUST GOSSIP

By The Mahoney

In these days of worshippers at the shrine of the "golden calf," gentility and breeding are looked upon lightly in this matter-of-fact democracy of ours, where one's barber, shoeblack and waiter accepts a tip when "in action" and addresses you as "Mister," and later greets you by your Christian name, and invites you to drink with him when chance throws you in his way in public; but gentility nevertheless scores when in evidence.

The Mahoney in the course of his peregrinations wandered into the Kinemacolor habitat, in the Mecca building, recently. From the moment he crossed the threshold, there was an unmistakable atmosphere of culture and refinement.

The young lady at the telephone greeted us in ones that were mild and encouraging. The youth who accepted our card did so in a manner worthy a Chesterfield. And when ushered into the sanctum of one of the officials, the reception accorded made us feel that we were heartily welcome.

How different from some places we have in mind!

We explained our mission, and presently the doors of the projecting room closed upon us. The carpet was so soft and yielding, and of such delicate texture, we were just a bit timid at first, but being reassured by a word of encouragement, we approached a row of massive leather-covered chairs and dropped into one.

Looking about us, an air of mysticism seemed to envelop the place. The room with its luxurious appointments appeared like a miniature theatre in the mansion of some multimillionaire. After a brief interval, we were favored with a private view of the latest Kinemacolor achievement, "The Scarlet Letter."

From the opening scene (a close-up view of Hester Prynne, gathering a bunch of flowers, hydrangeas in appearance), to the final exposure of the third reel, showing the open ocean, with a schooner rigged vessel of the period, all sails set, moving with swan-like grace on a sea of scintillating colors, was disclosed a display of portraiture, so sharp and plastic that they appeared to the viewer a moving panorama of animated paintings in oil.

The acting of the several characters left slight scope for criticism. In a word, it was superb. Dimmesdale, Hester Prynne, Chillingworth, Bellingham, and the elf-like Pearl, "the unpremeditated offshoot of a passionate moment," all showing a familiarity with the author's intent.

The theme of "The Scarlet Letter" is particularly appealing to The Mahoney, having read a scenario arranged by a close friend, more than a year ago, the self-inflicted torture of Dimmesdale and the envoi to the story being vividly recalled in the Kinemacolor production.

After viewing this masterpiece, showing the earth's natural coloring, one must needs realize how dismal and gloomy would be this world we live in if monochrome obtained in all things in nature.

UNIVERSAL FILM MFG. CO.

R. C. Smallwood, expert cameraman of the Universal West Coast Organization, and his wife, who in the world of motion pictures is known as Ethel Grandon, have arrived in New York City, having been called East by the very serious illness of Mrs. Smallwood's mother, Mrs. Edward S. Grandin. The many friends of the Smallwoods will be pleased to know that Mrs. Grandin has rallied wonderfully since her daughter's return, and is now on the road to complete recovery. Both Mr. Smallwood and Miss Grandon expect to work around New York this summer, for one of the Universal Eastern companies.

A new series of jungle pictures are to be filmed at Universal City, Cal., in the near future, which will far eclipse in artistic excellence and thrilling interest, any which previously have been taken in America. This is made possible by the recent purchase by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of a trainload of lions, tigers, bears, pumas, leopards, jaguars and other wild denizens of the tropical forests.

G. E. Kann, confidential secretary to President Carl Laemmle, and newly elected member of the Board of Directors of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, celebrated his advent to the new dignities on May 19th, by severely lacerating his left hand. The accident occurred when Mr. Kann pushed his hand through a glass door, thinking it unlocked. The resultant wound was dressed by Dr. Quagglia of the Flower Hospital, who was summoned by Mr. J. L. Kenney, night superintendent of the Universal offices. Despite the fact that ten stitches had to be taken in his hand, Mr. Kann gamely resumed his duties, and has been continuously on the job ever since.

Phillips Smalley, director of the well-known Rex brand of moving pictures, was taken suddenly ill at his home in Universal City on May 15. His many friends were relieved to learn next day that he was out of danger. On the advice of his physician, Mr. Smalley has taken a week of complete quiet, and it is hoped that he may be able to resume his activities in a few days.

Lincoln J. Carter, world famous author and playwright, who has been producing pictures at Universal City for the past few months, leaves for a vacation in the east in a few days. Mr. Carter has been directing some of the productions of the Universal Company. After a trip which will probably take him as far as New York, Mr. Carter will return to California and resume his duties with the Universal Company.

Douglas Gerrard, a member of Phillips Smalley's Rex Company, says he does not like Western saddles. At the picnic on May 11th "Doug" had a hard time trying to master the favorite saddle of the West. Finally in disgust Gerrard said: "Give me an English saddle and I will ride in all the races." In addition to being an actor of note, Gerrard is also a finished horseman, having been a member of one of England's crack cavalry regiments.

Reliance (2 Reel) Release June 14th.

FAMOUS PLAYERS ENGAGE J. SEARLE DAWLEY

Considerable gossip has followed the engagement by the Famous Players Film Company of J. Searle Dawley. Congratulatory remarks figure in these comments, directed now toward Mr. Dawley and now toward the Famous Players, but we venture the belief that both are to be complimented upon their association. Mr. Dawley has been engaged to produce some of the big subjects for which the Famous Players are becoming more famous, and his past performances encourage the conviction that he is peculiarly adapted to this more important work.

Mr. Dawley grew up in theatrical circles, and after a varied and extended experience, but at still a comparatively young age, manifested a keen knowledge and discernment of the principles of dramatic construction and production. After an exhaustive study of the theatrical world in all its phases, equipped with a comprehensive mastery of stage technique and an intuitive sense of dramatic value, Mr. Dawley employed his creative and imaginative genius, and set to work on a number of plays. The public has applauded no less than fifteen of his dramatic works, three of which have been on the road for four years—a certain sign of their popularity and appeal. Mr. Dawley's works include such historical subjects as "Marie Antoinette," his greatest success, which made a decided hit and is still popular in many sections of the country.

It was almost to be expected that a man of such obviously active turn of mind and keen mental vision should have realized the unusual and increasing possibilities of the motion picture. Becoming affiliated with the industry, he quickly mastered film technique and after an association of five years with the Edison Company as general stage director, he is today an authority on motion picture production.

Under Mr. Dawley's capable directions have been produced the most strikingly spectacular and dramatic subjects of the Edison studios, among them being numbered "The Battle of Trafalgar," "Paul Jones," "The Doctor," and "The Man Without a Country."

A remarkably developed artistic sense, an infallible dramatic perception, an eye trained in proportion and perspective and a dominant personality combine to make Mr. Dawley invaluable in producing large, spectacular plays. His connection with the Famous Players Film Company should presage big events, and the wide scope of that company should enable Mr. Dawley to surpass his hitherto most supreme efforts .

WOULD-BE ACTORS' COMPETITION AT EXPOSITION

With the sole idea of discovering unknown talent a competition has been arranged whereby any man, woman, girl, or boy who has an idea that he or she has a talent for acting will be afforded an opportunity of showing how good they may be before competent judges at the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, to be held at the New Grand Central Palace, July 7th to 12th. Two sessions will be held daily during the week. The lady and gentleman who win at each performance will take part in the semi-final Saturday afternoon, and from these, twelve will be selected for the final trial on Saturday evening at 9 p m.

To the winners will be given a cash prize and an engagement with one of the biggest film manufacturers in the country.

The Scenario to be used is as follows:

"A man or a woman enters a room in a state of deep despair, sits at a table, then hearing a knock at the door rises to receive a letter. The letter is opened and announces the fact that he or she has inherited $50,000 from an unexpected source, which naturally causes the actor to show surprise, joy, and excitement. The envelope, which has been lying face downward on the table, is then turned over, and is found to be addressed to a totally different person. Surprise and disappointment are shown, then the funny side is noted, and the scene ends with a hearty laugh."

This story is simple, but there is plenty of opportunity for action.

WHEN MEN HATE

Warner's Features have just released a superb three-reel production with Miss Gene Gauntier, the versatile picture actress, in the title role.

Sidney Olcott directed the picture from Miss Gauntier's scenario, and the finished product is indeed an excellent piece of work.

The story deals with a feud between the Morrisons and the Westons. Miss Gauntier plays the part of Ruth, an only daughter of Jem Morrison, who returns from the convent to nurse her father who has been wounded in a renewal of the feud. J. J. Clark, as Donald Weston, kidnaps Ruth, and forces her to marry him at the point of the gun, thus revenging himself for the killing of his own father by a Morrison. A black cat plays an important part in this three-reel drama, and proves to be the means of eventually bringing the feud to an end and restoring its mistress to the man who has won her by brute force.

MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

To show that we are not alone in our interpretation of the iniquitous Oldfield Bill, the trend of which is to penalize invention and enterprise generally, we beg to quote from an address delivered last month by Gilbert H. Montague before the National Association of Manufacturers' annual convention, at Detroit, Mich.:

"Pending in Congress to-day is a bill which cuts down from seventeen years to three years the most essential protection now afforded to manufacturing patent owners, and lays upon manufacturers of patented articles prohibitions and penalties in respect to the merchandising of patented articles which, if imposed upon the merchandising of articles generally, unpatented as well as patented, would never for a moment be tolerated in any commercial country in the world.

"This bill cannot be disregarded as pure freak legislation. Reported favorably by the House Committee on Patents in the last Congress, and reintroduced in the present Congress by Chairman Oldfield of that committee, its possibilities of evil to small manufacturers, to independent inventors, and to their industrial research, experimentation and development, that alone keep America in the front rank of nations, constitute the most menacing cloud upon the business horizon.

"The excuse offered for this universal proscription of patents is that patents are sometimes 'suppressed.'"

Thomas A. Edison has time and again declared that he never knew of a valuable invention being suppressed. For twenty-seven days the House Committee on Patents took testimony upon the Oldfield bill, and not a single case of "suppression" was cited. Almost unanimously the witnesses emphatically opposed the bill with conclusive proofs that its proposals were unwise. If the small independent manufacturer could be compelled to license his big competitors to manufacture all the second and third best inventions that he has acquired, tested and laid aside in favor of his best invention, his big competitors, with their superior advantages of capital and selling organization, could soon crowd the smaller manufacturer, even with his superior invention, completely off the market.

In the closing days of the last Congress, members of the House Patent Committee, representing both parties, united in a minority report against the Oldfield bill. They showed that every evil for which the bill had been urged could be cured under existing laws, and that under the Sherman act interpreted by the Supreme Court in many recent decisions, the patent laws afford no protection to any form of restraint of trade. Thirty-five years ago, an assault upon the patent system, embodying proposals almost identical with those of the Oldfield bill, was defeated in the United States Senate. If American manufacturers and inventors, whose existence is now threatened by the Oldfield bill, join hands with the opponents of the Oldfield bill in Congress, the patent system can again be saved.

The object of Auguste Vantier-Dufour, of Grandson, Switzerland, in his Letters Patent No. 1,058,501 is to provide such a structure that, if desired, objectives with very different focal lengths may be used with one and the same camera, and one in which objectives with relatively very great focal lengths may be used in a camera of relatively small dimensions, which is thus easily handled.

The first part or box a, which is so constructed as to be placed inside of the second part b, in order to reduce the size of the camera for transportation, carries the objective lens c at the front end, opposite which is placed a mirror d. This mirror is carried by a shutter or swinging board a^1 which forms the rear end of the part a of the camera. At the forward end of b is placed a removable board e, carrying a mirror f. At the end of part b, opposite to that carrying the board e, a movable frame g is placed, supported by a board g^1 slidably mounted between guides placed on the bottom of the part b of the camera. In the frame g is formed a slide g^2 of the same dimensions as that receiving the board e at the forward end of b. The frame g may be moved near to or farther from the end wall b^2 of part b, which end wall is provided with a central opening, and is connected to the frame g by a bellows i. Whenever the apparatus is set up, as shown, and its parts are placed in their operative positions, the lower portion of the part a is maintained in an opening in the upper wall of the part b by a piece b^3, carried by the part b, and the forward edge of which engages a member a^2 provided at the rear side of the part a. At its front side, the part a is secured to the part b by a lock k, pivotally mounted at k^1 on the upper wall of the part b, and the free end of which is engaged with the underside of a plate a^3, carried by the part a.

Whenever photographs are to be taken with the objective lens c, having great focal length, a frame with ground glass, or a plate or film-carrier, is placed in the slide g. The light coming from lens c is then successively reflected by the mirrors d and f before reaching the ground glass, or the plate or the film. To take photographs with an objective lens of shorter focal length, the objective lens c is closed by a cap, and for the board e is substituted a board on which is mounted any particular objective lens with which it is desired to take the photograph.

A newspaper of Durban, South Africa, relates the following incident which occurred in the Durban corporation electric power station. "The electric power station staff received a fright on Monday night, when a pet monkey, finding that he was not appreciated at home, looked in and tendered his services to the engineer-in-charge, but got a greater fright still—at least, the staff hope he did. It seems that Jacko, on entering the building, took his appointment for granted and set off on a tour of inspection of the machinery. Fearful lest his lack of technical skill would result in trouble, the men in the station gave chase. There was an exciting five minutes and the new hand, not appreciating the attention paid him, took refuge in the recesses of some high-tension electrical switch-gear compartments and—vanished in a column of smoke, doing the disappearing trick even more effectively than ever Nicola managed it." This ought to be a warning to some of the Legislative primates who attempt to monkey with our Patent Laws, the high potential of which is entirely beyond their comprehension. We would not begrudge them the privilege of "electrocide," but unfortunately their ignorance is a serious menace to science and industry.

Beautiful photographic slides, etc., may be attained without the use of a camera by obtaining a negative directly from a thin cross-section sliver of wood laid in contact with a sensitized surface, to be developed after exposure in the usual manner. A positive print from such a negative reveals an accurate reproduction of the cells, fibre, etc., of the wood, and when projected on the screen is not only interesting but highly instructive as well.

The accompanying view represents a side elevation of a projecting apparatus constructed in accordance with the invention of Edward Bausch, George Hommel, William L. Patterson and Ernst Sailer, of Rochester, N. Y., assignors to Bausch & Lomb Company. The invention relates to improvements in apparatus adapted for use in projecting enlarged images of various objects or view slides onto a suitable screen, for use in connection with lectures or other illustrative purposes, and the object of the invention is to provide such an instrument of such a construction as will possess ample rigidity to assure the maintenance of the proper optical relations of the different optical elements, and to provide an improved instrument having its parts so constructed that the different elements may be interchanged one with the other in order that an instrument may be converted into various forms to adapt the apparatus for universal application to the different methods of projecting images of objects having widely different characteristics, as well as to enable two or more of the instruments to be built up in units to permit simultaneous projection from both instruments or lanterns such as is desirable in color work, or to permit the lanterns to project their images on the screen in such a way that one view gradually dissolves or blends into the next succeeding image. The accompanying drawing represents a side elevation of a projection apparatus constructed in accordance with the invention, the upper lantern being arranged for vertical projection and the lower lantern for microscopic projection. As there are twelve other figures in the patent and a specification of 800 folios, including 16 claims, abridgment is impossible within our limited space. The Patent is numbered 1,059,969, and should be referred to for details of construction to which the claims are limited.

Registration No. 91,710 has been granted the Societe Anonyme Utocolor, La Gerenne, Colombes, France, for "UTOCOLOR" as a Trade-Mark for Developers, Intensifiers, and Fixing Agents for Photography, used since September 28th, 1911.

The Philippine legislature recently passed an act which provides that owners of patents which have been issued or may hereafter be issued duly registered in the United States Patent Office under the laws of the United States relating to the grant of patents shall receive in the Philippine Islands the protection accorded them in the United States under said laws and that any infringement of such rights shall subject the person or party guilty of such infringement to the liabilities created and imposed by the laws of the United States relating to such matters, provided that a duly certified copy of all such patents shall be filed with the proper bureau or office of the Philippines, and it also provides that the rights of property in patents and trade-marks secured in the Philippine Islands to persons under the Spanish laws shall be respected in said territory the same as if such laws were in full force and effect.

The Victor Animatograph Company, of Davenport, Iowa, has been granted registration No. 91,722 of the accompanying Trade-Mark for Kinematographs, Kinematographic Cameras, Stereopticons, Stereopticon Slides and Records, Kinematographic Film, Projecting Lanterns, Stereotropes, Microscopic Motion Pictures and Slides, and Autochrome Slides, used since September, 1912.

A press dispatch from Berlin tells of the opening, the latter part of March, of what is said to be the finest Cinematograph theatre in that city. It is owned by two New Yorkers, and stands in the heart of the fashionable residence section of the German capital. The dispatch continues: "The design is that of a Greek temple, and the trimming is in gold and ivory. The roof is removable, so that the audience will have only the stars overhead on pleasant nights. Germany, like the rest of the world, is Cinematograph mad. Its passion for film entertainment will be fanned afresh by such luxurious shows as that which will henceforth be provided the Berliners through American enterprise.

At the annual meeting of the directors of the Provincial Cinematograph Theatres (Ltd.), a company operating theatres in various parts of Great Britain, it was stated that there are approximately 4,000 limited companies and 2,000 privately owned Cinematograph theatres in the United Kingdom, with a combined capital of some $49,000,000. Nearly $13,000,000 of the capital is engaged in producing films, etc., in connection with the industry, making a total capital for the whole industry of at least $62,000,000. Employees, who a few years ago did not exceed 1,000, are now estimated to number more than 130,000, while the weekly wage bill amounts to over $1,216,600. At least 8,000,000 people visit the motion-picture theatres of Great Britain every week.

"An onlooker shook his head as he watched a steam shovel bite off earth by the ton. He said: 'It throws men out of work; it loads the cars faster than a hundred men with picks and shovels could do it.'

"But another onlooker answered:

" 'See here, mister, if it would be better to employ a hundred men with picks and shovels on this job, wouldn't it be better still, by your way of thinking, to employ a thousand men with forks and tablespoons?' "—Rio Grande Employers' Magazine.

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of The Moving Picture News.

MR. H. BLACHE SEVERS HIS CONNECTION WITH GAUMONT CO.

We are in receipt of a communication from Mr. Herbert Blaché, who was formerly general manager and vice-president of the Gaumont Company, with offices and studio at Flushing, L. I., informing us that he had severed his connection with that corporation and in the future would not be identified with them.

Mr. Blaché has joined forces with his wife, Madame Alice Blaché, and together they will guide the destiny of the Solax Company. The Solax Company's feature policy, which includes the plan to increase the feature output from one a month to one a week, has made it imperative that Mr. Blaché, who has a particular aptitude for feature production and executive direction in these matters, take up the work with his wife. Mr. Blaché, besides devoting the greater part of his time to the producing department, the department of the industry for which he has a preference, will also assist wherever he can be useful. Madame Blaché has painstakingly developed an effective producing force, besides having built up a smoothly working organization and general result-getting equipment. Now with Mr. Blaché to co-operate, the Solax Company will be doubly strengthened. The business is increasing steadily and the Solax feature department has grown to be as large as the regular release department, which produces regularly two a week, a comedy and a drama. The Solax foreign office, conducted by J. Frank Brockliss, it is reported, is doing big business, and it is said that Solax is one of the most popular American brands abroad. With their interests so rapidly developing, the Blachés felt that it was imperative that they work together and that Mr. Blaché disassociate himself from his other interests.

GREATEST NOVELTY IN THE WORLD TO BE SHOWN FOR THE FIRST TIME IN AMERICA AT THE EXPOSITION

Al. H. Woods has bought the North American rights of the Life Target, and will exhibit it for the first time publicly at the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art to be held at the New Grand Central Palace, July 7th to 12th. Over a quarter of a million dollars these rights have cost Mr. Woods, but he has without doubt the greatest novelty in the world. The old stunts of hit the nigger in the eye, shooting the clay pipes, etc., fade into oblivion beside this new stunt, which is another attribute to the motion picture art, where possibilities are beyond conception at this time.

The Life Target was first shown at the recent London Exposition and was a full grown riot. If the slowly aroused Englishmen took so great an interest in it that it was the center of attraction during the entire show, how will our ever restless Americans appreciate it?

What is the Life Target? It is a specially constructed contrivance so arranged that one may shoot at life-sized objects so projected on a screen that each shot may be clearly seen for several seconds. Who is there among us who will not welcome an opportunity to take a shot with an honest to goodness rifle at a nearly honest to goodness lion charging upon us from the wilds of a South African forest?

You and everybody else will be given this opportunity if you attend the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art. Mr. Woods has made special arrangements with the Exposition Committee to stage this marvelous invention on the entire north side of the New Grand Central Palace.

But as great an attraction as this Life Target is sure to be, it will not shine all by itself, for the Committee has planned to stage a one-person comedy that will astonish some of the natives of Broadway. Surely this Exposition gives promise of showing even New Yorkers something startling in the way of amusements.

As for the delegates, and others of the thousands of motion picture exhibitors who will attend the Convention, New York boys are going to show them that this is a regular town. William Hilkemier, the Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, has made arrangements for some great parties, not the least of which will be a visit in a special train to Hempstead Plains, where noted airmen will perform stunts for the pleasure of the onlookers. Moonlight sails and banquets will also be dealt out in pleasing proportions.

Then there is the serious side of this convention, the third of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America. The League, which is now composed of practically every state in the union, stands for all that is right, believing in the rights of government bodies, and of a censorship board, but the laws governing the motion picture industry to-day are in a state of chaos, and it is hoped by President Neff and the other officers of the League that this Convention will be the means of enacting better legislation governing this wonderful industry than is in vogue at the present time.

From a business standpoint the Exposition offers great inducements to both the manufacturer and the exhibitor. The former can make a direct demonstration of the article for sale to the buyer; while the latter can look them all over and choose for himself the article best fitted for his individual use.

That the Exposition would be a success no one ever questioned, but that it would grow to such great proportions no one even imagined. The opening date is a month away, but at this time there is very little space left on the Exposition floor and yet there are a number of the largest concerns in the business who have not yet reserved space, but who intend to do so.

Some have big spaces and some have small, but one and all are boosting for the event of events in the history of motion pictures.

SELIG POLYSCOPE COMPANY

Miss Rose Evans, character woman of the Chicago studios of the Selig Polyscope Company, is an author of note, having more than a score of special published essays and short stories to her credit.

Harry Lonsdale, one of the more recent additions to the Selig Chicago studio stock, is a former member of the famous Opera Comique in London. He has also played in support of Nat Goodwin, the late Richard Mansfield, and other famous stars. Lonsdale's greatest ambition is to produce, his favorite sport is golf, his favorite author is Longfellow, and his favorite pastime is entertaining at his home.

Frank Clark, the popular character actor of Selig's Pacific Coast Studio stock, was formerly one of the big theatrical magnates of Australia, where he owned many theatres and several attractions. Financial reverses and a love for his native land brought him back to the States, where he joined the Selig Polyscope Company and has remained ever since.

NEW M. P. MACHINE FOR STAR THEATRE, OGDENSBURG, N. Y.

Mr. Fred Gilroy, Star Theatre, Ogdensburg, N. Y., an old user of Motiograph machines, has just placed through Mr. J. H. Hallberg, "The Economizer Man," an order for 1913 Model Motor Driven Motiograph. Mr. Hallberg reports an unusual demand for the well-known Hallberg Standard A. C. Economizers, and he shipped out twenty-seven of them during the past week alone. Old exhibitors who have been using the Hallberg for four or five years in equipping new shows demand the Economizer and will take no substitute.

WHEN THE CAT'S AWAY (June 26).—Mr. and Mrs. Butterworth go to a masquerade ball. In their absence their three servant girls entertain three policemen, who proceed to eat and drink up everything in the immediate neighborhood.

About 3 a. m. Mr. and Mrs. Butterworth stagger in. The policemen are caught unawares and do not know how to escape without being caught. They might be fired from the "force" if caught eating Mr. and Mrs. Butterworth's perfectly good provender. They pretend that they entered upon hearing a "burglarious" noise. To carry their deceit further they arrest Mr. and Mrs. Butterworth, pretending to believe them to be he- and she-male burglars. The Butterworths make an awful howl on their being arrested as burglars in their own home. They are quickly released upon being identified. The police inspector strongly reproves the policemen for their overzealousness. The Butterworths are soft-hearted ninnies and believe that inasmuch as the policemen showed excessive zeal in keeping such strict watch they should be rewarded. Accordingly they send a check for $100, to be distributed among them. Inasmuch as the three policemen are about to be married to the three maids the $100 comes in handy. There is housekeeping on the wholesale.

URBAN ECLIPSE

BEHIND A MASK (June 11).—Jack North, a young artist, while touring South America, meets with a queer experience while out sketching. An apparition appears to him of a beautiful young girl in a reclining position, and he is about to sketch her when a man emerges and draws her away. He is Don Ramon Valdez, her guardian and tutor, who afterwards reproaches the Indian servant for allowing Lola to leave the villa. Jack having become curious, returns the next day and he and Lola are about to engage in a conversation when Valdez again appears and, removing Lola's veil, shows Jack a horrible face disfigured with black marks.

Disappointed, the artist goes back to his hotel and soon afterwards receives a mysterious letter, asking him to save a woman from distraction by being present at the Governor's ball. Attracted by the mystery of the adventure Jack accepts the invitation and, disguised under a domino, meets Lola, who, to his surprise, is now a beautiful woman. In fact, to avenge herself for her master's brutal treatment, the Indian girl who had disfigured Lola on Don Ramon's orders years before, had used artifices only known to her to restore the girl's beauty.

Valdez, infuriated at not finding Lola at home, rushes to the ball, but in the meantime Jack has wrapped himself in Lola's Domino, and when the tutor arrives, he mistakes the painter for his pupil and drags him home. There the tables are turned. Valdez asks the supposed Lola to sign a schedule bequeathing all her fortune to him, and Jack signs the paper. Seeing the young man's name, Valdez unmasks him, but Jack draws a revolver and keeps the scoundrel at bay until Lola and friends of the artist arrive and overpower Valdez. Thus saved by Jack's courage, Lola warmly thanks him with a kiss.

PAPITA'S DESTINY (June 13).—About the year 1830, there lived in a small village in Southern California Papita, daughter of the widow Francesca. They were very poor, and when Papita fell in love with Pedro, a handsome but equally poor young man, Francesca took matters into her own hands and without even consulting Papita, gave her consent to a marriage contract between her daughter and Alvarez, the wealthiest man in the village. Manuel, a crippled saddler, also loved Papita. He had loved her since she was a child, when he had danced her on his knee. His love was that of an elder brother, and Papita, still scarcely more than a child, confided everything to him. To pacify her mother, Papita married Alvarez, and before very long, his cruel nature asserted itself. Despairing for her child's future, Francesca realized too late the mistake she had made, and one night, after Alvarez had been particularly cruel to Papita, both Pedro and Manuel visited Francesca; and, as Papita entered her mother's house, she said in a burst of passion, "Oh, I wish he were dead." Both Pedro and Manuel decided that one of them must relieve Papita from the cruelty of Alvarez, but Pedro's strength of will was not equal to the task. Manuel, however, with the almost fanatical love for Papita burning within him, decided to secure her freedom, and later that night he accomplished his purpose. When Papita returned to her home, she found Alvarez dead. Believing Pedro committed the act, she took the blame upon herself and was taken to prison. Manuel learned of her arrest and sent word to the Padre declaring himself guilty of the crime. On the strength of his confession, Papita was set free, and a search was made for Manuel, who, in the meantime, had attempted to cross the desert without water. His weak body could not stand the strain, and he passed on to a higher judge to answer for his earthly sins.

AMERICAN

THE REWARD OF COURAGE (June 14)— Henry sat about the country club golf grounds and mooned with himself over a bad ankle. When Grace Wallace and her mother arrived, he was chagrined to note that Grace readily went off with Jim Wilde, whom Henry detested. Henry couldn't dance, but could sit so as to see Jim dance with her. In desperation, he finally asked her to go motoring with him. Grace gladly consented. Jim overheard, and, going ahead to the garage, destroyed Henry's carburetor. Henry caught him just as he was leaving, and a wrangle occurred. Later, Jim asked Grace to go canoeing with him, and Grace, peeved at Henry's delay, consented. Just as they were stepping in the canoe, a messenger arrived with a telegram. Jim read it, frowned, and tore it in half, tossing the pieces aside. It read, "Come home or send money immediately. Your wife and child very ill. Dr. Debbins."

An hour later, Henry hobbled down to the beach and found a portion of the telegram. He carefully tucked it away, and, after a hunt, found the other piece. Some time after that, moodily strolling along the beach he saw Jim attempt to kiss Grace. Over went the canoe, and in the struggle that followed, Jim repeatedly pushed Grace under the water, that he might be saved. Forgetting his ankle, Henry sprang into the surf, rescued Grace, and brought her safely to shore. He put her into Jim's car, and at once they motored away, leaving a shivering and disconsolate would-be lover howling after them on the beach and threatening suit for running away with his car.

Two days later Henry called. Leaving Grace for a moment, she affectionately put his coat to her lips, when out fell a part of the telegram reading: "your wife and child very ill," etc. Grace cried for an hour. When Henry returned, he learned the cause, and quickly discovered the other part of the envelope, containing the address of James Wilde.

KINEMACOLOR

REEDHAM DRILL.—Reedham Orphanage is at a little town called Purley, not far from London. It is for the children of soldiers, and is managed under the direct patronage and interest of the King and Queen. Before King George came to the throne very little was known as to what his capacity as a monarch was likely to be, but he was known throughout the British Empire to be a thoroughly good sportsman and a good father, and the interest he takes in the young people of Great Britain is not perfunctory.

This particular school being for Soldiers' Orphans, they are taught there the duties that they themselves will have to perform when they become members of the British Army, and one of the features of the school is the annual display of fancy marching. To the sound of their instructor's whistle they form various stars and circles, this being coronation year, the last figure they make is the Imperial Crown, and underneath, the King's Royal initials, G. R., standing for George Rex.

MUMPS.—Walter, a young millionaire, sees Mary and falls in love with her. For a long time he follows her, but cannot learn her name, until she writes an advertisement for a chauffeur. Jack buys a chauffeur suit and a book, "How to Run an Automobile in One Lesson," and gets the position. A very funny scene shows him with his book and his auto, trying to master the machine. When Mary comes out, the book is hidden. With great difficulty he gets the auto started, but cannot stop it. Finally the machine "goes dead." Jack crawls under it, and with his book is trying to discover the trouble. There is a flash of flame, and Jack, much the worse for wear, is blown under the machine. A passing auto takes them home.

Through nursing her little sister, who is ill with that childish ailment, Jack and Mary both get the mumps and are confined to their rooms with swollen faces. Mary hears burglars and tells Jack. In a tussle with the burglars he is knocked senseless, while Mary phones for the police. A funny scene shows all the frightened women in one bed, covering their heads with the bed clothes. The police arrive, but the burglars put pistol and mask on the unconscious Jack, who is taken to the police station. There it is discovered that he has the mumps, and terror fills the police quarters.

On being released, Jack packs his grip and starts to leave, but Mary detains him. A very funny love scene between these two ends in a struggle for a kiss—swollen faces preventing. The last scene shows the police station, with the entire police force in the clutches of mumps.

Marguerita. Indeed, it is this very fact which has made Don Guillermo so bitter.

The American sees Marguerita and love comes to them unheralded. This complicates the situation badly, especially as they are observed and their feelings noted by Pablo. Pablo feels that this is doing him a grievous wrong, as Marguerita has been promised to him by her father, and he takes violent exception. Before he can strike Luis, however, Don Guillermo interferes, and the American is forced to await an encounter at a later date. Pablo and Guillermo leave, Pablo anxious to return and fight it out with Luis at once but Guillermo succeeding in persuading him to depart.

Don Carlos is explaining matters in relation to the hacienda when Padre Flores arrives. The interruption gives Luis a chance to slip away with Marguerita, and they plight their troth in a pretty garden. As they are exchanging loverlike confidences Don Pablo observes them and his anger rises more and more. He rushes in upon them and he and Luis rapidly come to blows. Pablo attempts to stab Luis but is knocked down and Marguerita stops the American from pressing his advantage further.

Luis and Pablo meet on a road near the hacienda and have a violent quarrel. As they are quarreling Don Guillermo comes along the same road. He stops some distance away and watches them. Then he sees a chance to effectively dispose of both his rivals at once. As they fire he also fires, killing Don Pablo. Luis thinks that he has killed Pablo and flees the place. Guillermo informs the rurals that Brandon has killed Pablo and a search is instituted for him. But Brandon has found a friend in Padre Flores who takes him in and hides him from possible scarchers in the guise of a lay-brother.

Guillermo has informed Don Carlos that his foreman is a murderer and using his knowledge of Don Carlos failing as a lover has forced his consent to a marriage with Marguerita. The daughter spurns Guillermo, at first, but when she learns that Guillermo can send her father to prison, she gives herself to Guillermo to save him.

As Luis is working in the gardens Padre Flores the good father is summoned to arrange the marriage articles between Marguerita and Guillermo. He tells Luis of this and the American is distraught with grief. Padre Flores leaves to arrange the articles as he feels he must and while he is absent Guillermo comes for a confessional. He mistakes Luis for a priest, an error which is furthered by the lay-brother, and makes his confession to him. In this he admits the killing of Pablo. Luis uses this confession to secure aid from the rurals and Guillermo is arrested just as he is about to become the husband of Marguerita. Luis, of course, is cleared and as the captain of rurals and his men take Guillermo away, Padre Flores has the pleasure of continuing the marriage ceremony of his friend Senorita Marguerita, but with a different bridegroom and one more to the liking of herself and her father.

WOMEN AND WAR (Two Reel) (June 21).—During the Civil War, there were two sisters living in Virginia, who had as a near neighbor a young, wealthy and patriotic man, who visited them frequently. The elder sister was plain and attractive, but possessing a patriotic spirit and sterling qualities. The younger sister was pretty and doll-like, superficial, frivolous and fond of luxury. The elder sister was capable of a deep and undying devotion, while the younger was only capable of shallow affection.

Both of the sisters love the neighbor in their separate ways. He is subconsciously attracted hy the inner worth of the elder sister, but this attraction is overbalanced by the beauty of the younger. The one thing in common between the elder sister and the neighbor is their respect and patriotic love for the Stars and Stripes, despite all interstate controversy. The younger sister, on the other hand, is too frivolous to even be partisan. Patriotism is to her nothing but sentimental twaddle.

The younger sister plainly tells the elder one that she is in love with the neighbor and is determined to win him. The elder sister, smarting under the taunts of the younger one about her plain looks, assumes an indifferent attitude towards the neighbor, who finds solace in the younger's smile and in a moment of impulse he asks her to become his wife. She accepts and he departs rejoicing.

The elder sister's hopes are completely dashed when the younger sister comes to her and confides in her, telling of the younger man's proposal and her acceptance. She congratulates her happy young sister and the neighbor and then goes away alone to nurse the hurt of this announcement. She realizes that her love for the man is so great that she cannot bear to see him day after day and watch her sister's happiness with him, and determines to enlist in the regular army as a field nurse.

The neighbor misses the elder sister in a vague sort of way, but his affections are still possessed by the beauty of the younger girl. At this time President Lincoln sends out a call for volunteers, and much against the younger girl's wishes, the neighbor goes to the front as a Captain of volunteer cavalry.

The elder sister is of the volunteers. Therefore, they do not meet and she, imagining him still at home, dreams of the two happy ones at home and is sad.

On the eve of a great battle, the neighbor receives a letter of love written in the child-like fashion of the younger girl. During the battle the neighbor is severely wounded by an exploding shell. The first meeting between him and the elder sister occurs when she finds him wounded and unconscious on the field. She has him brought to the hospital where she nurses him back to life in order to save him for her little sister. In his delirium the face of the younger sister begins to fade and the face of the elder to take its place, and as he slowly comes back to health, the realization comes to him that his real love is for the elder sister. After the crisis his illness has passed, the doctor discovers that the young man will be totally blind as a result of the accident.

The elder sister is detailed to take him home. With the assistance of an orderly, she takes him back to his own apartment and sends for the younger sister. When she discovers that he is blind, the younger sister visualizes what her future life as the wife of a blind man will be and her shallow nature revolts at the thought. She gives him back the ring and without any pangs of regret, returns to the frivolities of her life.

The elder sister is torn between hope for herself and pity for the man. She goes to him, and he, realizing that at last the barrier is down, tells her of his real feelings and slowly folds her in his arms, both at last happy in each other's love.

THE JEALOUSY OF JANE (June 16).—Jane's health is run down and her husband sends her and their baby boy to Atlantic City to recuperate for a few weeks while he remains in town. The servants are dismissed and an inquiring next door neighbor, Mrs. Lane, is told of Jane's little trip, and that Jane's husband is to stay behind and "bach" it for a while.

Husband soon finds that trying to take charge of things and get his own breakfast is too much for him, and he sallies forth to an employment agency and hires a cook, a lady of color and weight, who dresses rather well for her position in life, and Mrs. Lane, who sees the young husband escorting a veiled lady into the house promptly jumps to a scandalous conclusion and sends an anonymous telegram to Jane to the effect that during her absence her husband is entertaining a woman in her own house. Jane's nerves have been tried by a number of flirtatious men on the board walk and she is ready to think the worst of the masculine sex in general, and she takes the first train home, arriving at midnight, and the complications that follow upon her arrival cause a near riot in the neighborhood, a hurried call out of the police reserves and the final landing of Jane, husband, colored cook and chauffeur at the police station after a night ride in the patrol wagon. Matters are fairly well straightened up there until Jane remembers that baby has been left all this time in the taxicab, and a mad rush is made to the rescue. Baby, however, has found an interesting thing in the way of a plaything in the taximeter and has been perfectly, though expensively happy all through the night, and as usual father foots the bill.

ALADDIN'S AWAKENING (June 20).—Eddie is very tired, so the boss gives him a two days' vacation. He goes to the beach, lies down and sleeps.

He sees a bracelet by the water and turns it around as he fits it on his arm. Behold! A beautiful girl appears and, telling him he has found the magic bracelet, asks him his wants. He mentions money, and his hands are full of it and so are his pockets.

He desires company, and five beautiful girls appear, and he forthwith treats them to the best the swell restaurant can give them. They take a ride in a gondola and have a good time generally.

When they return to the beach Neptune appears, waving his trident—the girls disappear. Eddie appeals to Neptune and the girls reappear as nymphs. They lead him a merry chase, and Neptune pursues him and jabs him with his trident and—Eddie wakes up to find a guard prodding him and telling him to move on.

Back in the office Eddie is dreamy. He sees those girls again. The boss interferes with his vision, and Eddie has to compose his brains and turn from girls' figures to those used in the computation of amounts.

REX

THE SCAR (June 19).—Olga Drent never realized that the scar on her cheek was to mar her happiness as well as her beauty until she meets Stanley Sherwood and gives her love unsought.

The arrival of her school chum, Marian Ormsby, with her fresh, clear beauty, causes Olga to curse the fatal scar, which she blames for Stanley's choosing Marian for his wife.

Jealousy of the most fiendish kind prompts her, in the dark hours of night, to mutilate her rival. She steals to her father's (Dr. Drent's) laboratory and, procuring chloroform, she goes to Marian's bedside and, after her victim is unconscious, cuts her fair cheek with a nail file.

Her jealous passion subdued, remorse follows, and when morning breaks the discovery that she has unintentionally severed an artery in Marion's face drives her frantic.

Dr. Drent and the hurriedly called specialist decide transfusion alone can save Marian's life. Dr. Drent gladly offers his blood, but the doctor decides his heart will not permit it. Olga sees her chance for atonement and offers herself.

Despite her father's remonstrance the operation takes place, and both girls slowly return from the valley of the shadows.

Gentle June sees the quiet wedding of Sherwood and Marian, and the forgiven Olga presses their hands and buries her face in the bride's roses.

friend of hers, whose husband is employed in the Custom House, that the government had learned of the smuggled lace and advising her to get rid of it. Mrs. Belmont meets Mr. Jolly, her friend's husband. She asks him to mind the lace for her. This he does, and he takes same home. His wife discovers them and accuses him of buying them for some woman. He tells her he bought them for her and presents them to her. Later Mrs. Jolly, wearing the laces, calls on Mrs. Belmont, who is horrified to see Mrs. Jolly wearing her beautiful laces. Later she meets Mr. Jolly and demands her laces back. He gives her a check for $650. Mr. Jolly informs his wife that the laces were smuggled and cost him $650. Meantime Mr. Belmont hires a gas man to pose as a Custom House Inspector to get the laces back from Mrs. Jolly. This he does, and returns with the laces. However, Mrs. Belmont had bought other laces with money she received from Mr. Jolly. She was proudly showing them to Mr. Belmont when a real Custom House officer appeared and took all of them away. Mrs. Belmont explains to her husband that she had bought the other, and faints dead away.

POWERS

FRIENDLY NEIGHBORS (June 18).—Schultz, the tailor, and Finnegan, the shoemaker, whose places of business adjoin, are about as amicable as a fat fishworm and a skinny sparrow, a fact well known to the neighborhood kids, who not infrequently utilize the state of "friendliness" for their own amusement.

Tragedy in their simple lives is averted until a frivolous fairy invades their respective shops, toys with their dizzy hearts for the moment, then flitting away in dreamland softness, leaves in her wake all the miseries of romance and love.

Schultz catches Finnegan spying upon his lovemaking—and Finnegan seeks relief by sitting in a tub of water merely because Schultz placed a hot tailor's goose against an anatomical district that requires such treatment. Finnegan reciprocates the kindly feeling by inserting an awl into Schultz's physical being which made the faculty of sitting an unknown quantity.

Their attempts at lovemaking with the frolicsome widow is strewn with rock and thorn, the tantalizing kids only too eager to abet in adding pangs to their throbbing hearts. Knowing the fire and flame of jealousy flickers in the breast of the tailor and the shoemaker, the kids suggest the survival of the fittest, and the two love-smitten men don the gloves.

With the kids as an enthusiastic audience Schultz and Finnegan repair to an isolated field and fight a long, bitter battle. And when exhausted they lie prone, the fascinating widow chances to pass in clinging embrace with a "swell," and Schultz and Finnegan realize their dream is shattered. Disgusted with the tumultuous pranks of Cupid they shake hands and leave arm in arm, satisfied with being just friendly neighbors.

VICTOR

HIS DAUGHTER (June 20).—A young girl, Gertrude, is the daughter of a thief. She induces her father to go to the country to begin life anew. They do this, avoiding the old man's accomplice in crime, who is obnoxious to Gertrude.

They find quarters in a country boarding-house. The minister of the village church, Jim, and the country storekeeper both fall in love with Gertrude, and the fact that her father was a criminal is unsuspected. Gertrude secures a position as clerk in the store, and received the storekeeper's attentions unwillingly, as she loves the minister. The storekeeper discovers that Jim is his successful rival and becomes inordinately jealous. But the knowledge of her father's past life keeps Gertrude from becoming the wife of Jim.

On an unlucky day fate brings the old man's accomplice to the village. He plans to rob the boarding house, and in carrying out this design is detected by the storekeeper and by Gertrude's father. The accomplice at once recognizes the old man, and the storekeeper, learning that the father has been a thief, denounces both him and Gertrude.

But love and Christian principles prevail over the jealous man's denunciations. The old thief's repentance is regarded as sincere by the villagers. In time his sins are not only forgiven but forgotten. And the culmination of the joy of their new life comes when Gertrude becomes the wife of the minister.

RELIANCE

ANNIE LAURIE (June 16).—The girl's father wants her to marry her rich suitor—but she loves the poor one. One evening both young men are calling on the girl. Her father is all attention to the rich fellow. The girl puts a record into the phonograph and she and her sweetheart sit back in the shadows—as "Annie Laurie" is played. The father's face softens—he sees himself a young man courting his sweetheart back in the early sixties. The Civil War breaks out—he goes off in a Union uniform, carrying a knot of ribbon from the girl—and the last thing he remembers is her voice singing the old familiar "Annie Laurie."

He is wounded and taken to the house of a Southern girl, who cares for him and sends for the Northern girl and her father. When they arrive he does not know them until the girl, inspired by a sudden thought, kneels at his bedside and sings "Annie Laurie" to him. Then he remembers and they are soon in close embrace. At this point in his dream the old man awakens. The phonograph is still playing "Annie Laurie," the young lovers, in their dim corner, are oblivious to all but themselves. Remembering the days of his own romance the father suggests to the rich suitor that they leave the young pair alone. And, although protesting, he is forced to consent.

HALF A CHANCE (3 Reels) (June 14).—"Frisco Pet," an ex-prize fighter, is accused of the murder of a woman of the underworld because he is found in her room in a drunken condition, alone with her body. In reality Lord Ronsdale, a degenerate nobleman, had come to break with this woman, who, in an attempt to blackmail him, took out a revolver which accidentally went off.

"Frisco Pet" is sent to the colonies in a convict ship on which Lord Ronsdale also embarks with Lord and Lady Wray and their six-year-old niece, Jocelyn. This child becomes interested in the convict and, sorry for his plight, gives him a gold locket.

A storm comes up and in the hurry to the life boats Frisco Pet and the child are forgotten. He jumps overboard with her and swims to one of the boats. As he is about to grab it himself Ronsdale recognizes him and pushes him back into the water. Frisco gets ashore and on a desert island builds a hut to live in. He later finds a box of law books, washed ashore from the wreck, and with these as his only companion—the man alone in the wilderness regenerates.

Years later he returns to London and becomes famous as a criminal lawyer. He again meets Jocelyn Wray and falls in love with her. Lord Ronsdale, who is also courting the young heiress, recognizes in the man known as John Steele "Frisco Pet," escaped convict. He arranges for his capture and at a party at the Wrays points him out. But Steele, with the girl's help escapes. As he leaves he drops the little gold locket on the table, and Jocelyn remembers.

In the slums of London John Steele searches for two men who were in the inn on the night of Amy Gerard's murder. They alone can vindicate him. In the East End he finds them. He asks one of them for a written vindication and is refused. Then he fights a terrific battle with his old enemy and, coming out victor, compels the man to write at his dictation.

In Ronsdale's room he meets the police, produces the paper, which Ronsdale tries to destroy, and clears his own name of all suspicion. Ronsdale, the coward, who sent a man to prison for life rather than have his name mixed up in scandal, is cast off by the Wrays, who give their consent to Jocelyn's engagement to John Steele.

MAJESTIC

MIMOSA'S SWEETHEART (June 8).—Fred Chase, who is a devil among the ladies, finds that he cannot flirt with Mimosa, a pretty little Jap girl. He hires some men to attack her and by a series of apparently desperate rescues wins her regard, to the great distress of Uchida and Senicha, his Japanese rivals, who forget their own rivalry and unite to do up one of the hated race. They practice jiu jitsu on him and are doing him up when Mimosa comes to his relief and then, woman-like, thinks that Fred is the real hero. She lets him put a ring on her finger and he wins the long desired kiss.

THE MESSAGE OF THE FLOWERS (June 10).—The lodgekeeper's daughter was romantic. She liked to lie in the hammock under the trees and read novels wherein lords and ladies played a prominent part. She often dreamed of the time when her "Prince" would come to her. Although she knew that the gardener cared for her, she sometimes regarded him disdainfully for he was not at all romantic but just a plain everyday young man who worked very hard for his living. Every day he brought her a bouquet of beautiful flowers, which she accepted gratefully, for they were her favorite flower.

A young man came to the estate with a letter from its absent owner, directing the lodgekeeper to show him around the grounds. Her father was absent, and the girl, impressed by the stranger's handsome face and aristocratic bearing, volunteered to be his guide. The young man was very pleasant, and when he left thanked her and said he would come again. He did so, and the girl was delighted. Although he had merely been pleasant to her the girl told herself that he must surely be her "Prince," and would soon ask her to marry him. Her romantic fancy caused her to treat the gardener cruelly, and he did not bring any more bouquets, for he knew that she did not want them.

One day the awakening came. The rich man entered the garden with a pretty young woman and told the lodgekeeper that she was his fiancee. The lodgekeeper's daughter, unseen, heard, and rushed into her home sobbing. In a moment of remorse she thought of the gardener, and realized how cruelly she had treated him. The sudden shock had been too much for her, and she became seriously ill.

She was hovering between life and death when her mother bore into her bedroom an immense bunch of magnificent roses. She buried her face in the bouquet and sniffed the fragrant perfume, and then she cried, with gladness rather than sorrow, for they were the flowers of love, the token that the young gardener still cared for her.

The young man entered the sick room hesitatingly. The girl, propped up in bed, held out her arms pleadingly and he ran forward with a glad cry. The roses, unheeded, lay strewn on the bed. The girl had received the message of the flowers.

AMERICAN

THE SOUL OF A THIEF (June 16).—The Fox, an accomplished gentleman crook, worked through the fake jewelry shop of an old fence named Abraham. Millionaire Benton, with a mania for rare jewels, goes to Abraham and purchases an exquisite necklace. He is seen by the Fox, who follows him to his home.

Arriving home, Benton finds his daughter and Bob Newell making love in the garden. He angrily sends Bob from the premises. At home Bob calls up Louise Benton and they plan to elope. That afternoon Rose Hartley, a chum of Louise, and addicted to sleepwalking, arrives at the Benton house. Benton, alone in his library, calls the two girls to see the gorgeous jewel. Rose is much impressed and goes to bed with the memory of its beauty still in her mind.

At ten o'clock that night the Fox creeps toward a side window of the Benton residence. He is suddenly stopped by the sound of footsteps and sees Bob Newell go to the window and call. The window is opened by Louise, who calls softly to him, "Get a taxi, dear." Bob nods and disappears. A few moments later the Fox, bent on mischief, whistles softly, the window opens, and Louise hurls her own jewel case down to the Fox, whispering that she will follow a minute later.

Meanwhile things have happened in the big house. Rose Hartley, dreaming of the jewel, goes to Benton's library in her sleep and removes the wonderful necklace. The noise awakens Benton, who rushes to the library, finds his jewel gone, and phones the police.

In the garden, meanwhile, the Fox has tucked away the jewels that Louise gave him and strolled slowly away, calmly puffing a cigarette. Bob Newell, returning, finds the empty jewel box and is nabbed by the police and carried away to jail, Benton hurling accusing statements after him. Louise is afraid to tell her father that her own jewels are gone, but, of course, cannot understand why Bob did not return them to her.

REEL TWO.—The Fox, having quite unconsciously acquired Louise's jewels, is now intent upon obtaining the famous necklace sold Benton by the crafty Abraham. He goes, disguised as a French Count, bearing forged letters of introduction, and is taken in by the Benton family. Here he meets and falls madly in love with Louise, despite himself. Rose Hartley, her friend, again walking in her sleep, takes the precious necklace from her suitcase and returns it to the secret hiding place in Benton's library, just as the Fox, intent upon getting it, is rifling the library drawer. When she disappears the Fox takes the jewel to his room. In the days that follow he makes violent love to Louise, who avoids him. In desperation the Fox follows Benton to Abraham's dive, where Benton has gone to find out something concerning his lost jewel, and accuses Benton of connivance with the Jew. He compromises with Benton when Benton promises to aid him in the suit for Louise's hand. A stormy interview follows and Louise finally decides to seek out the Fox and promise to marry him. The Fox, listening to the interview from behind the curtains of Benton's library, is seized with remorse. If he cannot have this woman of her own free will he does not want her. Hence, when she offers herself to him the Fox refuses the sacrifice, for his soul has begun to stir within him. He promises Louise that he will leave on the morrow. That night the sleepwalking Rose rises from her bed and goes straight to the room of the Fox. The noise of a breaking lamp awakens Benton, who, revolver in hand, follows her. On the veranda the Fox strolls up and down in thought until, startled by the noise, he hurries to his room, only to confront Benton, Louise and Rose. In an instant the Fox has slipped out of the house, Louise following. He throws her a kiss and vanishes. Ten minutes later he had thrown old Abraham into the corner, phoned the police to release Bob, tenderly kissed the rose which Louise had once given him, and the incidents of the Benton jewel mystery became a memory.

MISS MISCHIEF (June 8).—Who was it turned the mouse loose in the dormitory? Who put mucilage on Miss Galgreen's false teeth? Who flirted with the French dancing teacher? Who put snuff in the school books? The answer was, "Miss Mischief."

She was a pretty little country girl, outwardly demure, but with great capacity for fun. Some of the teachers who liked her called her "Miss Mischief," while others, who had suffered from her pranks, styled her "The little limb of Satan."

The girl remained at the seminary exactly one month, crowding more eventful happenings into the life of that dignified seminary for young ladies than it had ever enjoyed during its long and honored career. Finally, in desperation, the principal expelled her, and she returned to her home amid deep sighs of relief from the sorely harassed teachers.

Farm life is usually very monotonous and the section where "Miss Mischief's" parents lived was no exception to the rule. But the girl soon made the little rural community as lively as Main street on Saturday night. Her father always had to hunt for his spectacles, tacks seemed to find their way into his cowhide boots, the dog frequently raced wildly about the yard with a tin can tied to his tail, and the minister passed the doorway with a hostile glare. The boys all liked her and neglected work so frequently that their irate fathers had to threaten them with horsewhips to induce them to work. The girls, robbed of sweethearts, prayed for some awful fate to befall the siren.

Two young men, to whom the girl showed the most favor, had decided to fight a duel, but the girl laughed them out of the idea and persuaded them to settle the affair by a battle between their pet roosters. The affair was shrouded with mystery and even "Miss Mischief's" mother did not know about it. But when various masculine and feminine figures came hurtling down the grain chute and landed on the ground with resounding thumps she made inquiries. They excitedly told her that the constable was after them and hobbled away as fast as they could.

When it became known that the constable had been nowhere around and that it was another of "Miss Mischief's" pranks, the rage of her dupes was great. So the girl was bundled off to another school whose principal had a reputation as a great disciplinarian, and the little community once more enjoyed peace.

THE SNARE OF FATE (June 10).—A young stenographer was the sole support of her widowed mother and they lived happily until the older woman was stricken with illness when their scanty savings rapidly melted away. In this emergency the girl sought temporary relief from one of the loan sharks who hand out money "on easy terms," but make it very difficult to ever get out of debt again. With the mortgage on her salary, and her mother's continued illness, the girl soon became deeply involved. Additional funds were needed, but her creditor refused to advance them except on condition that she would become his wife, he having been much attracted by the pretty young girl. She spurned his advances at first, but finally, believing it the only way to insure comfort for her mother, consented, and contracted a loveless marriage.

As the years passed, she more and more regretted her action. Her husband, she found, was all that a man should not be, brutal and merciless, with only one thought and one love, gold.

Their only child, a boy, was his mother's idol, and after her own mother's death, she lavished all her affection upon the little one. Day by day she was haunted by one dread: "Will my boy be like his father?" Hoping to reform the man she remained with him, but one day the crisis came.

The wife, while walking in the park, met a poor woman who was weeping bitterly. She questioned her sympathetically, and learned that the woman was in danger of losing all her little belongings because she could not pay the extortionate claims of a loan shark. Her hearer asked the name of the creditor and found it was her husband. To give him one last chance she took the woman to his office and begged him to be merciful to her. Instead, he reviled her, insisted upon his honest debt, and told her to pay up or suffer the consequences. Then he rebuked his wife for her interference, and ordered her from the office. The next day she departed from his home with their baby, leaving word that she had fled, hoping to save her son from growing up a merciless wretch like her husband. The man read the note, tore it up and smiled. He had his gold, and that was all the world to him. As for his wife and child, he was secretly glad to be rid of them, and so he went on piling up his fortune year by year.

Among the property he owned was a tenement house, and he was indignant when any of the occupants fell behind in their rent. On one occasion he sternly rebuked his agent for failing to get the money from a certain family and peremptorily ordered that the offending tenants be thrown into the street the next morning.

A few hours after his conversation with the agent the old man was walking through the slums, intent on looking over another piece of property which he expected to land at a bargain. Passing his own tenement he suffered a paralytic stroke and fell, dumb and helpless, in the doorway. One of the tenants saw him, took him into his own poor rooms and ministered to him. The tenant had never seen his landlord, and as the latter was unable to speak he could not make known his identity. Fate had so shaped affairs that the tenant was the very one who had been marked for eviction and in the morning the landlord's peremptory orders were obeyed. The tenant appealed to the agent on behalf of the sick man, but the agent did not even glance at the form on the bed. He had been ordered to show no mercy, and he did not dare disobey. So the helpless landlord was carried outdoors on his mattress and left exposed to the elements. Of course an ambulance was summoned, but it was "only a charity case," so it took its time in responding to the call. It was fully an hour before the patient was taken to the hospital, and exposure and privation made his case hopeless. His destitute benefactors found a friend that same day, for a seamstress and her little boy saw them and took them into their own home. The kind-hearted woman was told of the "poor stranger," and went to the hospital to see if she could aid him. She arrived just before he died and recognized in the "charity patient" her heartless husband.

The money he had wrung from the poor reverted to her, and in her hands it became an element of good, for she was as kind and benevolent as her husband was grasping and merciless.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 24 (June 9).

MAX'S FIRST JOB (June 10).—Max Linder's behavior when he applied for a job as a Pathe Freres moving picture actor was such a good joke on him that it was decided to make a film of the event and accordingly Max was called upon to play the lead. He was serious for once in his life when he offered his services, and to see Max serious is really amusing. The first film for which he posed was "Mr. Henpeck," and the rough deal he received caused Max to forget that he was acting, and he turned suddenly upon one of his co-workers whose duty it was to abuse him, and a rough and tumble fight ensued. The belligerents could not be parted until a stream of water was turned on them, and as soon as he could speak through anger and water, Max resigned, but reconsidered his decision later on, as his many admirers well know.

On the same reel:

THE CHATEAU OF CHENONCEAU (FRANCE).—A fine specimen of Renaissance which has the added attraction of being built on stone piers across the River Cher.

HIS LORDSHIP'S ROMANCE (June 11).—Percy Fitznoodle, in charge of Murphy's glove counter, one day saw, at a distance, the girl of his dreams. He dreamed of her instead of attending to the customers, and a floorwalker fined him $6.00. Percy was feeling rather blue when he went to lunch, but he met Tom Burke, a stout Lothario, who was feeling rather blue himself because he was not progressing very well with a love affair. Burke offered to pay Percy liberally if he would pose as Lord Fitznoodle and put in a good word for Burke with the latter's girl. Percy agreed, and accompanied Burke to a lawn party, where he learned that the girl Burke was anxious to win was the girl of his own dreams. Instantly he forgot his contract with Burke. After the party was over the girl found out that Percy was a gay deceiver, and to teach him his place she went to Murphy's, ostensibly to buy a pair of gloves. She succeeded in hurting Percy's feelings, but as he fitted the gloves their hands met, and in a short time their lips met, too.

THE ARTIST'S DREAM (June 12).—Charley Heckler, the artist, was called away from a party to furnish a drawing which he had agreed to supply. He finished the drawing partly and, to stimulate his imagination, he lay down. He soon fell fast asleep, and while Charley slept the dog in the drawing came to life with an appetite that just had to be appeased. A string of frankfurters, also in the drawing, attracted him. A mouse appeared and endeavored to share the meal with the dog. After a lively chase the mouse disappeared, and then a flea called the dog's attention to the fact that he had a tail. The antics of the dog in pursuit of the flea are the biggest laugh ever. Some two thousand separate drawings were necessary to achieve this unusual illusion, and as it is a distinct novelty and will be a distinct hit, you really ought to book it.

ATHLETICS IN FRANCE (June 13).—The International Congress of Gymnastic Sports, recently held in France, provided an opportunity to make an unusually fine film. We have taken advantage of this opportunity, and as a consequence are able to show the sensational drill of the Paris fire department, featuring a race up the side of a house without any assistance from ladders or ropes or anything of the kind. Then, in the women's class, upwards of a thousand of the expert gymnasts go through their various exercises in perfect unison. In the men's gymnasium class the feats are more difficult and more daring. There are other scenes, too numerous to mention, but which, combined with those already recorded, make as interesting a picture as one would wish to see, not to mention its educational value.

On the same reel:

PLACES OF INTEREST IN COLORADO.—A travelogue of Colorado, showing the most interesting features of the city of Denver and concluding with a short and delightful trip through the Royal Gorge, a beautiful specimen of nature's handiwork.

FOR MAYOR—BESS SMITH (June 14).—Mrs. Bess Smith was a widow and a suffragette. When election time drew near the "Votes for Women" advocates nominated her for mayor against Joe Jones, the machine candidate. After one encounter with the suffragists Jones was treated so roughly that he decided to pay Mrs. Smith to withdraw. When he called, the ladies fixed up a scheme on him by which he made his proposition to a phonograph record as well as to the nominee; then they told him what had happened. Joe, a widower, told his son, Joe, Jr., of what had happened, and Joe offered to help him. Joe, Jr., was in love with Bess Smith, Jr., and when Mrs. Smith was coming home from a mass meeting she met Joe, Sr., and invited him into her home. When they entered they found their respective son and daughter in each other's arms. Mrs. Smith stormed and raged at this new complication, but finally gave the children her blessing. Joe Jones, the elder, thereupon proposed to Mrs. Smith, and she decided that in case she lost the office it might be a good thing to be the wife of the mayor.

GREAT NORTHERN

THE SUFFRAGETTES (June 7).—Miss Hampton is the president and guiding spirit of a society of women which has for its object, aside from the right to vote, the denunciation of men and other luxuries. Miss Hampton is of the sort that affects mannish attire and carries her crusade into the homes of many a timid man. At a meeting of the society it is announced unexpectedly that Miss Nancy Lander, one of the prominent members, has become engaged to William Hawtree, a prominent young architect. Consternation prevails for a time, but Miss Hampton assures her fellow-members that she will cause Nancy to see the error of her ways. The marriage takes place in due time, however, and the bride and groom are enjoying their full measure of happiness until Miss Hampton appears upon the scene during the absence of the husband.

She literally takes possession of the newly furnished home of the Hawtrees and proceeds to make decided changes in the interior. The furnishings are not to her liking and for the most part they are classed as "luxuries." Dainty portieres are pulled from their fastenings, richly upholstered chairs are carried into the basement and Persian rugs are bundled away in dark corners. In their place Miss Hampton causes ordinary cane-bottom chairs to be placed in position and matting is placed upon the floors instead of rugs. The interior of the house is transformed into a most cheerless and uninviting place of abode, but Mrs. Hawtree lacks the courage to interfere with the president of the society.

When Hawtree returns from his office he is dumbfounded to note the change that has taken place in his home and he is by no means pleased. But instead of raving and making a fuss over the situation he hits upon a plan to bring his wife around to his way of thinking. A few days later he sends for Miss Hampton and in his office shows her a plan for a home to be built according to the regulations of the society. She is delighted and, while in this mood, Hawtree makes love to her after smearing one side of his face with drawing ink. He embraces her and gets the imprint of the smudge. Mrs. Hawtree arrives at this moment and is horrified at the sight she beholds. When Hawtree reaches home that night he divulges the plot to his wife and when Miss Hampton calls the lovemaking is resumed, only to be interrupted by the appearance of the young wife. The agitator is ordered out and the original furnishings of the home are restored to the original places.

AN INFERNAL TANGLE.—Coming home to supper one evening, Luigi tells his wife that a new couple is moving into the same tenement house that they live in. They both go to the window to watch the furniture being removed from the van and brought into the house. Vincenza greatly admires the moustache of her new neighbor and speaks of this to her husband, who laughs at her scornfully, but becomes very jealous of the man, Biaggio. Later in the day, when Vincenza is coming home with the groceries, she meets Biaggio on the steps of the house, and speaks to him for a few moments. Angelica, the wife of Biaggio, is looking out of the window and sees her husband talking with this strange woman and she, in turn, also becomes jealous. The talk is rudely interrupted by Luigi, who returns home and angrily orders his wife into the house. There is quite a lively time in both apartments, as a result of the little meeting on the doorstep.

Owing to his hasty temper, Luigi loses his job and is unable to find another. He and his wife are almost on the point of starvation when Mrs. Thomas, a wealthy district visitor, comes to the house. She finds Vincenza alone and, after hearing her story, leaves her some money, which is placed on the table. A sneak-thief, passing up the stairway, sees the money through the open door and steals it after Mrs. Thomas leaves. Vincenza screams for help and is heard by Biaggio, who is coming up the stairs. He rushes to her aid. He struggles with the thief and obtains the money which he returns to Vincenza. As he leaves the room he is seen by Luigi, who follows him upstairs and accuses him of an intrigue with his wife. Angelica overhears the accusation and rushes down to the room of Vincenza, of whom she is insanely jealous. In each apartment a terrific struggle takes place, in the one between the two men, and in the other between the two women.

In the midst of it all Mrs. Thomas enters. She has lost a ring and has returned to see if she had dropped it there. She soon explains the true state of affairs and the two families agree to forget their disputes and become the best of neighbors.

PILOT

WHEN A GIRL LOVES (June 12).—Louise is a much petted and beloved only daughter of a widowed lawyer, who attempts to gratify her every wish. She receives an invitation from her friend, Betty, to a week-end party. Money is advanced by her father and she starts out for the party. She arrives at Betty's ahead of the other guests to assist in the preparations. Betty's father is engaged in research work, and has a Mr. Wilson as his secretary. Wilson, although of humble means, is a well-bred young man, with high ideals and a serious outlook on life. On the first day of her visit Louise is introduced to the secretary at luncheon, and as there are no other guests they become well acquainted. After luncheon Betty, observing that Wilson and Louise are getting along nicely together, invites Wilson to go with Louise and herself for a drive in her automobile. Betty has some tiresome shopping to do, and suggests that the other two drive around while she is so engaged. Louise, who before has only seen the frivolous side of life, is touched by his thoughts and conversation. They return for Betty a trifle late. She teases them a little about it.

The next day the other guests arrive, among them Paul Mason, a rich, handsome, well-built, faultlessly dressed young man, with plenty of friends and influence. Although an agreeable companion, he is a trifle arrogant and conceited. He considers himself Louise's particular companion, but his banter and chatter does not interest her. One evening, becoming so bored by Mason, she watches her chance and escapes out of the living room where the young people are enjoying themselves, and goes to Mr. Wilson's library. Wilson, although surprised to see her, is delighted to be thus sought out by such a beautiful and charming girl when he knows there are so many rich young men in the house. Mason discovers Louise has left the room and follows her. As he passes the library he hears voices, and stops at the door to listen. He is greatly incensed, but thinks he can win Louise with his money. The next day he invites her to go automobiling with him. She accepts. During the ride Paul proposes to her and, misconstruing Louise's averted eyes for shyness, tries to embrace her. She draws coldly away. After an unhappy drive they return home. Louise immediately goes to her room. Betty, seeing Louise is not happy, follows her, finds her on her bed in tears. Louise tells her the whole story, and Betty is amazed at Louise for rejecting such an offer. Louise becomes very angry and says she hates Mason. Betty goes to her father for advice, and tells him the whole story. Mr. Wilson being in the same room is very much surprised to learn that Louise has refused so rich a young man. Admiration, love and despair struggle in his heart. He desires but despairs of ever winning Louise, as he is in very humble circumstances —and very proud. Louise, in the meantime, has decided to return home, and when Betty goes back to her finds she already has her things packed for her journey. Betty's expostulations are of no avail. Louise is fully decided to go. While she is down in the hall awaiting a carriage, on the pretext of having left a handkerchief upstairs she goes to wish Mr. Wilson good-bye. Wishing him good-bye in his study, she suddenly realizes that she must make the advances or lose him, so, taking one of her cards and writing her address on the back, she hands it to him and asks him to write. Struggling with his love for her and pride, Wilson stands speechless. His pride forbids him to ask a rich girl to share his humble lot. Louise, finally overcome with her forwardness, runs blushingly from the room, followed by Wilson's promise to write.

Louise arrives home safely. She becomes rather discouraged after waiting a week and getting no news from Wilson. One afternoon, however, Wilson himself arrives. They are both delighted. Then Wilson shows Louise a letter he has received offering him a position as secretary to the Ambassador to England. Louise is at first overjoyed, but suddenly becomes sad, realizing if he goes it might mean their parting. Wilson, observing this, tells her he will only accept it if she will go with him. Louise bows her head in happy acquiescense, and falls into the outstretched arms of her lover.

LUX

ENGULFED (June 13).—Dmitras is a smuggler whom the police have never been able to arrest. Although aged, he still continues his dangerous calling. One day he seeks refuge with Farmer Bell, but the police, close on his track, also take up residence in the farmer's house. Bell plans to entice the officers to a distant spot and, during their absence, for Dmitras to escape. But he falls into a quicksand and is only rescued by the arrival of the police. Meanwhile, in his haste to escape, the smuggler has fallen and broken his thigh. The police get their quarry, but he dies from the effects of his fall.

ESSANAY

THE STAR (June 11).—Pauline Deverau, a premier danseuse, gives her last performance in the ballet at the Theatre de Luxe. Clarence Inbad, a hallroom type, thinks he is in love with her, and tries to the best of his ability to meet Pauline. The doorman at the stage entrance ousts him. Pauline later goes to work in a restaurant to get local color for a dramatic part she is to play the following season. Clarence Inbad frequents the restaurant, and finally persuades Pauline to keep an engagement with him. The funny and embarrassing situations that Clarence goes through are exceedingly interesting.

CINDERELLA'S GLOVES (June 12).—Millie Wilson, a simple country girl, comes to New York with a valise, a bird cage and a note for her aunt, asking her to take care of Millie, her mother having died. She reluctantly takes in the daughter of her sister, installing her in the kitchen. One night Millie is hurriedly sent to the residence of a society woman with a Cinderella costume. The lady scolds Millie and sends her back with the dress. The girl sits on the adjoining stoop, afraid to go home. The husband of the society lady sees Millie and pities her in her plight. He gives her the money for the dress and tells her to go to the mask ball herself. Millie has a great time at the ball, where she meets prince charming. At twelve o'clock Cinderella (Millie) flies from her lover. Prince Charming tries to find his Cinderella. The rest is too good to tell.

SELIG

A ROSE OF MAY (June 11).—A romantic young author, wearied with the rush of a prosaic age, who loves the open, accompanied only by his flute, starts on a spring tour, tramping through the rural regions. In his wanderings he sees a lovely girl given to romance, and makes her acquaintance, disguised as a gypsy fortune-teller. In reading her happiness he mentions "the rover with the magic flute," to quicken her interest. Having inspired the thought, he goes on his way, discarding his disguise. The next day the credulous fair one hears the luring love note of the flute and follows it to the forest. There she finds a dark, handsome young stranger sleeping. She gazes a moment spellbound, then flees. The sleeper is awakened, and follows her. Eventually they become lovers, but the maid's father will have nothing to do with a flute player. Strangely enough, this prejudiced man is a publisher and in financial trouble. A wealthy friend comes to his relief, who seeks in marriage the hand of his daughter. The young author betakes him to his desk and writes a romance entitled "The Rose of May." He offers it anonymously to the publisher, and it becomes top-listed as Before answering this question, consider carefully the motion picture machine you are using.

Projectors are like automobiles: they wear out, and besides, the modern Simplex machine of today so far outclasses the machines of three or four years ago there is no comparison between them.

"a best seller." A year passes, the girl, stung by his seeming forgetfulness, is about to accept the elderly suitor, when she hears the sound of a distant flute. Again the lovers meet, but this time to part no more; for the proud parent, now made wealthy by the man who plays with a pen as potentially as he does skilfully with a flute, is a very desirable son-in-law.

SOLAX

ROMEO IN PAJAMAS (June 18).—John Moor, wife and daughter Rose are at a summer hotel. Billy Smart is also at the hotel. He proposes to Rose and is accepted. Rose's father gets a telegram from Samuel Bigwad, a millionaire, that he is coming with the intention of marrying Rose. Then it is all off with Billy. The night Bigwad arrives there is a masked ball in the hotel and Billy is dressed as a burglar. Bigwad starts out for a walk. Billy follows him in his burglar costume and holds him up. He takes his clothes from him and leaves him to get back to the hotel in his underwear. Bigwad steals a sheet from a clothes line, wraps it around himself and starts for the hotel. On the way back he meets a party who are searching for him. They take him for a ghost and run back to the hotel. Bigwad sneaks back to the hotel and into the cloak room. He meets Billy and asks for clothes. Hearing someone coming Bigwad asks to be hidden. Billy pushes him through a door which leads into the hallroom, telling Bigwad it was a closet. Bigwad, standing in the hallroom in his underwear, tries to get back, but Billy holds the door. Bigwad runs from the hallroom into the hall and meets Rose's father, who has found the clothes where Billy had hi dthem. Bigwad accuses Moor of having held him up and leaves the hotel very angry. Billy gets a telegram saying he was heir to $300,000, and father tells Billy he likes him best after all, and gives his consent to their marriage.

TWO STRANGERS FROM NOWHERE (June 20).—James Warren, a poor artist, becomes desperate because his wife, Editha, is discontented with their proverty-stricken existence. During an exciting scene he vows he will sell his soul to the devil for success. A gust of wind blows out the light, and when he relights the lamp, the devil, in the guise of a stranger, immaculately clad, enters and inquires for a rich neighbor, with whom he is to visit. Seeing one of Warren's pictures he pretends enthusiasm and commissions him to paint a picture. James and Editha are overjoyed.

The next day the devil arranges a meeting place between Editha and the rich neighbor's son, Lawrence. Editha and Lawrence become infatuated with each other at first sight. Lawrence invites Editha to attend a hall at his home, and she is about to refuse, not having suitable clothes and knowing her husband would not care to accompany her. The devil offers her money advanced on the picture James is to paint, and tells her she can secure a gown. He also contrives to make the way clear for Editha to accept the invitation by telling her that James must accompany him to the city that evening to arrange for a setting and consequently would know nothing of her having gone. Urged on by the devil, Editha promises Lawrence to attend.

As she reaches her door a stranger, Conscience, in the guise of a crippled beggar, asks for food. They enter the house and Editha becomes conscience-stricken but, persuaded by the devil, she does not tell James of her intention. The evening of the ball James and the devil start for the city, and a few minutes later Lawrence calls for Editha, who is clad gorgeously.

The devil, wishing to arouse the husband's jealousy, suggests that he phone his wife. James phones and, finding his wife does not answer, believes what the devil has told him of Lawrence and Editha's infatuation, and in a fury starts for home. He arrives at home to find his wife gone. The devil insinuates that she may be found with Lawrence, and James, believing her faithless, goes with the devil to find Editha. They arrive at Lawrence's residence and the devil leads James to the conservatory, from where they see Lawrence making violent love to Editha. James denounces Editha and returns home. The devil is overjoyed at his success. Conscience enters the room and leads Editha back home. She changes her gorgeous costume for clothes in keeping with her position and enters the room in time to see a struggle between Conscience and the Devil, in which the Devil is vanquished. Conscience then effects a reconciliation between Editha and James.

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Secretary-Treasurer—Robert Levy.
Recording Secretary—George Epstein.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—Robt. Goldblatt, Pro Tem.
Ass't Bus. Rep., J. A. LeRoy.

Telephone—Stuyvesant 619
Office—133 Third Avenue.

NOTICE TO ALL OPERATORS

OPEN MEETING AT TEUTONIA HALL, 66 ESSEX STREET, 12 P.M., JUNE 9th. CORDIAL INVITATION EXTENDED.

The Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Local No. 1, held their regular meeting last Monday night, June 2, 1913, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, New York.

The meeting was largely attended and the members are more than satisfied with the grand progress which is being made.

The membership is steadily increasing, and six new members were obligated at this last meeting, also eight new applications were placed before the body for approval.

Brother Ralph Knaster tendered his resignation as business representative of the organization. The brothers did not wish to accept his resignation and asked that he continue in office until after the convention. But the brother explained that it was impossible for him to continue in office at present as he was engaged in some other business; besides, he is under contract to give educational lectures at various places, and that he would not be able to devote his full time to the organization, as was done in the past. The members thereupon accepted his resignation and elected Brother Robt. Goldblatt, pro tem, to that office until the convention. Brother Knaster has done his utmost for the welfare of the union and the boys tendered a vote of thanks for the grand work he has done in the past eleven months.

John R. Rickards has also resigned from office owing to the fact that he has quite some business to attend to at Wilmington, Del., which would greatly interfere with the duties of his office.

NOTICE!!!

An open meeting will be held on Monday, June 9, 1913, at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street, New York.

The Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Local No. 1, extends this invitation to all operators, regardless of whether they belong to an organization or not, and all members of Local No. 35, I. A. T. S. E., or the branch, are invited to attend as individuals, and they will positively receive a grand welcome as well as any other operator who may honor this open meeting invitation.

This open meeting will be held for the benefit of those operators desiring to join the Union at the present entrance fee of five dollars ($5.00), as the fee is going to be raised to fifty dollars ($50.00), and by attending this open meeting and making application you will be able to say that you saved a nice sum of money as well as being a member of one of the best and strongest operators' unions in the country.

It is expected that many speakers will be present to talk along the lines of organized labor and the benefits of organizations. Don't wait until it is too late, but make up your mind and be present at this coming open meeting. If you have any friends who are licensed operators in New York City bring them with you, as our aim is to speak to every operator in the city and show them how easy it is to better their condition by becoming a member of this organization.

RALPH J. KNASTER, Press Agent.

A NEW ADVERTISING SCHEME

One of the cheapest, and at the same time one of the most appropriate advertising or publicity stunts ever devised for motion picture theatres, is the plan of post-card distribution devised by the Exhibitors' Advertising & Specialty Company (Arthur D. Jacobs, president and general manager), No. 30 Union Square, New York City.

This concern has now a collection of over 200 different popular photoplayers of whom they carry post-cards in stock. These players are not confined to the licensed side, but in addition thereto consist of the most popular of both actors and actresses of Mutual and Universal players. Their plan of distribution is as follows.

The exhibitor is furnished with a one-sheet poster at the nominal cost of five cents which reads as follows:

FREE TO OUR PATRONS

PHOTOPLAYERS
Given away to each patron
Every man, woman, boy or girl
Presented with one of these post-cards
Free of Charge
25 Different Popular Actors and Actresses to the set
By being a regular patron of this theatre you can secure the entire set

YOU KNOW THEM ALL

TO-DAY
We will give away a Handsome Photo Post-card of

These post-cards may be given out either at each matinee or at certain selected matinees or evenings or at times the exhibitor is particularly desirous of increasing his box-office receipts.

A slide is furnished at the nominal cost of thirty-five cents which reads as follows:

FREE A Handsome Photo of a Leading
To Each Patron

.....

Come regularly and GET A FULL SET
On Exhibition in Lobby

The object of the blank space on the poster is self-evident, while the blank space on the slide is intended to be filled in with the name of the photoplayer and the day and date upon which that particular post-card will be given out.

Human nature is the same in all parts of the country and people, especially women and children, will flock where they can get something for nothing; as it is advertised (see poster), there are a certain number of players to the set; experience has shown that men, women and children will come again and again in order to secure the entire set of photoplayer post-cards, either for their own post-card album or to ornament the walls of their rooms.

These post-cards serve a twofold purpose; they not alone attract business to the box-office by the desire of getting one of these post-cards as a free souvenir, but they also serve to popularize the various actors and actresses with the patrons; it familiarizes them with their likenesses and in the public's desire to see their favorite players in different roles in the pictures, they become regular and steady patrons.

These post-cards are sold to exhibitors in single thousand lots at four dollars per thousand, and in larger quantities liberal discounts are quoted.

Exhibitors who have never yet tried this plan of distribution are advised to communicate with the Exhibitors' Advertising & Specialty Company, No. 30 Union Square, New York City, who for a limited period will forward thirty-five different samples of either Licensed, Mutual or Universal players, for the very nominal sum of twenty-five cents, postage prepaid, to cover packing, mailing, etc.; at the same time they include a full list of the players carried in stock and a complete line of their advertising matter.

NEW CHICAGO THEATRE

The Esthena Theatre, 3709-11 Southport avenue, opened its doors last Saturday night. It is pronounced by visitors to be the most complete and up-to-date moving picture house in the country, having all conveniences imaginable for the comfort of its patrons, such as Ladies' Rest Room, Drinking Fountain, perfect ventilating system, etc. It is under the mangement of J. Lamm, one of the first in the "movie" business in Chicago.

THE RAMO STUDIOS

The revolution that is modifying methods in every avenue of commerce and finance has almost reached the very stronghold of the moving picture studio. It may be taken as a happy omen for the moving picture business that Ramo films are about to be released, and that they have produced, up to date, nineteen perfect pictures, all perfected with the master touch of direction.

In its endeavor to secure the patronage of the general public, whose intelligence is rapidly rising, they have advanced their forces of efficiency but one side—the fight for quality.

If anyone asked what was the sine qua non condition in order to make any film successful, there would be a chorus of answers: "An unlimited supply of money." Wray Physioc, who organized the company and who has been responsible for its result, ever since its brave but somewhat impotent beginning several months ago, announces that the new Ramo studio has the finest lighting system possible, and that $45,000 has already been expended on this equipment and the perfection of their pictures; and that no end of expense will be spared in making Ramo films the finest in quality—if money and talent is all that is necessary.

Geo. A. Magie, salesman for Pilot Company, left on a trip to exchanges in Pennsylvania and District of Columbia Tuesday night to boost the Pilot brand.

The Pilot Company has just opened a branch office at 220 West Forty-second street in the Candler Building. Their head offices and plant are at Yonkers, N. Y.

VITAGRAPH

At the Allen Academy of Arts, Hartford, Connecticut, a vote was taken on the handsomest and most competent moving picture actor they had ever seen on the screen. Courtenay Foote, of the Vitagraph Company of America, was the favorite by a vote of 806 ballots out of 1,007. This is some popularity when we take into consideration that the Allen Academy of Arts is composed entirely of young lady students. The Vitagraph Company has been deluged with orders for Mr. Foote's photograph from the fairer sex, and until the above news was received, this large and sudden demand could not be accounted for.

Mr. W. V. Ranous, the Vitagraph actor-director, who is now with the Vitagraph Globe Trotters, sent a post-card with a picture of St. Mark's Cathedral at Venice. He said he hoped it might be placed in a prominent place where all good Vitagraphers who saw it would know that there was no reason for their not attending church when they were abroad. Mr. Ranous also stated that he had a complete collection of all the churches and catedrals of the places he had visited, and it would be at the disposal of all his Vitagraph associates, who cared to make a list of them for reference in their future trips to foreign parts.

Mr. Tefft Johnson, of the Vitagraph Players, has a hobby which he seems never to get away from. He is an ardent fisherman and it is not an unusual thing for him to get up at three or four o'clock in the morning and make his way to the Piers at Coney Island and other places along the coast when the "running" is good. It is a very cold day when he doesn't turn up at the studios loaded down with a fine string of bass, weakfish, flounders, or what-not; his face wreathed with smiles, ready to go on with his day's work, elated with his good luck and filled with the invigorating sea breezes imbibed before breakfast. He was caught the other day casting his line in the studio tank, presumably keeping in practice. When one of his fellow-actors asked him what he was fishing for, he replied, "Suckers." "Come on in, the water's fine!".

NICHOLAS POWER COMPANY NOTES

A Powers No. 6A has been installed in the Opera House at Warren, Ohio, through the Sterling Novelty Company of that city. In commenting upon this, the Warren Ohio Daily Chronicle has this to say: "This machine is a Power's No. 6A type entirely fireproof and containing all of the latest and best improvements. It is the same type of machine as those used by such leading exhibitors of the country as Elmendorf, Burton J. Holmes, Lyman H. Howe, and the principal theatres in the larger cities. The machine was installed Thursday, and last evening patrons of the Opera House for the first time witnessed pictures projected by the most modern projection apparatus ever installed in Warren." Many were the remarks heard from the motion picture fans as they piled out of the theatre last evening as to the steadiness and freedom of flicker in the picture.

The Southern Film Service reports the sale of 6A machines as follows:

New Novelty Theatre, Sealy, Texas; Clouse & Stansberry, Humble, Texas; J. H. Eledsoe, Crockett, Texas; C. M. Cassil, Texas City, Texas; A. H. Trayler, Huntsville, Texas; Dixie Theatre, A. Martinee, Galveston, Texas.

The following installations have been made: One 6A complete with motor and mechanical speed control to Bedford Rest, Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, N. Y., through S. Rosenbaum; one 6A to Bijou Theatre, Worcester, Mass., through R. D. Marson Moving Picture Company, Boston, Mass.; one 6A complete to J. Seedman, 390 Fulton street, Jamaica, L. I., through Greater N. Y. Film Rental Company; one 6A complete to J. M. Solomon, Littleton, N. H., through S. B. Leland, Montpelier, Vt.; one 6A complete to J. H. Freedman, 145 Burnet street, New Brunswick, N. J.; one 6A complete with extra mechanism to Notlok Amusement Company, 110th street and Broadway, N. Y.; one 6A with inductor to E. S. Tevens Airdome, Flatbush and Avenue F, Brooklyn, N. Y., all through the Picture Theatre Equipment Company, of No. 21 East Fourteenth street, New York City.

Philadelphia, Pa.—F. Roe Searing, Shaugnessy & Wiler are estimating on plans for a moving picture theatre to be built for Goddard & Weaver. Clayde S. Adams, architect.

RELIANCE CHATTER

The well-known author, Frederick Isham, was the guest of Manager J. V. Ritchey, Wednesday afternoon, at the studio, where he viewed the picture dramatization of his novel, "Half a Chance," which will be released in three reels on June 14th. Mr. Isham was so interested in the picture interpretation of his work that he is considering writing a story for Manager Ritchey especially for screen presentation.

Forrest Halsey was won over to being a regular contributor of stories for the Reliance by viewing one of his novels on the screen, and the result has been so gratifying to the Reliance scenario department that Frederick Isham's visit is doubly interesting.

Paul Scardon, who is an enthusiastic breeded of English bulldogs, had the pleasure of seeing his little puppy, Beaming Belle, walk away with four cups, a medal and a silver trophy given by Arnold Lawson in the Bulldog Breeders' Show at Grand Central Palace last Saturday. Paul is particularly well pleased because Beaming Belle is of the third generation of present strain, which speaks well for future hopefuls born in the Scardon kennels.

Alan Hale is now a regular member of the Reliance baseball team. He is the second Reliance leading man to qualify as an athlete of the diamond, Irving Cummings being captain of the nine.

George Seigman is being featured in "Half a Chance," the release of June 14th which will be a three-reel feature instead of being in two reels as announced. There will be no Reliance release on June 11th, the date for the appearance of "Annie Laurie" being changed to June 16th.

A unique feature of "The Tangled Web," in which Rosemary Theby will be introduced as a Reliance star is several scenes at a dog show; Paul Scardon entering a dozen of his prized bulls for the benefit of the camera.

A new multiple reel drama from the pen of Marion Brooks is scheduled for release in the near future. Miss Brooks has been enjoying several weeks' vacation, which included a trip to the Panama Canal; although the drama is in shape for immediate production the title has not been definitely decided upon.

EX-CATHEDRA

THE CENSOR BOARD

I WOULD like to ask the 12,000-odd exhibitors in the country: What good is the Censorship Board of New York? Last week I published a letter from John Collier, the secretary, and stated in my editorial that they had passed the film "The Wages of Sin." In asking why, I was informed that the general committee had passed it over the heads of the Censor Board who saw the film first. Those who examined the film numbered four ladies and three gentlemen; they condemned the film in toto. It was then taken to the general committee, who passed it over the heads of the first censors—passed it in the face of the opposition of every respectable newspaper in the country. They passed it, with the names eliminated, thus proving their impotency in the face of a crisis, when they might have gone forward on the wave of a great cry for cleanliness. Over the phone John Collier said that the men who took part in the film had as much right to earn their money as any other citizen has. Granted; but if they had been ordinary citizens they would not have received $500 each for posing in "The Wages of Sin." It was only with a view of exploiting these men—paying them $1,500 with the thought that they were going to get $15,000 back—that they originated this film. Looking back on the notorious films that have been made, and rejected by every honest exhibitor throughout the country, we trust they will do the same with this film. The time is NOW for a forward movement and the doing away with an effete body of people who have not the courage of their convictions when a great crisis arises.

Speaking with prominent workers on the Censor Board, I was informed that one reverend gentleman said he saw absolutely nothing immoral or travestying good taste in the film, and, as far as he was concerned, he thought they were only wishy-washy sort of folk who could see anything in it to censor. Another member of the board, who I understand is a doctor, made the statement publicly in committee that, as far as he was concerned, any cabaret scene with a naked female dancer on the table is good enough for him, and he would pass it, as far as he was concerned, if there was anything like a moral at the end of the story. If the information is correct as I have it, I think the Board of Censors want censoring themselves.

I wrote, way back in 1908, and said there was needed no Censorship Board, because the public themselves would be the official censors of anything placed upon the market. I re-echo that sentiment to-day—the public first, to voice their sentiments pro and con, and if some of the members of the Censor Board could sit in the audiences of theatres, as I sit, and listen to the remarks made on the question of some of the films, they would censor and cause to be cut out scenes that they allowed to pass to-day. And if the manufacturers, especially some of the Independents, could listen to the criticisms of the films they are putting out, they would not long wonder why it is that so many exhibitors go over to the Licensed manufacturers. Within the last four weeks 210 Independent exhibitors have taken service with the General Film Company. It certainly shows which way the wind blows for quality of subjects and service.

The exhibitor cannot afford to-day to present pictures which are offensive to good taste or good morals. His patrons are represented by the cleanest-living people in the various communities where pictures are shown; he has gained their patronage by presenting the highest class of pictures, and he is not now going to lose it by exhibiting those of any class or make to which objection can be taken, as in "The Wages of Sin." If a Board of Censors is needed for moving pictures, the same sort of censorship is needed as much, if not more so, for plays and operas. In my opinion, as I have expressed it above and reiterate the statement, a board of this kind is not needed for either plays or pictures. The public are the best judges, and they may be safely trusted to lend their patronage only to houses which exclude pictures of a vicious or harmful character. So the sooner the New York Censor Board becomes a thing of the past the sooner it will cease to be a joke and a laughing stock to the industry.

Alfred H. Saunders.

President, M. A. Neff, 1003 Mercantile Library Bldg., Cincinnati, O.; Secretary, C. M. Christenson, 703 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, O.; Treasurer, J. J. Rieder, Jackson, Mich.; Counsellors, Hon. J. B. Foraker, Hon. J. J. Lentz; Executive Committee, M. A. Neff, Chairman; C. N. Christenson, Secretary; J. J. Rieder, L. F. Blumenthal, Geo. H. Wiley.

THE MARYLAND CONVENTION AT BALTIMORE

The Maryland branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America met at the Hotel Emerson on the 3rd and 4th of June. Marion S. Pearce, of the local firm of Pearce & Scheck, was elected president. He was a pioneer in the motion picture business, and is not only popular but a man of ability.

J. Howard Bennett was elected national vice-president; Oliver J. Allenbaugh, first vice-president; James J. Hartlove, second vice-president; Frank H. Durkee, secretary; Harry Moorehead, treasurer, and S. I. Rosenburg, sergeant-at-arms. All Baltimore men.

Mr. Neff, National President, presented a charter for the State organization. This entitles Maryland six delegates and as many alternates in the National Convention, which will be held in New York, July 7 to 12.

The following delegates and alternates were then elected:

Delegates—I. Wertheimer, Cumberland; George List, Frederick; Isaac Ulman, Salisbury, and A. Anderson, Marion S. Pearce and William Fait.

Alternates—T. J. Bohannan, Bernard Depkin, Jr., William Kalb, Joseph Brodie, Harry Lewy and George Benjamin.

A committee, Marion S. Pearce, J. Howard Bennett and A. Anderson, was named to draw up by-laws and a constitution for the State league and report.

Congressman J. Charles Linthicum, at the banquet, spoke on "Motion Pictures from the Educational Standpoint," and pointed out the many ways in which the films tend to further and disseminate education more than any other medium.

National President Neff spoke on the ideals of the business.

"Many who go into the moving picture business think that all they have to do is to hire a hall and an operator, and then sit back and count their cash," he said. "These men invariably fail. The motion picture has become one of the greatest educational and civilizing factors in the world. People now demand that the pictures be either educational or representative of the highest type of clean comedy or drama. Everywhere the successful exhibitors do not ask me how they can make more money, but they invariably ask me how they can get better films.

"Motion picture exhibitors represent what will become within the next five years the most powerful organization in the country. Keep it out of politics."

MISSOURI CONVENTION NOTICE

The third convention of the Missouri State Branch No. 9 of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, will be held at Moberly, Missouri, on Monday and Tuesday, June 23-24, 1913. All motion picture exhibitors in the state are invited to attend. For further information write Secretary State Board, World Theatre, 8th and Hyland, Kansas City, Mo., or F. A. Selby, White Way Theatre, Moberly, Mo.

UNPRECEDENTED SUCCESS ASSURED THE FIRST INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION OF THE MOTION PICTURE ART

Through the untiring efforts of the Exposition Committee for the last eight months, fully four-fifths of the main floor space of the New Grand Central Palace has been rented to manufacturers of articles pertaining to the great motion picture industry. Contracts have been received from the leading manufacturers of this country and of Europe. For some time the exposition has been an assured financial success to the motion picture exhibitors of America.

From an artistic standpoint, the class of exhibitors who have taken space is enough to guarantee that the exposition will be the greatest trade show ever held.

And as the majority of the motion picture theatre owners of North America will attend the third annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, to be held during the week under the same roof, there is no doubt but that the manufacturers will receive ample returns for the money invested in their exhibits.

From the public's standpoint there will be enough novelties that have never before been seen in this country to entertain and interest the thousands who will attend the exposition daily during the week of July 7th to 12th.

Then there is the most essential standpoint of all, i. e., the motion picture exhibitors. Whereas a great number of them may not be interested in the financial end of the exposition, members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America most assuredly are, as the exposition is held under their auspices and sole control. The mechanical and artistic end they must appreciate, as exhibitors as a rule are quick to take advantage of anything that will improve or help beautify the surroundings of their theatres.

A great number of the visiting exhibitors will undoubtedly take advantage of every possible minute, when not in conference, to familiarize themselves with the articles that will be exhibited in the different booths.

The Convention Committee, under the chairmanship of Samuel H. Trigger, is making extensive arrangements for the entertaining of the visiting exhibitors, their families and friends during the week, and there is no doubt but what the convention and exposition will go down in motion picture annals as the greatest event in its history.

The New Grand Central Palace is an ideal building for the holding of these great events, it being picturesque, cool, and with sufficient floor space to accommodate the enormous crowds that are sure to attend.

On Monday, June 16th, Frank E. Samuels, secretary of the Exposition Committee, may be found at the New Grand Central Palace, where he will make his headquarters until this great event shall be a thing of the past.

The innumerable details connected with the installing of such a large undertaking as this exposition will require all of his time from now on. The model theatres are well under way and will be erected very soon. The building of the booths will also commence soon, as no show will occupy the Palace until this one. Plans have been made for an elaborate ventilating system, which will be installed in all the theatres. It is claimed by the manufacturer of this device that it will positively keep the theatre at a moderate and even temperature.

As the following partial list will show, the class of manufacturers who will have exhibits at the exposition is of the very highest:

The General Film Company has taken a whole theatre, in which licensed films will be shown. On the main floor in the centre of the side reserved for film companies, the well-known picture play stars, such as Alice Joyce, Lillian Walker, John Bunny and G. M. Anderson, will hold receptions in the General Film Company's booth.

The Mutual Film Corporation has taken a theatre, and the well-known stars appearing in their program, such as King Baggott, will be in their reception booth to welcome their many friends and admirers.

Boost the Convention and Exhibition

Grand Central Palace July 7th to 12th

Part time in a theatre has been taken by the Kinemacolor Company of America, which will exhibit the wonderful colored pictures that have made Kinemacolor known throughout the world. Their reception booth on the main floor will be a handsome affair.

The Famous Players Film Company, who have become well known in the last year as makers of feature pictures, are prominently located on the main floor.

The National Educational Film Company will be present to demonstrate some new ideas.

The Nicholas Power Machine Company has a large space, in which will be on exhibition all the different Power models. An interesting exhibition of putting the Power machines together will be given.

The Precision Machine Company, makers of the Simplex, has a large space, in which different models will be shown.

The Standard Machine Company was among the first to arrange for an exhibit.

Eberhard Schneider will exhibit his machines.

The Enterprise Optical Company is located on the centre aisle, where the Motorgraph machine may be seen.

The well-known Edison Kinetoscope, made by Thomas A. Edison, Inc., will also be on exhibition.

All of these machines will be used in the different model theatres on the mezzanine floor.

The American Seating Company will seat all of the theatres with their most comfortable chairs. In their booth on the main floor many styles will be shown.

The H. W. Johns-Manville Company will have an exhibit on the main floor and will also erect booths in all the theatres.

The United Electric Light & Power Company will have an electric theatre that will make a brilliant display.

The New York Edison Company, with a large space on the Depew place side of the Palace, is also to make a big electrical display.

The following slide manufacturers have arranged for exhibits: The Novelty Slide Company, Scott & Van Altena, and the Manhattan Slide & Film Company.

Screens will be exhibited by the J. H. Genter Company, the Day and Night Screen, Ltd., the American Theatre Curtain & Supply Company, makers of the Gold Fibre Screen.

Koerting & Mathiesen will have a large showing of arc lamps and carbons.

The Picture Theatre Equipment Company will have a display of all articles pertaining to the industry.

The G. H. Masten Realty Company will do all the decorating for the committee. Its booth is sure to be noticed.

The Motion Picture Centre, Inc., will be located where its representatives can explain the value of an all-the-year-round exposition.

Universal Day, Monday, July 7th

The following is a schedule of the entertainment provided by the Universal Company, who start the ball a-rolling on Monday, July 7th, at 2 p. m.

Combination tickets will be given to all the delegates, their wives and friends for every entertainment in said park. The Universal will give a prize for the champion amateur swimmer of the motion picture delegates and also will have a dancing contest for a prize for the moving picture delegates. The various actors of the Universal studio will also appear and give a performance on the open air stage.

No tickets will be given except through the personnel of the Committee on Entertainment and the Universal Film Company desires it to be known that a sight-seeing car will be at the Grand Central Palace all week at the disposal of the delegates' wives.

Edison Day, Tuesday, July 8th

Tuesday, which will be known as the "Edison Day," on which occasion the Edison Company have arranged a sight-seeing tour through New York, thence up to their studio, where some good entertainment and refreshments will be provided, and pictures of the League will be taken and displayed on the screen at the Exposition Theatre the following day. They have also arranged many novelties of an instructive nature, and on the whole will make it very interesting to those who will have the pleasure of visiting their studio.

The General Film Company have caterers and others working for a special day to be known as the "General Film Company Day." Mr. McChesney has promised Mr. Hilkemeir, the chairman for the entertainment, a good time for all.

Mr. Wright, of the Kalem Company; Mr. Hoagland, of the Pathe Company; Kessel & Bauman, of the New York Motion Picture Company; the Biograph Company; and Hugo Reisinger and many others in the motion picture trades are contributing and assisting the committee in their endeavor to entertain the incoming delegates.

Vitagraph Studio Day, Friday, July 11th

Friday afternoon, July 11th, has been set aside by the Vitagraph Company of America for the reception of guests of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League who wish to visit its studios and inspect its plant, where a cordial welcome will be extended.

In reaching the Vitagraph studios, take either the Subway, Broadway surface cars, or the Fourth avenue surface cars to the Brooklyn Bridge at Park Row, Manhattan. The Brooklyn Rapid Transit Elevated will have cars in waiting to transport the passengers by way of the Brighton Beach Division to the Elm Avenue station, where the Vitagraph studios are located. A special train will be awaiting passengers at the Brooklyn Bridge, Manhattan, on the Brighton Beach Division at 1 o'clock p.m. This train will stop at only a few stations between the Bridge and Elm Avenue.

The banquet and reception of the Motion Picture Exhititors' League will be held at the Brighton Beach Hotel, Brighton Beach, in the evening. After visiting the Vitagraph studios, you can take the Brighton Beach Railroad at the Elm Avenue station at any time, reaching the Brighton Beach Hotel in ample time for the evening's festivities.

GENERAL COMMITTEE FOR CONVENTION AND EXPOSITION OF THE MOVING PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF AMERICA

PRESIDENT NEFF'S CENSORSHIP VIEWS

Alfred H. Saunders, Editor,
The Moving Picture News.
Dear Sir:

I notice in your issue of June 14th, in speaking of my address in Philadelphia, some one in writing has caused the wrong impression. In my remarks I stated that I was most positively in favor of a national censor board but, owing to the fact that at this time there was but one feasible and legal way to create such a board, namely, by a few states joining Ohio in forming a national censor congress, the congress to sit at the most available place and censor the pictures for the entire country.

I am opposed to local censorship and also to state censorship. If other states will join Ohio in forming a national congress, it would be an easy matter, in my opinion, to secure the legal endorsement of other states whereby the pictures censored by the national censor congress would be accepted by the various states without one cent of cost to the states and through such a censor congress, not only the public but the exhibitor and the manufacturers would be protected. For instance, after the censor congress was formed we could ask each state to pass a law recognizing this congress and make it legal for all pictures censored by this congress to be shown in that state. This would eliminate the local censor boards and give the people and the exhibitors what they want. When a picture is censored, it should be legally censored and there should be no further restrictions placed upon it.

Very truly yours,
M. A. NEFF,
President, The M. P. E. L. of America.

MR. F. E. SAMUELS

Mr. F. E. Samuels, whose photograph appears in the circle of the front cover this week, is well and favorably known among the exhibitors of not only this country, but of London, where he attended the Cinematograph Exposition at Olympia last March as secretary of the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art and representative of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Mr. Samuels is one of the pioneers of the moving picture business in New York, and as far back as 1900 gave exhibitions of moving pictures in the basement of The Fair on Fourteenth street, which was at that time a slot-machine arcade. Al Harstn had a canvas enclosure of about ten feet by thirty feet, where fifteen or twenty people could stand and see about fifty feet of film on a screen three feet long by two feet wide. In those days there was no protection from fire for the films, as they were run from a spool on top of the machine to a bag or gunnysack under the machine, or, if the sack was not available, the floor was always handy for the film.

While Mr. Samuels was in London, at the banquet given to the press representatives by the proprietor of the London Kinematograph Weekly, he formed the International Moving Picture Trades Journal Association, composed of representatives of trade journals from all over the world, the object of which is to hold a meeting each year in one of the principal cities of the world to review the different phases of the business and for mutual interest. At the banquet it was decided to hold the next meeting in connection with the forthcoming convention and exposition, at which time a banquet will be given to the trade journals' representatives.

Mr. Samuels is devoting his entire time at present to the coming exposition, and hopes to be able to make a good showing at the finish.

BLAME AMERICAN MOVING PICTURES

London's night schools, most of which are carried on by the municipality itself, are in a bad way for want of pupils, and the astonishing slump in evening instruction that has come to pass here, all in the last three years, is chiefly due to the counter attractions of the halls of cinema which have sprung up as quickly in London as they have in most other cities, big and little, the world over. Anyhow, deservedly or not, the London "movies" (most of which feature American films over all others) get the principal blame for the falling off in attendance at night schools in a lengthy and highly significant report on the subject which the Education Committee of the London County Council has just issued.

"These picture palaces," writes one of the principal contributors to this report, "have, for at least a time, taken hold of the imagination of the people, and both young and old apparently cannot resist the charm of the living canvas."

This is a mightily serious matter, for England is falling behind in the race with the United States and Germany for trade supremacy, and will be nowhere if technical education is neglected by the rising generation. "No one, however," writes another commentator on the present situation with regard to evening instruction, "can read the education committee's report without being struck with the thought that the present generation is not making the sacrifice that is necessary if the industrial competition of the world is to be successfully met."

Whatever the cause may be, the practical failure of the night schools is a grim reality. There now are ninety-three fewer of them than there were in 1905, and during the last session, out of 13,500 classes opened, 2,600 had to be closed because the average attendance for three weeks had fallen below the closing number, which varied from twelve to six according to the subject. Five hundred authorized classes were closed before the session was one month old, and "between September, 1911, and Easter, 1912, no fewer than 160 classes in bookkeeping and 180 classes in shorthand had to be closed owing to low attendances."

THE COMING CONVENTION

From the number of letters being received by the National President, there will be a large representation from every organized State in the Union and Canada, to the big National Convention to be held in New York City beginning Tuesday morning, July 8th, and closing Saturday night, July 12th.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America's Convention promises to be one of the big events to take place in New York City this year, and while New York is the second largest city in the world the exhibitors are becoming so enthusiastic that the people of New York are beginning to sit up and take notice, and it has just dawned upon them what a big advertisement it will be for their city. Thousands of exhibitors will be there and Grand Central Palace will entertain some of the most distinguished ladies and gentlemen from America and abroad that have ever appeared there heretofore.

The address of welcome will be delivered by either Governor Sulzer or Mayor Gaynor, and responded to by President Neff. Governor Jas. M. Cox of Ohio will deliver an address, also Senator Foraker, National Counsel for the League and Associated Counsel John J. Lentz. The best music in the world will be there, also every projecting machine and all kinds of accessories. While this is the first Exposition of Arts of Motion Pictures ever given in this country, it will be complete in every detail and will be one of the big features of the convention; but the main feature of the convention will be the perfecting of an organization which is destined to become the greatest potential factor in the lives of the human race, on account of its clean amusement and the great educational advantages it possesses.

Every motion picture exhibitor, not only in the United States, but in other countries, should be at the Grand Central Palace at ten o'clock Tuesday morning, July 8th, when the electric button is touched that puts in motion the greatest display ever given in the world of Cinematography and hear the grand outburst of music and song, cheered by the thousands of exhibitors who will be present. At the Grand Central Palace is the place that every exhibitor should be; not at home; lay aside every care, this is an opportunity of a lifetime to hear, see, live and enjoy yourself. You have the chance and privilege of attending this great convention, which will make history that will live as long as the world stands and will be the means of showing the exhibitors hundreds of improvements and will enable him to return home with new ideas that will be worth many hundreds of dollars to him and make all feel proud that they are members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, besides becoming acquainted with the best people in the world.

This convention will be one of the most pleasant, lasting, sweet memories to all who attend, on account of its magnificence, splendid entertainments and efficient, effective organization. The New York Local Committee is working hand in hand, harmoniously with the National Executive Committee; it having everything prepared for the comfort and pleasure, as well as business, of the visitors. The ladies especially will be entertained. Committees have already been appointed to give the ladies special attention and provide special entertainment for them. No one will be overlooked.

It is proposed on the last night to give a grand banquet and reception at Coney Island, right down where the waves of the seashore and the cooling mist of the salty brine will soothe the anxious and inspire all with the greatness of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the possibilities of the future.

President Neff left Cincinnati last Friday, June 13th, for New York, where he will take up his headquarters at the Imperial Hotel, suite Nos. 243 and 245, on the parlor floor, where the latch-string will be out to all exhibitors until after the big convention. Mr. Neff is in New York on the ground early to help out the committees and assist in arranging to make everybody feel at home. Every exhibitor is just as welcome as the flowers in May at his headquarters. All communications to the president should be addressed to the Imperial Hotel, Thirty-second street and Broadway, New York City, until after the convention.

General Motion Picture Company of New York, Inc., Brooklyn—Theatrical, motion pictures; capital, $100,000. Incorporators: J. F. Kelaher, F. M. Witzel, Brooklyn; J. S. McQuade, New York City.

GAUMONT CHRONO-CHROME

Friday, June 6th, at the Thirty-ninth Street Theatre, New York, it was my good fortune to be one of a very select audience to witness the Chrono-Chrome pictures, and will say they are of an excellent nature. The colors stood out in wonderful relief, especially in the flower and fashion studies. When the difficulties of production and projecting are taken into consideration, the results are wonderful in the highest degree. I have seen many productions of color photography, and must say these pictures come well up to the standard. The proper blending of the tints by the three-fold primary color scheme was a revelation, as was evidenced by the great applause given to each number. I look forward with a great deal of interest and pleasure to seeing further productions taken with American surroundings. The Gaumont Company describe the Chrono-Chrome production as follows:

"The reproduction in color in absolute exactitude is thus for the first time realized in moving pictures by means of a three-color process, and by the simultaneous superimposition on the screen of three Monochrome images, blue, red and green. The freshness of the color on the one hand, and the precise superimposition of the images on the other hand, enable one to appreciate the results which such a process alone can yield. There is, in fact, no tint, however delicate, which cannot be reproduced with faithful reality; there is no detail so fine, or even so overshadowed by other details of a picture, that it cannot have its own color and its own proper gradation of color. It is, in brief, the complete reproduction of nature, and will unquestionably obtain immediate and permanent success among the ever-increasing army of moving picture patrons.

"In order to obtain these results enormous difficulties have been overcome.

"First, in the succession of the projected images. The necessity of changing at each movement three images instead of one and at the same time rendered it obligatory to conceive and to construct a mechanism having sufficient length of stroke without such sharpness or suddenness of action as might injure the film.

"Second, the achievement and arrangement of certain specially and suitably colored screens, to insure by superimposition of the three monochrome images a color synthesis of absolute exactness; and notably to yield pure whites.

"Finally the film had to be rendered sufficiently hypersensitive, and at the same time panchromatic.

"As the spectators will agree, these difficulties have been most successfully overcome, and the Gaumont Co. can justifiably claim that they are certainly the first to publicly present under practical conditions a complete solution of these problems. This is, moreover, no longer a question of mere laboratory results, exceptionally obtained, in consequence of a fortuitous combination of favorable circumstances, but it is a commercial proposition based on the ability to produce a continuous industrial output, the handling and exploitation of which is now being undertaken by the Gaumont Co., Flushing, L. I."

The other part of the program consisted of their Film-parlants, or talking pictures. The synchronizing of the picture with the phonograph was accomplished in an admirable manner, although the phonograph was very metallic. We have since learned that this will be overcome by new methods and conditions in the American manufacture.—A. H. S.

Milwaukee, Wis.—Plans for a moving picture house on the old Brown site, Second and Wells streets, are almost complete. Cost, $15,000.

Detroit, Mich.—Contracts will be let within a few days for the erection of a new theatre building on Woodward and Horton streets—the Regent. It will be operated by the Regent Theatre Company.

Milwaukee, Wis.—The Miramas Theatre Company will erect a motion picture theatre on Oakland avenue. Cost, $25,000.

Shamokin, Pa.—The Polish National Home Association of this city purchased the old Polish church and will transform same into motion picture theatre.

The Snare of Fate

By Virginia West

(Adapted from Thanhouser Release.)

TWO can manage on ten dollars a week if all goes well. There is three and a half for rent and four for food and two and a half left for other things. If the two persons happen both to be women, then of course they may manage with a little less.

Mary Drent was a stenographer and received ten dollars a week. With this she supported herself and her mother. It was sometimes hard to make ends meet, but she did it as long as they both kept in good health. But one day Mrs. Drent was taken ill, and then things were different.

Mary struggled along as best she could, denying herself even the necessities in order to give her mother what she needed. But sickness is expensive, and the need for more money became greater and greater.

One day the girl passed a sign which caused her to stop. She had caught the words "Money loaned on easy terms." She retraced her steps and stood before the sign, pondering. "Well, it won't do any harm to investigate," she thought, and went into the building.

"Why, certainly, my dear young lady, I shall be pleased to do the very best I can for you. Now, tell me just what you require." The man was politeness itself, and Mary began to open her heart to him.

"You see, sir, I am supporting my mother and she is ill. It takes quite a lot of money to buy the things she needs."

"What salary do you get?"

"Ten dollars."

The man thought a moment, figured on a sheet of paper, and said: "I'll lend you fifty dollars and you can pay me 10 per cent interest monthly. Fifty dollars would help you, wouldn't it?"

"Oh, yes, sir, it would help me very much. Would that be all I would have to do—just pay the interest every month?"

"Yes, that is all. And you don't have to pay the money back until you can do it with ease."

"That is very good of you," answered Mary gratefully. "Can you let me have the money now?"

"Oh, yes, right away. Here it is. Now, you just sign your name right here, to make it legal. What's your name?"

"Mary Drent."

"My name is Jenks."

"Thank you, Mr. Jenks. I am very grateful to you and I am sure my mother will be, too. Good-by."

Mary went happily home, holding her fifty dollars tight in her bag.

How eagerly she bought the things her mother needed! How thankful she was that she had seen Mr. Jenks' sign! But alas, how quickly the fifty dollars melted away!

Fifty dollars all at once had seemed an immense amount. It was to Mary the price of five weeks' hard work received at one time. But it did not last five weeks, even. In spite of the great care she took, it was gone at the end of three weeks. It had been spent for the extra things that her mother had needed for so long.

In another week the interest on the borrowed money was due, and Mary could ill afford to spare it from her salary.

However, it was paid, by denying herself in every possible way she could. Then the girl suddenly realized that they were in a worse condition than before. They did not have even ten dollars a week.

Somehow Mary struggled along until the second payment, but when the time for that came she was in despair. There was nothing ahead with which to pay. She must simply divide a week's salary in two.

So nervous and upset was the girl when she went into Jenk's office to make her payment that she burst into tears as soon as she had given the money.

"What is it? What is the trouble?" asked the man.

"Oh, Mr. Jenks," cried the distressed girl, "I don't know what I am to do. I am afraid I cannot manage to pay you again."

The man turned and walked away from Mary, that she might not see the expression of his eyes.

"You said you had a sick mother, didn't you?" he asked when he returned to her side.

"Yes, she is very sick, and I have used all the money you let me have. She needs so many things, and I don't know what to do."

Again the man walked away and returned again.

"You would do anything to help your mother and make her comfortable, wouldn't you?" he asked.

"Oh, yes, anything I could do."

"Would you marry me?"

Mary sprang up and recoiled from Jenks. "No, not that! I could not!" she cried.

"Then you are not so willing to do things for your mother, after all," taunted Jenks.

"I could not, I could not," she answered in a trembling voice.

"You would never have to trouble about money," he tempted.

"I—I will tell you to-morrow," she answered weakly, and fled from the room.

That night the mother was very ill, and Mary had to go for a doctor.

"She needs more air and sunshine and more nourishing food," he announced, without the slightest suggestion as to where they could come from.

"I'll do what I can," promised Mary, and in that moment she knew that she would have to do that which seemed to her the most dreadful thing in the world.

THE LOAN SHARK'S WIFE PLEADS WITH HIM ON BEHALF OF ONE OF HIS VICTIMS

But over and over to herself the girl kept saying: "Perhaps he is not so bad. Perhaps I can learn to care for him," until she so nearly persuaded herself it was true that it was with comparative ease she told Jenks her decision.

The man was three times Mary's age, and she tried to make herself think that she could look up to him as to a father, but she became more and more disillusioned.

Jenks' idol was gold, and everything was sacrificed to that. At first, Mary tried to believe that his brutality of nature was firmness and his mercilessness in dealing with his debtors was justice, but the time soon came when she could no longer keep the veil before her eyes.

Several years after the marriage, Mrs. Drent died. Then Mary turned all her affection upon her baby son.

As the child grew, her every care was for him. Day and night she was haunted by the one thought, "Will he be like his father?"

Her every effort was put forth to raise the boy as she thought he should be raised. Day by day she spent hours with him in the park.

Upon one of these occasions, as she sat on a bench watching the child playing on the grass, she saw near her another woman, weeping violently. She was poorly dressed and her face was thin and pale.

Mary crossed over to where the woman sat. "Can I not be some help to you?" she asked gently.

There was no answer.

"Won't you tell me what makes you weep? I was once poor and in trouble. I should love to help you."

The woman looked at Mary with red eyes. "Did you ever have a debt and have no money to pay it?" she asked.

"Yes," Mary assured her, "I have been in just such trouble. Don't you want to tell me all about yours?"

"I'll tell you," said the woman through her tears. "I borrowed some money from a man—a loan shark, that's what he is—and he charged such awful interest that I can't pay, and he is going to take everything I own."

Mary's heart sank. "What is his name?" she asked, hesitatingly.

"Jenks."

"I know him, and I'll go with you to see what can be done."

"But he has refused——"

"I might as well tell you the truth," interrupted Mary. "The man is my husband. I have asked him to conduct his business differently; I have appealed to him in general cases; now I shall appeal in a particular case. Come with me."

SHE WAS AS KIND AND BENEVOLENT AS HER HUSBAND WAS GRASPING AND MERCILESS

Mary called her boy and the three went to the office of Jenks.

"I found this woman in the park, weeping," began Mary when she stood before her husband. "I persuaded her to tell me her trouble. She has told me, and so I have come to ask you to be merciful to her."

Jenks turned to the woman. "You owe me money, don't you?" he growled.

"Yes," admitted the woman.

"Didn't you know how much you would have to pay? Didn't I tell you that in the beginning?"

"Yes, but——"

"Never mind anything else. You knew what you'd have to pay. Now pay it or suffer the consequences."

The poor woman left the office. Jenks turned to Mary.

"Now, for you," he said, hoarse with anger, "you can leave this office, and never come here again. Don't meddle with my affairs. Do you hear?"

Mary left the office without a word. That evening when Jenks went home he found a note which said:

"I have taken the boy away from your influence. I do not wish him to grow up to be like you."

Jenks laughed as he tore up the note. "It's just as well," he said. "Now she can't interfere with my business."

As the years passed there was no one even to try to change the old man, and his fortune increased. The years did not soften him, but made him more merciless than ever.

"Haines," he said to his agent one day several years after the departure of his wife and child, "Haines, the third floor, rear, north of the tenement, is two months behind in the rent. What is the meaning of it?"

"I have called many times, Mr. Jenks, and——"

Jenks sat up straight in his chair and glowered at the agent. "I hire you to collect my rents," he thundered. "If the people won't pay, you know what to do."

"You want me to evict them?"

"Yes, to-morrow morning. You ought to know that by now. I'm going now," he informed Haines, "to look at that property we were speaking of yesterday. It is in that same neighborhood, isn't it?"

"Yes, just across the street a few doors down."

When Haines had gone, Jenks started out to see the property he was expecting to purchase at a bargain.

In passing his own property he decided to look it over a little. Just as he was about to enter the doorway, a mist seemed to come before his eyes. He put out his hand blindly to catch himself, but fell forward into the hall.

When old Jenks came to himself he was lying on an old mattress on the floor of a very poor, dilapidated room. He gazed around him, bewildered. A man, a woman and two children were in the room, all looking at him. He opened his lips to speak, but no voice came. He tried to raise his hand to make a gesture, but it would not stir.

A knock sounded on the door. The man opened it. Jenks could see three men enter. Joy sprang into his heart. One of the men was his own agent. Oh, he remembered now; this was his own house. All would be well; Haines would take him home.

But the agent did not even glance that way.

"You will have to leave," he said to the man and woman. "I brought these men to put your things outside. Here, get to work there."

The men began to gather up the poor furniture.

"Can't you wait a while?" pleaded the woman.

"No. I've got my orders and I got to carry them out."

"But here is a poor, sick man we found in the hall yesterday."

"Never mind about that. I'll call an ambulance when we get him out," Haines assured her. "Hurry, men, and carry that mattress out."

Everything was soon on the sidewalk, and Haines telephoned for an ambulance and departed.

"It's the least I can do for the poor wretches," he muttered. "I'll charge the nickel to old Jenks as sure as I'm born."

An hour passed before the ambulance arrived. Old Jenks lay upon his mattress, striving to make himself known. The effort and the exposure were fast weakening him. When the ambulance arrived, he was unconscious.

The evicted family remained sitting upon the sidewalk, not knowing what to do. At last a woman stopped to speak with them. When she found that they had no place to go, she took them to her own rooms.

"I am poor, too," she said, "but I will gladly share what I have with you until you can find somewhere to go and work to do."

They told her of the poor, sick man who had been taken to the hospital. They did not know him, but they had done what they could for him.

After making the family comfortable in her own home, the kind-hearted woman went to the hospital to see if she could be of any use to the sick stranger.

"He is just dying," she was told when she entered the ward.

"May I go to him?" she requested. "I know so many of the people in the neighborhood where this man was found that I might recognize him and be able to tell his family of him."

When she stood beside the bed and bent over the fast-sinking man, her heart seemed to stop. She stepped back from the bed, deathly pale.

"What is it?" asked the nurse, going to her assistance.

"He—he is my husband. I left him several years ago. His name is Jenks."

Several days after that a lawyer called upon Mrs. Jenks. "Your husband died without a will," he informed her, "and everything he had goes to you and your child."

That night she voiced but one prayer: "Oh, God, teach me the best way to return to these people what is theirs."

EDUCATIONAL FILMS

I have been inundated with letters and requests for copies of my issue of May 10th, and 5,000 reprints of my article on the "Educational Film" have failed to satisfy the demands of educators for this information. So acceding to the request of many in the industry I am herewith reprinting the editorial for the benefit of those who failed to secure copies of the issue in which it appeared.

First of all, I want to ask the question, What are Educational Films? People from all parts of the country are writing to know where they can get educational films, and so diverse are the ideas that I often wonder what they mean by the term "Educational Films." Educational films are not incongruous historical films of past events, brought up-to-date by directors who do not consider the simplest details for a correct reproduction of pageants, heroes, or ancient wars, depicted as being fought with Martini Henry and Lee Metford rifles. These rifles were not invented until the last decade of the 19th century, and brought to perfection the first decade of the 20th. Nor did Robinson Crusoe shoot the cannibals with such a rifle as he carries in the scenes of the films, nor was he dressed in a pantomime costume of bearskins. These are not historical pictures, nor are they educational. "Quo Vadis" as a spectacular play, and other like pictures in the same category, are practically the last words in Cinematography, but they are not historical educational films in the proper sense of the word educational. They are magnificent, and as showing what the art has reached to-day are the quintessence of Cinematography.

There came into my office during the past two weeks several people having a desire to produce educational films, and to float companies for that purpose. When I got right down to rock foundation, I discovered that all they wanted to produce was some imaginary event of ancient days (which has already been staged and filmed, in more or less crude manner), their desire was to produce something superior to anything that has been staged up to the present. They had great ideas, but when I explained that these were not historical, or educational, they wondered what was the matter with such subjects and why they were not educational. I explained that every company in the country was trying to produce something of this type.

In my opinion, an educational subject must be strictly educational, such as the evolution of the bee, the flowers, the taking of subjects forming the curriculum of the grades in high schools, or say from the seventh grade grammar, through high school, to college and university; taking up the various chemical experiments, showing the amalgamation of various liquids and atoms, showing the life of bacteria, from microscopic and other standpoints. There are many such films on the market, and I wish all the films of this nature could be gotten together in one large center and distributed wholesale and broadcast throughout the land. There is a wonderful field for those already made, and for those to be produced. And also a great opening for a company to exemplify such ideas.

The company, or companies, or the promoters must get away from the idea that directors are needed to stage educational films, in cramped-up situations, with up-to-date actors and fashions. They are altogether wrong. Directors are not needed. It needs educationalists, it needs scientists, it needs men who have a full, complete, concrete idea of what an educational program really means, a program that shall appeal to the intellect of the well educated man and woman, as well as illustrate to the most illiterate, through the eye, the teachings desired to be conveyed.

In my advocacy of the educational film I have always had the highest ideals in my mind, a something far superior, far beyond the ordinary plane of the everyday moving picture, something that shall lift out of the rut of mediocre subjects the beautiful art of Cinematography. What I wish to see to-day is an amalgamation of all interests owning such subjects as I have outlined above, and the bringing before the public, and the educational authorities, such films manufactured that will be of real lasting benefit to the audiences. I have made mistakes in past days, not exactly through ignorance, but with the full desire to advance an art which can be made in every respect the superior to the cut and dried textbooks of the schools, and also to give knowledge to the general public. I have taken the stand that Cinematography should be absolutely free and untramelled, and I have worked for this with a pure sense and desire for the best interests of the industry, trying to advocate the best there is, to the elimination of all the chicanery and roguery throughout the industry.

I have been abused for the stand I have taken, I have been ridiculed in many ways, many lies have been written and spread abroad concerning my motives for this work, but I feel that the time is rapidly approaching when a direct forward move must be made, and a man who knows the business, and has its highest aims and aspirations at heart, will be selected to go forth from one end of the country to the other, explaining the principles and conditions to the highest educational authorities in America. This man must be fully equipped with the knowledge and the power there is in Cinematography. His aim and desire must not be the craving for somebody else's money, but he must have a true, honest desire and a proper view, and conscientiously convey the greatness and the grandeur of the educational work that can be accomplished by united effort. The company, or companies, that exploit this scheme must not by any means be any of the present-day money-grabbing crowd, who for the sake of filthy lucre are selling their souls and perjuring themselves on the witness stands of our courts with a desire to overreach their fellow men.

The company must come into the industry with clean hands, with an almost unlimited capital, with the pure desire (a philanthropic one, if need be), to spread truth as it can be shown. It should be willing to sacrifice the money end of the business for a time, to aid the future greatness the industry may bring forth.

It is this aim that I have had in mind ever since I wrote my first editorial in March, 1907, even to the present day, and in answer to my inquiries, I would say in the words spoken during the Civil War by Abraham Lincoln, the much abused and greatly beloved President of America, "If I were to read, much less answer, all the attacks made on me, this shop might as well be closed for any other business. I do the very best I know how—the very best I can; and I mean to keep on doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me won't amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, ten angels swearing I was right would make no difference."

I have had this aim in mind, and through the Moving Picture News, in the editorials I have written in the past, this has been my highest ideal: to unite in one Universal Brotherhood, the highest elements in the industry, working to propagate a true, high-class educational program. A. H. S.

UNIVERSAL BOOKS AND PAPERS MISSING—SOME NEW OFFICERS ANNOUNCED

The following information has been given us from the offices of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company:

W. H. Swanson, the erstwhile vice-president of the Universal, is understood to have sold his stock to Pat A. Powers. He left a note for the company saying he was going to Chicago on personal business. The company has been unable to locate either Mr. Swanson or Mr. Burton Garrett, former assistant secretary and second assistant treasurer. Some of the books and papers of the company have disappeared from the safe including the stock transfer book. This makes it impossible for the company to know what stock transfers have been made.

Mr. Carl Laemmle has purchased the entire stock holdings of David Horsley. The control of the company remains unchanged except for the elimination of Mr. Swanson. Mr. Swanson has been removed from the office of vice-president. Mr. Burton Garrett has been removed from the office of assistant secretary and second assistant treasurer. Carl Laemmle continues as president. R. H. Cochrane is now secretary and treasurer, G. E. Kann, assistant secretary, and Joe Brandt, assistant treasurer.

Oklahoma City, Okla.—Mutual Film Corporation of Oklahoma incorporated; capital, $10,000. Incorporators: Jos. F. Curtain, H. O. Coughlan, Hugh L. Harrill.

Richland Center, Wis.—Mr. Minett sold the Orpheum Theatre to Erickson & Geiger.

Washington, Wis.—Wm. Burns will open a theatre here.

Wausau, Wis.—W. H. Hopper and P. R. Ziebell bought the Bijou Theatre.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Cambria Amusement Company will erect motion picture theatre. Cost, $15,000.

KINEMACOLOR

The Kinemacolor Company of America has recently introduced a device which is the last step in putting the projection of its pictures on a "foolproof" basis. A short while ago the new improved filter came out and now, after many exhaustive experiments, comes the "color corrector" attachment, which instantly corrects the color of the picture being projected in event of a new operator having threaded the film up wrong or making an improper joint and so causing an entire reversal of the color scheme.

This reverse color has been a frequent occurrence with inexperienced operators, but the new device will place any operator in the experienced class.

Formerly correcting this "off color" necessitated stopping the machine and changing the position of the film, which is now done by pressing a little lever and instantly the desired effect on the screen is obtained without any unnecessary delay.

That the "Spirit of '76" has not died was proved at Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre when "Nathan Hale" was reincarnated in Kinemacolor. During the scene where the Continental troops parade, headed by a fife and drum corps as in Willard's famous painting, the theatre orchestra played patriotic airs, and the whole audience arose and cheered heartily.

Douglas Cooper celebrated his taking charge of the Canadian Kinemacolor offices by signing contracts for exclusive service with the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, and the new house in St. Johns, N. B., to open on July 1st.

RELIANCE CHATTER

Prize bulldogs captured the studio by storm on Friday. Paul Scardon entered seven of his best breed of English bulls in the show staged for the coming three-reel feature, "The Tangled Web," in which Rosemary Theby will make her first appearance for the Reliance, and even Louis, the office boy, has become a dog enthusiast.

The ball team is busy getting ready for a game with Eclair on Saturday at Lenox Oval. The Lubin game, which was swamped by a cloudburst, will be played in Philadelphia on July 5th.

A new interpretation of "The Rosary," which has been occupying Oscar Apfel's attention, promises to be of more than passing interest, especially as Forrest Halsey is responsible for the scenario.

Larry McGill has just returned from a short trip to Mauch Chunk, Pennsylvania, which he calls "The Switzerland of America." Larry found some beautiful scenery and succeeded in getting a coal mine explosion that was realistic enough even to satisfy his leading man, Alan Hale. Alan says that coal mining never did appeal to him, anyway, and blasting always made him very nervous.

Edgar Lewis brought his company home from their trip to Maine all enthusiastic about Rodman Law's plunge over the Stillwater Falls. Law made the dash over the falls in an open boat and is the only man who ever performed that feat. The spectacle is part of a coming Reliance drama, and was caught by three cameras placed at entirely different angles.

Manager J. V. Ritchey succeeded in obtaining the promise of Frederick S. Isham, the well-known novelist, to write a story especially for Reliance production. His novel, "Half a Chance," is the Reliance release of June 14th.

"WHAT HAPPENED TO MARY?" MOST EVERYTHING!

And now she's been novelized. These stories, produced by the Edison Company in pictures and by The Ladies' World in short-story form, have been novelized by Robert Carlton Brown, whose new detective novel, "The Remarkable Adventures of Christopher Poe," is to be brought out this Fall by F. G. Browne & Co., of Chicago.

"THE DEATH KNELL"

Story of Sombre Power

"Who shall step aside?" is the vital question which throbs throughout the active feet of "The Death Knell." How a man tells his beloved nephew that for a year only does he ask life and love, that then the nephew may return to find funereal black on the doorknob and the widow's love—love greater than her grief—love, not for the dead but love for the living.

Awful is the plight when she who is married to him believed to be upon the eternal brink, but which brink, by a strange vicissitude, ever recedes and the vista of the years of health disappears only into the far dimness of a distant horizon.

She had been betrothed to the nephew when a proposal of marriage from the wealthy uncle who purchased her parental home from her bankrupt father came to stem the tide of their fortunes.

A terrible moment it is when the passions and jealousies of the husband who would not die is aroused by the obvious yearnings of the young folk toward each other; dramatic his pursuit of the nephew as the latter skulks about the uncle's castle in the endeavor to surreptitiously keep his tryst with his uncle's wife. The spectator can feel the crimson flood thrill his cheek in the scene wherein the woman and the nephew each plead for the privilege of blotting out their respective lives in order that the future and destiny of the other may not be sacrificed, the moment when at the height of this significantly tragic dispute, the husband rushes in, realizes the situation, and a moment later reels back lifeless through the clinging velvet of the curtains, no longer the man who would not die, but the man who would die.

HER SUPREME SACRIFICE

Warner's Feature Film Company have just released "Her Supreme Sacrifice," a dramatic love story in three reels, made by the Pyramid Film Company of New York.

Thrill follows thrill with unusual rapidity throughout the entire production. The quarry scene, where a tremendous blast is set off, resulting almost fatally to the principal in the play; the ballroom scenes with "tango" dancing by professional cabaret dancers, and the picturesque country scenes, have never been equalled in any motion picture. The photography is absolutely perfect in every scene.

Mary Manson, a beautiful country girl, loves, and is loved by John Bennet, the foreman of the Stony Ridge Quarry. Against the will of Mary's mother, the two are betrothed. Courtleigh, a millionaire's son, buys the Manson property for a fabulous sum. The remainder of the story deals with the schemings of Mary's ambitious mother to match her with Courtleigh against her wishes. How John, who has been injured in an accident at the quarry, finally wins his boyhood sweetheart provides a story of unusual sweetness and interest.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

Know Thyself

WHAT type of story are you best adapted to write? Do you know? If not, find yourself. Try some self-analysis and endeavor to discover what comes easiest and best to you. Also learn when and where to get the best kind of work out of yourself. Most literary workers labor best in the morning, but not all. Learn also to see the world about you. Get a new viewpoint. Find a part, if possible, that other writers have not developed for the public in undue quantities. If you can create one real character, sometimes he may be good for a series of stories. Study your market. Take nothing, not even method, from anybody else that your own individuality is not able to transform into something entirely new. Don't try to ape the work of others. Remember you are yourself, and that some day you may be head and shoulders above the rest.

Touching on Style

Be sure that the words in your script convey your message. Reach the editorial reader attractively and yet vividly. Don't let your style draw attention from your work. Let your text tell the story and not vividly express your own individuality. This is an art in itself. So long as you remain yourself you cannot help but have a style. It is your personality. But keep it down so as to make style subservient to story.

Show Your Courage

Show that you have backbone. We like to help the plucky writers. When editors supply rejections do not cry to high heaven. If you remain in the game some day you will praise the system that furnishes these rejections. No matter whether you aspire to become a successful writer of pictureplays, or a successful writer in other literary lines, you will find the "Road of Reverses" a long one. Rejection slips line the way. The producers want what they think the people want, and it is up to you to supply the market and to make your stuff so strikingly good that the editor will grab it with joy. And, in order to accomplish this purpose, you must work. You must submit. And what you submit must be the best that is in you to submit. No book, correspondence school or critic will win for you. Sometimes theory confuses practice. Work straight to your ideal market, employing neither agent nor subterfuge. Reverses should prove a stimulus if you are made of the right stuff; rejections should become schoolmasters in a way; courage and perseverance are prime essentials to success, together with independence and brains. Every editor longs for good plots. All "star" writers were once new writers; the editor knows this and you should know it. Don't become a know-it-all, and remember that adverse criticism helps the best of us. Work hard and show your courage—then possible success!

Vinton in Line

Mr. Horace Vinton, editor, author and producer, who has written and directed pictureplays for American, Shamrock, Comet and other companies, has concluded to read and criticise scripts. His home address is 19 West Ninety-eighth street, New York, N. Y. Clients can be assured of honest service and expert advice. His price is $2 per script and he will conduct no "school."

The Social Side

The third dinner of the script writers of Gotham, under the auspices of The Inquest Club, was held at Keen's Chop House, West Thirty-sixth street, Saturday evening, May 31. There was the usual feast of reason and flow of soul and everybody had a good time.

Mr. Ralph Stoddard, editor of the Cleveland Leader Photopage, informs us that many reservations are being made for the Middle Western script writers' dinner to be held at Hotel Euclid, Cleveland, on June 28. Writers from many adjacent cities have sent in requests for tickets and a number of famous playwrights will be present from New York and Chicago. Tickets are two dollars each, and may be had by addressing Mr. Stoddard, of the dinner committee.

Editorial Etchings

Modeste Hannis Jordan, editress of The Writer's Magazine, that bright New York monthly publication devoted to script writers and other literary workers, is an authoress of note. "The Emancipation of Miss Susana," her latest novel, is running through several editions.

Hopp Hadley, publicity manager for Reliance, is a versatile script editor and author. He is one of the most popular editors in the business because contributors are given every courtesy by him. He has developed many of the successful writers.

George W. Terwilliger is with the Lubin editorial staff as special writer and assistant to Editor McCloskey. Terwilliger is well known to thousands of script writers. We consider him without a peer when it comes to building up a gripping plot of true heart interest.

Pertinent Pointers

The editor must be favorably impressed. Hence have your manuscript neatly prepared and double spaced.

A script with a slow-moving or hackneyed beginning loses at the start. A lame climax loses at the end.

Be clear, be simple, avoid fine writing, let style take care of itself and reach your reader. Convince him, if possible.

Make your characters real people. Make them act like real people. Don't give them high-flown names like "Mortimer Montmorency." The people you know do not carry such cognomens.

Write about familiar incidents. If you are writing a Panama Canal plot be sure that the editor won't laugh when he reads it, or that audiences won't laugh when they see it, as sometimes happens. Choose material you know about and play safe.

Make sure that your script wouldn't be better if told in fewer words. Most scripts would. Don't ramble. A plot is very dead when buried in a litter of language. Learn the value of condensation.

Keep proportions in your story. Make the main points tell and do not "slop over" on unessential detail. Everything not serving to develop the one big idea should be eliminated.

The plot is the thing. Write yours out first in a couple of hundred words and be honest with yourself. You may find that that plot was used when the Queen of Sheba visited King Solomon. If your plot is old, discard it. If you think it is old, discard it. If you honestly think it is not so very old, see if you can differ it in structure.

The Use of Words

The proper use of words is an art—a great art. Avoid big words and long words and words little used. It is an affectation to use long adjectives, and the editor, instead of admiring your vocabulary, will sigh painfully and place the story in a return envelope. The best writers that ever trod this earth of ours were chary of words. The Bible is written in short, easily understood monosyllables. Avoid involved sentences. Say what you mean. If you are not careful you will say what you do not mean and something the editor will fail to understand. Make every step of your plot clear and make your story hang together. Good writers study the dictionary for short comprehensive adjectives. In no manuscript is brief, clear diction more essential than in the pictureplay manuscript.

The Art of Repression

Repression of emotion is a mighty good art to acquire. In real life the greatest grief is not always voiced by the most language. The most tense situation in a properly produced pictureplay is frequently enacted quietly and without lost motion. A deft word, touch or a brief suggestion in a script is often more dramatic and effective and carries the author's inspired idea more clearly than a couple of hundred words of unessential detail. No one can tell you just how to be dramatic. It is a gift. But the idea is to bring out that dramatic gift so that it will appeal in its completest form to the editor and director.

Animal Stories

Selig will give especial attention to good one and two-reel animal scripts. They have about everything wild but tigers. These scripts will have to carry a stirring story and show the wild animals in their native haunts. Anything of the circus idea is not desired, nor scripts showing animals confined in cages.

He Sees the Light

George Hennessy, author of more than sixty recent Biograph stories, and about one hundred by various other companies, has seen the light. Some weeks ago, Mr. Hennessy announced that he would open a school for those who are ambitious to jot down scripts. Then recently we received this letter from Hennessy:

"I beg your pardon. You are right in your war on the schools. From my short experience as a 'school professor,' I find that it is not a business for any man who has a conscience. 'Suckers' are plentiful, but I am not fishing for 'suckers.' Most of the applicants for my course of lessons are so impossible, it would be dishonest to take their money. So I have quit the school business for good. I did it all with the best intention, thinking that there was really need for a school, conducted by a man competent to teach. I know better now, and admit that I erred. If would-be playwrights would read your department in the Moving Picture News, and have imagination and intelligence enough to profit thereby, that would be all that would be necessary."

George Hennessy has the reputation of being one of the most prolific and versatile script writers in the profession to-day. There are none better. This isn't flattery, it is the truth. We know, if you please. He sees the mockery, the pretense and the heartbreaks coincident with the usual "script college," and shows his honesty in admitting that we are right and he wrong. If anyone in the profession to-day were capable of conducting a "college" Mr. Hennessy is the man. That he finds it impossible to fulfill promises such as are handed out so freely in "college" advertisements should be convincing proof to beginners that they must depend on their own efforts and talents if they would succeed in the gentle are of script writing. Beginners and others certainly owe a debt of gratitude to Mr. Hennessy for his frank and outspoken statement.

Worthless Stuff

One editorial department has $1,700 worth of scripts piled up in its office. The latest editor and the directors say the stuff is impossible to produce.

A Warning to Others

A Los Angeles scribe, thoughtful of others, kindly contributes some valuable advice:

"For those who contemplate sending their efforts to 'mushroomy, fly-by-night film organizations, doubtful 'feature' companies, prize-contest-takers and the rest of the ilk, let me relate my experience. Several months ago I sent a script to a concern of the 'Junkville-former-star-playing-lead' variety. Result, an offer of $25, which was accepted. A month elapsed and I wrote, timidly asking why the check had not been sent. Answer: 'Your story returned some time ago.' The script has not reached me nor has it to the present day, three months later. I requested the company to make some effort to trace the script. My letter was ignored and the return postage stamps appropriated. Fortunately, I have a good carbon copy of the script and intend to watch their future releases. Moral: Stick to the regulars, unless you feel that your script is so bad that you can afford to lose it—then don't send it."

Yes, it is best to submit to reputable producers, of which there are many, and not to wander too far afield.

Waiving Responsibility

A New York writer wishes to be sure that he understood us correctly when we stated that the Universal waived responsibility for scripts, even after the editor has written to the contributor that his "story was being held for further consideration." It is the policy of the Universal Clearing Bureau, according to a letter bearing the signature of President Carl Laemmle. We read the letter. A well-known writer submitted a story last August. Within a week came a postal card, signed by Hal Reid, informing the contributor that his script was being held for further consideration, and that he would be "promptly" informed as to decision." Four months later the writer queried the Universal. No answer. He queried again and again, and finally received a reply that the script has been misplaced, probably, and that an effort would be made to trade its fate. Finally the writer appealed to the president of the concern, who replied that the Universal was not responsible for any scripts submitted, notwithstanding that the script department had assumed responsibility under editorial signature. Mr. Laemmle kindly offered to have a carbon recopied, providing the author had a carbon. We have no comment to make on the above methods of doing business. The editors are absolved from all blame, for they are but carrying out instructions from the heads of the concern. Beginners can draw their own conclusions from the above facts. When any changes in editorial policy are ordered we shall be happy to inform our readers of the gladsome fact.

Too Many Scenes

Too many scenes sometimes spoil the picture play plot. Don't write a script containing forty or fifty scenes when generally half that number are sufficient. If the director wishes to cut your script into tid-bits in production, well and good. Don't you try to do it. Tell your story naturally and make every scene count for something.

Postage Due

The Postage Due proposition is again annoying script editorial departments. An editor asked us to mention the fact. Study postal weights. If a script is received with postage due, you will be "spotted" even before your manuscript is opened. The editorial force will be prejudiced against you.

The Rejection Slip

We are inclined to favor the ordinary rejection slip in which the writer is informed that "We herewith return your manuscript and thank you for permitting us to read same. We hope to have the pleasure of receiving more of your work." This is better than the checking system that is in vogue with certain companies. If the editor checks the slip, it is well. If the office boy or a stenographer checks the slip and checks it wrong, it is anything but good for the script writer. The system is unsatisfactory at the best. The Universal has been away off in its editorial checkings for months.

Don't Write a Story

Don't write a story for the moving picture screen—write an action story. An every-day story and an action story each have a well-defined plot. Otherwise they have nothing in common. The short story of fiction while developing the plot depends to a large extent upon descriptive writing and style. The picture-story is built without style or graceful diction. All is subservient to action. Try and see and think the action of your characters and put down on paper what you see. That is the art of writing action.

A man is not without honor save in his own country is a trite saying, but not applicable to the case of one P. A. Powers. Sure, everybody has heard that name. Powers is more honored at home than abroad and he is feared, too. He has some would-be magnates in the moving picture world sitting up and taking notice, and the end is not yet. You can say what you please about P. A. Powers, but you cannot get around the fact that he has accomplished much for Cinematography and that his word is as good as his bond. And in the meantime keep your eye on this militant son of Erin. He will continue to come out on top.

A course of instruction by moving pictures has been planned for Iowa farmers. It will be the first time that moving pictures have been put to such widespread use. Throughout the summer pictures are to be taken of the spraying of orchards, laboratory work, stock judging, work with the forge, and in the carpenter shops of various institutions, and the roofing of houses and barns. All these pictures will be shown throughout Iowa next fall and winter. United States Government officials will watch the system and its results closely to learn if it would be advisable to institute similar courses throughout the rural districts of the nation.

When two chorus girls shot a New York millionaire they were immediately engaged at a large salary by a vaudeville manager. Worn-out pugilists doff their gloves, don a dress suit, and are permited by vaudeville managers to "reminisce." Notorious divorcees receive larger salaries than women who depend entirely on their ability for recognition. Vaudeville has its good points and its great possibilities. The popularity of its various programs is undeniable. But there is much to object to in vaudeville, and there is no good reason why that source of amusement should be coupled with the moving pictures.

For months past we have sounded a well-meant note of warning to certain film manufacturers to cease the exploitation of "criminal heroes" and the releasing of crime films. However, these would-be wise ones, wise evidently in their own conceit, have persisted in these "pictures with a punch," and now the Middle Western authorities have taken a hand in the game. We sympathize with that class of manufacturers who try to release meritorious work, for they must suffer to a degree, along with the money-mad crowd which tears down while the intelligent class builds up. Moving picture censors in many Middle Western States are combatting the crime films. The Ohio State Journal, a warm friend of the moving picture, dealing editorially with the subject we have been mentioning for so long, says:

> There is nothing like crime to contaminate the mind. A young person may be spoiled for life by witnessing such pictures. All revolting pictures mean education downward. We spend millions for education and morality, and then we set up obstacles to our own high purposes by desecrating our ideals and defiling our thoughts. It is the truest policy to stop all such exhibitions. And we should not be too tame about it. Whatever is questionable should go. There is plenty in this world that is interesting and elevating without resorting to the low and vile. No community that respects itself will tolerate such things.

There is too frantic a search after cheap "punches" and "thrills." To read the list of requirements sent to pictureplay writers by some manufacturers, one would incline to the belief that all there is to the moving picture is the "kick," the "punch," the "grip," and other like favorite terms. There are a number of producers in this country who will read plays which are not supposed to be built of sensational improbabilities. These producers are far-sighted enough to know the value of contrast and to figure that while the many "punches" and "thrills" are being flashed on the screen, that the quiet story of every-day life, the consistent comedy, and the true-to-life drama afford needed relief. The Western pictures have deteriorated during the past year. Two-thirds of the cowboy and Indian plots are just repetitions with other backgrounds. All the "thrills" have been enacted time and again and the season has arrived for more educationals, scenics, and convincing, refined comedy.

* * * *

Among the evident tendencies of the time, the most casual observer cannot help noticing the growing popularity of spectacle and pageantry in theatricals. This is not a sudden liking of American playgoers. It has been fostered by the moving pictures, until the time has arrived when the big theatrical productions must entertain with spectacular gorgeousness. Everything possible is being done by the scenic artist to appeal to the theatregoer's sense of beauty. Scenic settings are receiving more than the usual attention with every pretentious theatrical production. People are taught the love of beautiful scenery in the moving picture theatres, and they carry their demands to the legitimate stage. The theatrical powers are doing the best they know how, but are sadly handicapped. The moving picture play is frequently produced midst scenic environment painted by Dame Nature, and not by human hands. Mountains, seas and rivers, vales and valleys all silently contribute to make a scene of beauty. What master of stagecraft can compete with the great out-of-doors? Imitation and illusion seem cheap indeed when the real handicraft of Nature is in competition. Well selected scenic background is one secret of the continued popularity of moving pictures. Many a trivial plot has been excused on the strength of the scenic environment. And the regular theatregoer is demanding like scenery on the legitimate stage, a demand which, alas, can never be satisfied.

JUST GOSSIP

By The Mahoney

Never before in our memory have so many complaints been heard of the inactivity of the studios.

Actors whose services, in the past, have been constantly in demand for motion pictures, are encountered in and around Exchange Alley looking for employment.

In answer to the inquiry, "Why are you idle?" they remark with a degree of bitterness: "Oh, they want us to work for next to nothing!"

It is reported as a fact that in one studio, where people of experience and training were formerly paid a fairly liberal compensation for their services, actors have given way to tyros and inexperienced outsiders, furnished by an obscure agent located in a prominent office building (housing the representatives of many companies) at the munificent rate of two dollars and fifty cents per diem, which is distributed as follows:

One dollar to the actor, one dollar to the general manager of the film company, and fifty cents to the agent above referred to.

In view of these conditions, is it any wonder that one must perforce see such silly and inane drivel as a recent Solax release: "The Mystery of a Lost Cat," and a Thanhouser, "My Uncle's Wives"?

When we recall the very excellent output of the latter company in the past, it seems strange that a stage director of national importance, whose deft hand has been recognized and applauded in many notable productions, should fail to show better results than are evidenced by many recent Thanhouser releases.

At a private view of an important feature film, shortly to be placed upon the market, one of those glaring and inexcusable errors in direction was most marked.

The principal character is shot in the left arm and appears later in the story, carrying his right arm in a sling, heavily bandaged.

When the attention of the presiding genius in control was directed to it, he remarked:

"Oh, that's all right. The photography is fine, that'll carry it!"

Ere this paragraph sees the light of day, "Benny" Schulburg, dignifiedly yclept B.P., will have taken unto himself a bride.

As a friend and well wisher, The Mahoney tenders his most sincere congratulations, and hopes that "Benny's" marital state will be one continuous reel of unalloyed joy, always in focus, sans scratches, sans spots, sans static, with a blending of sunshine, beautiful flowers, harmonious music, and birds of brilliant plumage (principally white, with elongated necks and long beaks) eternally projected on an unerasable screen.

The gods be with you and yours, "Benny," in all your undertakings.

Lottie Briscoe, that petite and dainty bit of "Cinematography Dresden," of the Lubin forces, is rapidly acquiring a degree of prominence to which she is in all justice entitled. Several of her recent portrayals place her in the front rank of the most popular screen artistes of the times.

Miss Briscoe was at the head of the delegation which received the visiting stars, when the vast army of exhibitors visited the world-famous Lubin plant last week.

Aside from her artistic dramatic record, petite Lottie's brilliant career before the camera has been one succession of triumphs, which will remain an enduring memory in the minds and hearts of her multitude of admirers.

While manufacturers in certain quarters are enmeshed to the armpits in the bogs of strife and contention, the conservative and worthy followers of the art are pursuing the even tenor of their ways, without noise or bluster, and adding new laurels to their already large collection of those emblems of achievement.

Is there any profession or industry, except in the business of the theatre, where persons with a proven stigma, such as obtains in the cases of the three notorious creatures (to call them men is a profanation) Rose, Schepps and Vallon, would be tolerated?

Yet, a recent trade journal whose object should be to discourage the admission of these three examples of degenerate treachery and depravity, under cover of a cleverly devised review, is, by inference, advocating the exploitation on the screen of a dangerous and nefarious story, employing the services of these cormorants, representative of the slime, scum and excrement of the underworld of this great city.

Avaunt! Go to! Thou'rt base, evilly inclined! To thus forget all ethics of honor and principle for a few paltry dollars.

The human vultures who preyed upon the bleaching carcasses of shipwrecked victims of the Scottish coast decades ago, were angels of mercy compared to those who lend encouragement to the screening of creatures with such dastardly records.

Ye gods! And only a few months back, they wrote most scathingly of the Petrosino film!

A few days ago we encountered the Admirable Crichton of Cinematography.

This gentleman confided to us that he had read more than six hundred scenarios, and had not found one among the number worthy serious thought.

He further stated that he had written, produced and directed the technical end of a score and more of pictures which are destined to be a revelation in the industry.

As we listened to him we could not help but feel what poor, miserable, plodding worms men in the abstract are when the gods favor one person with such a multiplicity of accomplishments.

Pretty Mary Pickford, whose picture play brilliancy has been temporarily dimmed through her season of dramatic triumphs with "A Good Little Devil," will shortly return to the fold of the picture artists for an indefinite period, having been placed under contract to create several special parts in contemplated productions of the Famous Players.

Her reappearance on the screen will doubtless create a whirl of enthusiasm among her host of friends and admirers in the picture play theatres.

Clay Green, whose principal claim to theatric distinction and dramatic authorship is that he is a member of the Lambs Club, wrote "Chispa," and tailored a brilliant collection of short plays to fit the requirements of that classy and popular flock of "histrionic southdown," has been engaged to supervise and revolutionize the scenario department at the Lubin plant.

Clay's early association in 'Frisco with such notable and distinguished political and journalistic lights as "Mike" De Young, Colonel Barnes, Peter Robinson, Colonel Ned Frey, "Daddy" Cox, Sconchen Malony and "Brockey" Kelly, should furnish him with an endless variety of themes, comedy and dramatic, for they were all characters whose lives were fraught with tales of adventure.

We might suggest a three-reel feature written around the life of the first white child born in San Francisco as a fitting subject for Clay's premiere.

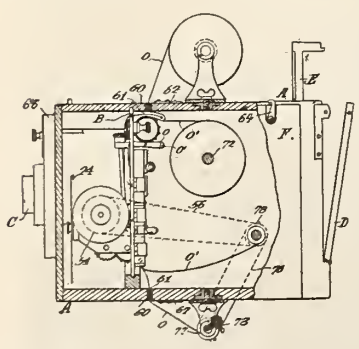
MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

The Supreme Court of the United States has again demonstrated the efficiency of the existing patent laws by its decision of May 28th, 1913, in the so-called "Sanatogen" case, in which it announces as a universal rule that "a patentee who has parted with a patented machine by PASSING TITLE to a purchaser has placed the article beyond the limits of the monopoly secured by the patent act." In other words, the "passing of title" as in other property cancels the patent owner's right to control; but it does not prevent him from licensing conditionally, nor from consigning goods for sale at a stipulated price. This decision is parallel to and consistent with the decision of the same Supreme Court in the Bobbs-Merrill case, in which it held that a copyright did not enable the publisher of a book to prevent its sale at less than a fixed price by department stores and others.

The Department of Justice has long contended that where a patentee sold his patented article he lost all control of it and was powerless, especially in view of the Sherman anti-trust law, to establish and control resale prices. Hence the officials of the department regard this decision in the "Sanatogen" case as of tremendous importance, putting an end to existing widespread extensions of patent monopolies, based upon unlawful or inequitable stipulations and conditions. The decision will affect many articles now sold under restrictions fixing the resale price, particularly certain cameras, talking machines, watches, and clocks, not to forget certain kinds of safety razors, the manufacturers of which have sought to extend their monopolies and shave the public in a financial sense by questionable expedients. In fact, several anti-trust suits now pending in the courts are based on the principle involved, and the Department of Justice has been awaiting a determination of the question before starting additional prosecutions on the same theory.

It must be understood that this latest decision of the Supreme Court, while it does eliminate certain "trust" abuses that have arisen under the prior construction of the patent law, does not deprive the inventor or patent owner of any equitable right or protection; and it certainly is an efficacious answer to the piratical "Oldfield Bill" and those back of it. As we have always maintained, the patent laws are fundamental, broad and basic, and the United States Supreme Court is certainly competent to interpret them in such manner as to meet changed trade conditions and to correct abuses. The average politician is no more competent to tinker with the patent law than an elephant is to overhaul a watch—in fact, in so far as intelligence is concerned, give us the quadruped every time.



Patent No. 1,058,809 has reference to cameras for printing positive cinematographic films from negative films, and it has primarily for its object to provide an apparatus which is simple and inexpensive, and at the same time accurate and certain in action, and in which can be used the standard sized cinematograph film. It is the invention of George Charles Thomas, of Liscard, England. The figure is a side elevation of the apparatus with the side door partly broken away, and negative holding spools in position. A is the case of the apparatus, and B the frame adapted to slide in and out of the case A, and which carries the film moving mechanism and shutter. C is the lens at one end of the case; D is a hinged door at the back end of the camera; and E is a screen for focusing purposes. In printing, the negative film O and a positive film O1 are placed together; and run together through the mechanism as one film, the negative being wound off a spool 72 disposed outside the case, and wound on to a spool 73 similarly disposed, while the positive film O1 is wound off a spool 74 and on to a spool 75 disposed within the case; that part of the negative film within the case being disposed between the light and the positive. The negative film is fed into the camera through an aperture 60, provided with a light excluding means marked 61; it is taken out through a similar aperture, in the bottom. And these apertures are provided with shutters 62, which are closed over them when desired. The negative film is wound onto the spool 73, as it emerges from the camera case, by gearing such as a pulley band 76 engaging with the pulleys 77, 78, the latter of which is on the spindle of the spool 75, which is driven from pulley 54 on the shaft of the winding handle 50. The inventor claims a cinematograph printing apparatus, comprising a closed box having an exposure aperture and light tight apertures for the passage of a developed film; a light tight chamber within the box for an undeveloped film; spindles within the chamber for carrying the undeveloped film; spindle outside the box for carrying the developed film; means within the box for moving together the films, comprising intermittently operated sprocket wheels, and continuously operated sprocket wheels which engage with the films before and after they are engaged with the intermittently operated sprocket wheels, gearing for driving the continuously operated sprocket wheels at the same speed, movable gates which permit the placing of the films in position, and means for regulating the size of the exposure aperture; and means outside the box engaging with the said spindles and moving means for moving together both films and unwinding and winding them on their respective spindles.

An international Cinematograph exhibition was held at Olympia, London, the latter part of March, at which were displayed the latest developments in film making and allied industries. Numerous conferences were held in connection with the exhibition, at which films were shown to demonstrate how the Cinematograph has helped "industrial welfare, public hygiene, the church, the missionary, education, the Sunday school, trade, town planning, nature study, etc." Among the novel exhibits was a moving-picture rifle range. What is said to be the most sumptuous Cinematographic theatre in London was recently opened. It was erected at a cost of some £127,000, and has a first-class restaurant and well-furnished foyer approached by a marble staircase. The interior decorations, in a style described as neo-Greek, are in cream and gold, with carpets and upholsteries of a soft tint of chrysanthemum bronze. The seating arrangements are such that a clear view of the pictures may be had from any point in the theatre.

A simple and inexpensive mask, adapted to be superposed upon a sensitized surface to produce a print having a clearly defined picture surrounded by a contrasting border, is the subject matter of Letters Patent No. 1,061,727, issued to the Eastman Kodak Company as assignee of the inventor, Norman W. Carkhuff of Rochester, N. Y. Fig. 1 is a plan view of the printing mask and Fig 2 a view of the resulting print before trimming. A transparent rectangular sheet 1 is provided that is adapted to be superposed upon the sheet of printing paper or other sensitized surface, and which may be conveniently constructed of a cellulose compound, such as is used in an ordinary film base. The center of the sheet has an opening 2 with straight sides that admits of the passage of rays of light and which defines the picture area on the print.

The material of the sheet, while transparent in the preferred construction, is, however, colored red or orange or otherwise fitted to resist the passage of actinic rays and preferably to totally resist them so that the print is produced with an unexposed area surrounding the picture area, as shown at A in Fig. 2, the picture area being indicated at B. But it is desired in the majority of instances to trim down this unexposed portion even if it extends from the picture area continuously to the margin of the print to form a border on the latter, one of the reasons being that it is so difficult to square the print, mask and negative during the printing operation so that this broad border or unexposed portion will be of uniform width. For this reason the sheet 1 is provided at each corner of the picture area 2, or at least at diagonally opposite corners, with intersecting elongated portions 3 and 4 running parallel respectively with the adjacent sides of the opening 2 but removed therefrom and adapted to effect the passage of actinic rays differently from immediately adjacent portions of the sheet so that corresponding marks a and b are produced on the print. Preferably these elongated portions are slots punched from the sheet to admit all rays and fully expose the portion of the print beneath. The angular or L-shaped portion 5 of the sheet comprised within the angles 3-4, and between these slots and the opening 2, is of the width of the border intended for the trimmed and finished print and leaves a corresponding and well-defined angular unexposed portion c on the latter.

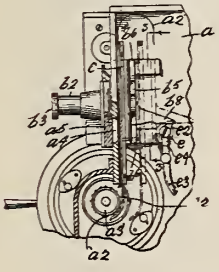
A sure indication of national prosperity and a vindication of the patent laws as they stand to-day, and have stood practically unaltered for several generations, is the phenomenal issue of 714 patents and designs, and registration of 104 trade-marks, etc., for the week ending June 3rd, 1913. For some months the weekly issues have been heavy, but this caps the climax, and it is a practical protest against the Oldfield bill and other measures to tamper with and impair the efficiency of our liberal laws for the benefit and encouragement of inventors. "The proof of the pudding is in the eating."

The Societe Francais des Films et Cinematographes Eclair, of New York, N. Y., has been granted registration No. 91,711 for the annexed trade-mark for moving picture films, used since October 1st, 1912.



A film trap-door for kinetoscopes is shown in the accompanying fragmentary view taken from letters patent No. 1,059,067, issued to Edwin S. Porter, of New York, N. Y., assignor of one half to Francis B. Connock, of the same place. The object is to provide a trap-door which serves to maintain an elastic though relatively firm pressure upon the film to prevent too free movement thereof, and also to prevent the buckling thereof adjacent the light aperture; to provide means whereby said trap-door may be readily moved out of and into operative position from a point exterior of the casing; to provide a carrier from which said trap-door may be quickly and readily removed for cleaning, substitution, or repair; and to provide readily removable, resilient strips on the side of said trap-door adjacent the film, which extend to and insure film contact with the feeding or intermittent sprocket-wheel, thus permitting the quick substitution of said strips in the event of their becoming coated with the film material, as frequently occurs. a is a portion of the casing through which passes the film *a*2 around the sprocket-wheel *a*3 in the usual manner, said casing being provided with the usual aperture *a*4 for the light in the path of the film, preferably protected by an automatically operated fire-door *a*5, the mechanism of which is not shown. Slidably mounted in a cylindrical passage through the casing a, adjacent the aperture *a*4, as shown at b, is a tube *b*2, the outer end of which is covered by a cap *b*3, having a rod *b*4 projecting inwardly therefrom and into the casing, a frame *b*5 being secured theron by means of a pin, and being movable therewith. The trap-door proper consists of a plate c having aperture *c*2 in line with the aperture *a*4, when in position for use. Secured to the side of the plate c adjacent the wall of the casing, are two parallel resilient strips *d*2 which normally bear against the film to produce a tension thereon and to prevent the buckling thereof adjacent the aperture *a*4, said strips extending downwardly and around the sprocket-wheel *a*3 and being provided with slots for the teeth thereof, thus bearing directly upon the film and insuring an exact relationship between the same and said sprocket. Pivoted within the casing, at e, is a latch *e*2 provided with a depending handle *e*3 and normally maintained against the under side of the finger *b*8 by means of a spring *e*4, and, when the frame *b*5 is moved inwardly by means of pressure on the cap *b*3, the finger *b*8 slides over the latch *e*2 until said latch is forced into the notch in the bottom of said finger, at which time the frame *b*5 is prevented from again moving to normal position until the latch is released by means of the handle *e*3, and when the frame *b*5 is in this backward position the trap-door may be lifted for removal.

Assistant Commissioner Tennant in ex parte Henry Thayer & Co., recently held that the word "MARK" cannot be appropriated, used exclusively, or registered as a trade-mark, primarily because it is a well-known surname, the use of which would lead the ordinary purchaser to believe the manufacture to be prepared by an individual of the name of Mark; and secondary because anyone has a right to use the word on his goods in connection with the word "Trade," in designating his arbitrary mark, the word being essentially public property. In this connection it may be noted that the word "Copyright" has been likewise held unregistrable as a trade-mark, because of its public function.

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of The Moving Picture News.

HEARD AROUND THE NEW YORK MOTION STUDIOS

Two youthful caddies were busy as bird dogs on the Forest Park Golf Links at Brooklyn, N. Y. An animated discussion arose on the merits of moving pictures. One budding Jerome Travers held stoutly to the opinion that Broncho films were par excellence, while his "partner in crime" loudly and with characteristic language extolled the virtues of the Kay-Bee films, and the funny part of this incident is that the man whom they were tracing the elusive golf ball for was Adam Kessel, Jr., owner of both these brands.

* * * *

A man entered the offices of the New York Motion Picture Corporation last week and demanded an immediate audience with the scenario editor. This being granted, he produced a script from his pocket which he declared would make a Broncho feature. The overworked editor scanned it and found that among the minor details it called for the use of the Panama Canal, the New York Public Library and the United States Mint. He was considerably surprised when the editor gently turned him down and gave it as his opinion that scenario writers were handicapped by lack of co-operation on the part of the producers.

* * * *

Mack Sennett handles his new "smoke buggy" like he would a refractory "extra." The other day the blamed thing refused to move, and Mack spoke kind and gentle words to it, as he is wont to whisper in the ear of one of his "supers" when they display particularly rare intelligence.

* * * *

When Thomas H. Ince made the Battle of Gettysburg for the New York Motion Picture Corporation, he crowned a long series of artistic triumphs with an undying masterpiece. The genius of this wonderful producer is indeed shown in this awe-inspiring and magnificent spectacle. One sits in silent and open-eyed wonderment as thousands of men struggle to the death, and the crash of the cannon, the glint of the bayonet and the crack of the musket are imparted as vividly to the imagination as though the actual conflict was raging before one's very eyes.

Anna Little and Snowball, the beautiful white horse of the Broncho and Kay-Bee outfit, are inseparable. Her command over the animal is really remarkable, and they make a pretty picture, appearing in practically all the Kay-Bee and Broncho pictures.

UNIVERSAL JOTTINGS

Clara Williams, native daughter of golden California and former leading woman for the Lubin Company, is now a fixture of the Universal Company, in pictures depicting Western life. Miss Williams, in addition to being a clever rider, is also an enthusiastic motorist, swimmer and tennis player.

Walter Parr, a capable member of Director James Kirkwood's Victor Company and brother of Albert Parr, the well-known tenor, died last week, after a two weeks' illness. Mr. Parr was a large, athletic man, and the picture of robust health. When he caught a slight cold during the recent filming of "The Kidnapped Train" at Dover, N. J., he laughed at the solicitude of his friends. However, pneumonia developed and, despite the efforts of the attending physicians, he died. His loss will be keenly regretted by a host of friends.

Joseph Singleton, author, lecturer, traveler, actor and all-around good fellow, is at present doing character leads for Director Otis Turner in pictures of the famous Rex brand. Mr. Singleton's first appearance in moving pictures was in the role of the American engineer in "The Tarantula," with Miss Jennie MacPherson. Mr. Singleton, before joining the ranks of the moving picture stars, was well known on the stage in England, Australia and America.

Harold Lockwood, who played the leading role in "The Capture of Aguinaldo," has been nicknamed "the Claude Eclair of the Universal forces." In the scene where he leads the American scouts up the rocky canyon sides he looks just like the hero rival of Desperate Desmond. Mr. Lockwood affected to advantage the hyperion locks, black flowing necktie and good looks generally.

The Universal takes the lead, in the formation of the Moving Picture Association, by which name is known the organization by the mechanical employees of film companies in Los Angeles for sociability and the exchange of ideas. The organization was started by Universal scenic artists, assistant directors, property men and others in the mechanical end. The third meeting has been held, and all indications point to the success of the first association of the kind in the country. Officers chosen are only temporary. They include all Universal employees, as follows: Frank D. Ormstom, head scenic artist, president; Joseph Murphy, assistant director, vice-president; J. G. Hahn, of the clerical force, secretary; Edward Wortham, head carpenter, treasurer.

And now it is "Doctor" Robert Leonard. The popular leading man of Director Otis Turner's company again is showing his versatility and administering first aid to the injured, just because "Bob" and others of the Universal force who once aspired to fame in baseball insist that the Universal can put out a ball team that can "clean up" on the best of them. Ball and glove practice is indulged in every day, and the actor who hasn't a bruised arm, hand or leg is looked on as a mollycoddle. When a candidate for the Universal team, which is being formed to enter the Southern California League, is injured he is rushed to "Doctor" Leonard's dressing-room hospital, where the "Doctor" and his assistant, Harry Weil, rub the bruised spot with alcohol and cover the bruises with benzoine.

RAMO NOTES

The great scene taken in the courtroom where the trial of Jack Hopkins is being held is one of the main features in "Man and Woman," a two-reel production soon to be released by Ramo films. Will S. Davis is the director, and the picture stands for that quality that has made Ramo films conspicuous in the trade.

Wray Physico secured the sole rights again to the filming of the maneuvers of the American Boy Scouts, which were held at Whitestone, L. I., last Saturday. Three thousand boys took part in the exercises.

Mary Alden, leading lady with Ramo films, in a two-reel production finished last week changed her costume fourteen times in one day. This did not necessitate a change of make-up, but will serve as an illustration to those ambitious young women who want to become "leading ladies" because you don't have to work so hard.

Stuart Holmes has been added to the Ramo stock company. Mr. Holmes comes from the Kalem Company and will be seen to his best advantage in two forthcoming Ramo releases.

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., is the busy man hereabouts. He can't get around town quickly enough, so he rides—rides in a big red car and gets the orders.

A HUSBAND'S MISTAKE (June 23).—Jack Worthington and his wife were happy in their own love and the love for their baby, Helen. Evelyn had never told her husband of her brother Dick, whose besetting sin was gambling.

Going away on a business trip, Worthington gave his wife a handsome necklace. That day Evelyn's brother Dick called, beseeching Evelyn's help to get work. Evelyn got him work with an uncle on Dick's promise never again to touch a card.

Dick grew in his employer's estimation until he was entrusted with considerable funds, one day, to take to the bank. He yielded to temptation and lost all. That night, Worthington returned and a great ball was given. In desperation Dick wrote a note to Evelyn asking help and she went to the veranda. Dick kissed her just as Worthington stepped out. Evelyn gave her necklace to pawn. After the ball, Worthington so upbraided his wife that she refused to explain, and, taking the baby, left.

Months passed and the husband grew desperate. One day Dick came and returned the necklace. Worthington, learning the fact, frantically set out and finally found his wandering wife, now eking out a precarious livelihood as a seamstress. The child, Helen, proved the magnet that drew the wife once more to her husband.

DEAD MAN'S SHOES (June 28).—Tom and Mabel were sweethearts but Tom did not seem to get on in a business way, so Mabel started him for the West. Tom blew in his little stake before leaving and arrived out West broken and discouraged. There he fell in with two crooks and with them laid plans to hold up the pay wagon of the construction camp.

Meanwhile a hobo got off a freight and strolled to the camp in search of work. He needed only a chance to reform. He watched the men place a boast of dynamite and leave, and too late saw Tom, crouched down in the danger zone, gun in hand, waiting for the pay wagon. There was a terrific explosion and Tom died. Hurrying to the scene, the hobo donned Tom's clothes and papers, secured work, took Tom's name and prospered.

Worrying over the absence of her intended, Mabel and her father visited the construction camp. They asked for Tom and his namesake, now clean shaven, handsome and prosperous-looking, responded. There were explanations and a visit to the grave. "With him I buried my failures," said the other. And in the days that followed, Mabel found she still wanted the name of Tom and eventually married him.

RELIANCE

THE DREAM HOME (June 18).—Mrs. Marshall is a widow of some means and she has one child, a boy about six years of age. Mrs. Marshall is one of those women who, in keeping the house clean, overdoes the thing to such an extent that it is a mania with her. Little Joe cannot play with his toys for fear he will litter up the room. Some one gives Joe a dog but there is no room in the house for the pup. Joe's life is a burden for being washed and washed for no reason at all. He is not allowed the pleasure of other children. Joe and his puppy go out in the barn to comfort each other. Joe falls asleep and dreams of a home where little boys are allowed to have pets and play with toys to their heart's content. All children are having a great time and he soon awakens to find this all a dream. He writes a note to his mother and tells her that he is going to find his dream home where the skin will not be rubbed off his face. He finds his dream home in the shape of a little cottage near his home. The children invite him to play and their mother shows great tenderness to the little chap and he feels at home at once. The father of the family comes home and finds Joe having a fine time. Joe refuses to tell who he is—tells them this is to be his home and they his parents. Mrs. Marshall in the meantime finds her son's note and becomes alarmed. The father of the children phones to the police station that a stray boy is at his home. Soon after the message is received at the police station, Mrs. Marshall enters and the police tell her that she may be able to find her son at the address they give her. Mrs. Marshall soon arrives at Joe's home, but he refuses to have anything to do with his mother. Finally after some persuasion Joe is won over and says he will go home, but only on the condition that he be allowed to play as the other children. This is agreed to. Mrs. Marshall realizes that she has been thoughtless about the pleasures of the little fellow, but from now on she will act differently. Joe tells his mother that his home is now a "dream home" and he will never want to leave it any more.

WALLINGFORD'S WALLET (June 21).—Mr. Wallingford, a millionaire, drops his wallet in the park. It is picked up by Nifty, a crook. Wallingford turns in time to see the crook picking it up and, with a policeman, chases Nifty, who, to throw off suspicion, casts the wallet into the grass and smokes a cigarette as the policeman comes up. He is searched and then ordered away. A little girl, Rosa, penniless and hungry, sits on the grass to fix her shoe and finds the wallet. As she is looking through it, Breezy, a crook, who had that day decided to turn honest—comes up and grabs it from her. That night, at their meeting place, Breezy announces to the crooks that he is going West to be an honest man and displays the wallet. Nifty, coming in, sees it and claims it as his own. Breezy laughs and goes out, taking the wallet with him. Nifty writes a note to the police giving them Breezy's address. Breezy returns home, shows wife the wallet, and they start to pack. Before long the officers are at the door. In desperation, Nell flings the wallet in a covered dish of chicken that reposes upon the fire escape. This dish is watched by the little girl upstairs, Rosa's sister, who has had nothing to eat all day. Seeing the shutters close, she grabs the dish and climbs up again into her room. The police search Breezy's place and finally open the shutter to look on the fire escape. To Nell's joy—the dish is gone. The police leave satisfied and the pair lose no time getting out of town.

Rosa returns disheartened, to find Anna devouring cold chicken—and the wallet on the floor beside her. Rosa asks where she got it and the child tells her. Rosa, taking the wallet, goes downstairs to return it and finds the apartment empty. Wallingford, who has received word from the police, meets the two girls with his wallet in the hall. A few questions convince him of their honesty, and seeing their terrible poverty, he makes arrangements to send them to the country where they have plenty to eat and decent clothes to wear.

RAMO

THE CALL OF THE ROAD (June 18).—The morality of Socrates is evident here. One day when Old Bill was away drinking at the village saloon, an official from the Children's Aid Society entered Bill's wretched home with an order from the Court to take his two motherless children to the poorhouse. The kiddies escaped from the officious official, and, like the Babes in the Woods, wandered away.

Towards night, when they had travelled far, far away from the village lights, they grew tired and hungry and could go no further; and as the night came on, they became frightened and cried. 'Way down in Tramp Hollow, three knights of the road heard their sobs. Virtue in the opinion of these knights consisted in renouncing all the conveniences and comforts of life. They clothed themselves in rags, disdained to live in a house and ate nothing but what was coarse, and wandered about the country with a stick and knapsack. These fellows decried all the arts as either useless or dangerous. Science was altogether fruitless and unnecessary; for these virtuous knights had attained the perfection of their nature.

Now, these philosophic tramps heard the kiddies crying up there in the dark woods and brought them back to their camp. They set out to look for a place for them to sleep. They discovered an old barn and placed the tired children there, and it wasn't long before the children fell fast asleep. In the morning Farmer Brown and his wife discovered the children there and having no children of their own adopted them for life. A few months later, Farmer Brown moved and old Bill, unable to find his children, joined the tramps. One night, unknowingly, they entered Farmer Brown's new home. Pauline heard them and dropped from the bedroom window to the ground right into the arms of one friend tramp. She recognizes him and appeals to him for help. He called the others off. Old Bill escaped before the children saw him and finding them happy harkens to the Call of the Road and passes out of their lives forever.

REX

THE BURDEN BEARER (June 26).—The Burden Bearer, Lois, a young bride, enters into matrimony with a full realization of the serious step she is taking and with the highest ideals of husband's and wife's duties to one another. Her husband, a gay, young clubman, thinks little of his obligations to his wife and enters into marriage in the same reckless, care-free manner in which he has formerly lived.

Upon the first evening of their honeymoon the young bride has her first burden, when at dinner her gay husband insists upon drinking glass after glass of liquor in spite of her remonstrances. She is horrified and ashamed when they rise to leave the table to discover that he is intoxicated. Bravely she attempts to hide his condition from others in the room and in the hotel and spends a sleepless night of grief while he slumbers in a drunken stupor upon the couch.

The following morning he is repentant when he sees Lois' suffering and promises never to drink again.

His old companions of the office and club, however, soon persuade him to return to the old habits and he laughs at his wife's scruples when she attempts to warn him of the danger ahead.

A young neighbor, Ramona, received a letter of introduction to Lois and, finding that her husband is already a friend of the bridegroom, suggests that the two couples go to a fashionable restaurant for a good time. Here all drink but the bride, who vainly attempts to induce her husband to refrain. Dancing begins and when the bride declines to dance she is left alone at the table and classed by Ramona and the merrymakers as a "killjoy." A half-drunken man comes to accept Lois as a partner, but she gazes stonily ahead, heartbroken at her husband's conduct.

The bridegroom having become intoxicated during the night's revels, the bride is forced the next morning, in order to save her husband from disgrace, to tell his employer that he is ill. Again he promises to reform, but now she has little hope that he will do so. The arrival of unpaid bills makes her burden greater, for she fears not only for the present but for the future.

The husband, in penitence, brings his wife flowers as a peace offering, but the unpaid florist bill takes away the pleasure of the gift and Lois' unenthusiastic manner makes the husband angry. Ramona, chancing to call and see the wife's unresponsive manner toward her husband, writes her friend that Lois is incomprehensible and most unappreciative of her husband's kindness.

Lois now realizes what her burden will be and starts a music class to help pay the bills. The husband protests and makes a great show before his friends of the uselessness of his wife's work. Ramona, like others of her class, having no serious thought in life and reckoning little of the consequences of her gay life, is thoroughly disgusted at the bride's persistence in going against her husband's wishes, when, as she thinks, he is so willing to make everything pleasant for her. Her last letter to her friend reads:

"Such a woman would drive a man to drink."

FRONTIER

THE SQUAW-MAN'S REWARD (June 26).—Edwin Wright, an artist, falls in love with his uncle's ward, Agnes Worth. Their affair progresses and he becomes engaged to her. He is desirous of obtaining Western atmosphere in his paintings, and to that end makes a trip to the far West. He paints several pictures at different spots, most of them near the residence of a band of Indians.

One day as he is painting he is struck with the beauty of an Indian maiden whom he sees filling her olla at the water-hole. He gets her to pose for him and a month later has completed a canvas which he feels he will never equal. The picture is a full length panel of the Indian maiden Waneta holding her olla. He sends this east to Agnes, deeming her worthy of his best work as well as of everything else he has that is best.

Not long after he has sent the portrait East he receives a newspaper clipping telling him of Agnes' engagement to a boyhood rival. He is heartbroken. In the revulsion of feeling, the emotional reaction which follows this news, he determines to take Waneta as a wife. He buys her from her father and the two are married after a quaint Indian ceremony. For a time they are happy, but Edwin feels the call of his own kind sometimes, and a letter from his uncle crystallizes this feeling into a determination to return to his Eastern home and to Agnes. The letter gives him news which forces him to the conclusion that the newspaper story was a false one, and he reverts to his original love of Agnes, or so he thinks.

He goes back East, and there he is again much with Agnes. She has admired the painting a great deal and when he comes admires it more in his hearing. Every word, of course, is a reminder of the poor little Indian girl whom he has deserted. His uncle has promised him $100,000 on the day he marries Agnes and is doing everything possible to push the matter along. Edwin is torn by doubts, however, and feels that things cannot return to their old basis between himself and Agnes until he has told her of his affair with the Indian girl. Silas Marler, the uncle, counsels strongly against this. His hard, mercenary old soul causes him to tell Edwin to marry Agnes and say nothing of the Indian girl. Both he and Edwin are sure she will never cause trouble, but Edwin is made of finer stuff than his relative and finally confesses to Agnes both his love and his sin.

Agnes is horrorstricken but, despite the revelation, continues to love him as much as ever. Her love is indeed so great that she is unselfish in it, and urges Edwin to return to the Indian girl, to whom he owes a duty. She tells him to go. Obedient to her, and in a transport of renunciation, he goes.

Once back at the Indian village he finds Waneta and, with her, his reward, a baby son. Thus, out of his sorrow and grief, the obedience to his duty brings him his reward, and poor Agnes is left to bear the sorrow that is woman's portion all too frequently.

VICTOR

BROTHER AND SISTER (June 27).—Gertrude, an Italian girl, has a brother, Jack. He is employed in a stone quarry, and she is a nurse in the family of the owner of the quarry, Jim.

There is a strike agitation among the workmen at the quarry. A leader among the agitators makes love to Gertrude against her will. Jim sees this and, not realizing Gertrude's unwillingness, discharges her. He also discharges the threatening workmen.

Jim has a sum of money at his quarry office and, fearing to leave it there, he takes it home. A workman sees this and notifies the leader. They telephone Jim, luring him from home with the false report that trouble is expected at the quarry. Jim leaves his house unprotected.

Jack, Gertrude's brother, overhears this plan and runs to her with the news. Gertrude sends Jack for Jim and goes herself to his home. She and Jim's wife and child are besieged by the robbers, who break down the doors.

The dining room door is barricaded with a sideboard, and Gertrude leads the wife and child to a bedroom. The robbers break through the dining room and pursue the women through a hall and to the bedroom door, which is barricaded with furniture.

Meanwhile Jack has notified Jim at his office and he is on his way home with a rescuing party. They arrive just as the last defense gives way. The robbers are overcome, and Gertrude's bravery receives the recognition that it deserves.

NESTOR

PARTNERS (June 25).—Tom Devery, a prospector, unexpectedly meets Jack Carson, whom he knew in the East. Jack had the gold fever and believed he could strike it rich in the Western gold fields. Tom invites Jack to share his cabin. A few weeks later they strike a rich vein of gold ore and decide to form a partnership. Jack sends for his wife and they settle down to dig out their fortune.

All goes well for a time, until Devery falls in love with Jack's wife and, during his absence, Tom makes advances to her, which are repulsed. This angers him and, knowing where Jack's partnership paper is secreted, gets and destroys it. Mary tries to prevent this, but is unsuccessful. Jack arrives in time to prevent further insult to his wife.

Jack and his wife are driven out of their cabin and seek the aid of the sheriff, who was a witness to the partnership agreement. He agrees to assist them, but on their arrival at the cabin find the cabin almost destroyed by an explosion. Devery had had a quarrel with a newly-engaged miner. Shots were exchanged—one of them hit a can of dynamite which fatally injured both men and blew up the cabin. Devery lives long enough to ask Jack's forgiveness and gives him all right to the mine.

OUT OF THE PAST (June 24).—Rose Vale is a poor country girl. She lives with her brother Tom. Brown, an artist from the city, in moderate circumstances, is visiting the country and meets Rose. He induces her to pose for him. Later Rose's brother Tom is arrested for moonshining and is sentenced to a term in prison. Rose, desolate, visits the city seeking employment. There she again meets Brown and poses for him some more. Their friendship ripens into love and later they are married. Their happiness is blessed by the birth of a baby girl and Brown is immensely happy with his beautiful wife and child. Some time later Rose received a letter from her brother, whose term in prison had just ended, asking her to meet him. This she does, and Brown, seeing her, follows her. There he sees her embracing Tom and, suspecting other things, he cruelly and without giving her a chance for explanations, deserts her and the baby. Time passes and Rose and the child make their home with Tom. The child, Violet, has now developed into a beautiful young woman and seeks employment to help support her old and weak mother, Rose. Brown, meantime, has grown prosperous and, under the name of Markham, owns one of the best studios in the city. There ultra-fashionable men and women of questionable character were wont to congregate, and one of these women who knew Violet induced her to agree to pose for Markham. This Violet does, and immediately Belmont, a companion of Markham, looks upon her as his prey. Markham gives a dinner to his many friends in honor of Violet, and there is much arousing. Violet's friend, ashamed for having brought Violet into such company, and seeing that the men are bent on accomplishing her ruin, tells Vio-

He realizes that it was his own daughter whom he was about to inveigle into wrong and regrets his actions. He follows Rose and Violet home and there, on seeing their sorrowful plight, he realizes his sad mistake and proceeds to make amends for the many wrongs he had done.

RUSTIC HEARTS (June 23).—Dan Breen, the doctor of the little village of Oak Town, tiring of his humdrum existence, bids farewell to his cousins, the Owens, on his departure for the city. He meets with success and, while engaged in hospital practice becomes infatuated with Silvia Bates, a pretty nurse. Influenced by wild companions, a mock marriage ceremony is performed. The little nurse believes she is Breen's wife, until unexpectedly entering the room where Breen is recounting the affair to a party, the terrible truth is revealed to her. Denouncing him, she spurns the money offered and frantic in her grief decided to go as far away from the scene of her sorrow as possible. Pawning her rings, she uses the money to buy a ticket to a point as far as possible, which strangely enough ends her journey at the little village which was formerly Breen's home. Wandering through the countryside, she asks for a drink of water at the home of the Owens. They pity the evident distress of the girl and finally engage her as a servant in their household. As time goes by Ned Owens falls in love with Silvia and asks her to become his wife. The old pain which the balm of her sweet surroundings has quieted comes back as Silvia tells Ned she can never be his wife. One day Breen decides to take a vacation and visit the home of his country cousins. For his reception a dance is given. He arrives and is warmly greeted by his friends. He then comes face to face with the woman he has wronged. Afraid of an exposure, he terrifies Silvia into leaving her new home. Mounting his horse, he goes to make sure of her departure, when his steed becomes frightened and bolts. Breen is fatally hurt. Silvia who has witnessed the accident from a nearby road is with him in time to grant him her forgiveness. Ned's true love at last finds its reward, and the clouds pass out of Silvia's life forever.

KINEMACOLOR

MAN'S BEST FRIEND.—Here are some valuable prize dogs, rightly described as man's best friends; a title, however, that probably the horse would be inclined to dispute with him.

The little Yorkshire terrier, whose value is in inverse ratio to his weight. He makes a large noise for his small size. The Berkshire terrier would be a more appropriate name.

The large St. Bernard perhaps deserves our title of Friend of Man more than any other dog, since he has earned his reputation for philanthropy by his prowess in saving human life in the snows of the Alps; for which purpose it is trained by the Monks of St. Bernard.

A very fine specimen of a prize Collie. This golden coat and white ruff are marks of great beauty. The instinct of the Collie in retrieving sheep almost amounts to reason. His reputation for treachery is nothing less than a distinct libel.

The Yiourouk is a famous sporting dog bred by the peasants of Smyrna, and used in hunting the wild boar—the same dogs as we saw just now in a previous series. They are born hunters and will pursue any quarry.

Here are five little toy terriers, at present on their best behavior. Meal time is approaching, and they know that if they are not good they will get no breakfast. On your right is a little Pekingese—a typical Chinaman. He is very greedy. When his own breakfast has disappeared he likes to annex that of his neighbor. They are now waiting for the breakfast bell. There it is—did you see them prick their ears up? Wonderful instinct. Now, don't be greedy—wait for the word—trust—(saucer). Paid for! (Centre dog moves head down slightly). Going, going, gone! Thanks to this Chinaman, No. 2 doesn't get much of a look-in. This is what he calls the "Yellow Peril." Oliver Twist asking for more. Licking his lips in anticipation of another saucer—his mouth, too, is all of a twist with excitement. This little Pekingese is an artful little beggar. The Pekingese terrier is one of those supercilious little animals who turn up their noses at everything. They have become permanently turned.

PARSON JIM'S BABY (2 Reels).—When Parson Jim invaded Hoot Owl, Ariz., he found the saloon and dance hall the principal industries. Starting a revival in the latter place, he rouses a spark of religion lying dormant it the breast of Molly Brandon, wife of the "bad man" of the camp. When he is driven out and Molly follows him like a dutiful wife, she leaves her little daughter in the care of the one good man in that part of the West—Parson Jim.

With this little "brand from the burning" the Parson starts proselyting until finally, after fifteen years, he has driven out his bitterest rival, the rum-seller, and converted the dance hall into a church. There the whole reclaimed community of Hoot Owl gathers for worship—not noting the worn and weary woman who slips into a rear pew.

But after benediction, while Parson Jim is bidding "good night" to his happy parishioners, the organ in the supposedly empty church begins playing "Lead, Kindly Light." Recalling that only one person in camp knew that hymn when he started his revival fifteen years before, Parson Jim returns to find that his "lost sheep has returned to the fold."

Judge of the rejoicing when the long-lost mother clasps "Parson Jim's Baby" in her arms, and the concluding picture shows her final resting place in the "God's Acre" which has replaced the "Bad Man's burying ground."

BEAU CRUMMEL AND HIS BRIDE (June 11).—Kitty Perkins, a very young country lassie, fearing her father will not allow her to marry Beau Crummel, the village dude, elopes with him to town, where they are married by a Justice of the Peace. Kitty's father follows them with the intention of giving them his blessing. The young couple, however, not knowing the old gentleman's intentions, dodge him at every turn, finally seeking shelter in a hotel where the groom registers himself and wife under an assumed name in order to throw father off the scent.

Their room being assigned to them, Kitty goes out to do a little shopping while Beau goes in another direction to transact some business. On Kitty's return to the hotel, she finds she does not know where her room is, having forgotten the number, and not knowing the assumed name on the register and the clerk on duty not being the same, her embarrassment in trying to explain her predicament is obvious. The comedy begins to wax fast and furious when we see Kitty, in an agitated state of mind, wandering about the halls making frantic endeavors to locate her room. She tries first one and then another, but each proves to be the wrong room.

The disturbed guests, resenting this intrusion, are wrought up to a state of great excitement. The situation, however, is relieved when the young husband arrives upon the scene and takes his bride into the right room under his protecting wing.

The climax is reached when Kitty's father appears. They slam the door in his face and climb down the fire escape only to be arrested for sneak thieves at the bottom of the ladder and taken into the office of the hotel. There they nearly collapse when they are confronted by Kitty's father who, to their surprise, is not at all displeased but, on the contrary, gives them his blessing. Beau and Kitty look very foolish and are thoroughly disgusted with themselves for all their manufactured trouble.

APPLES OF SODOM (June 14).—(Definition—An apple said by the ancients to grow near the Dead Sea and to be beautiful outwardly but when plucked to turn to ashes; hence, anything deceptive and disappointing.)

George Lawrence and his mother live in a nearby town in a modest sort of way, George earning money by writing. His chum, Philip Crane, comes down on week-ends to call and it is on one of these trips our story starts.

Unknown to his mother, George has written a play, "The Apples of Sodom," and on this occasion when Crane comes to visit, he reads the play and Crane, more than pleased with it, promises to take it to the city and try to sell it to a manager.

Poor George is ailing with a severe cough which causes his mother many an unhappy moment of worry. On the day Crane returns to the city, George is overcome and dies, trying with his last breath to tell his mother of the play.

Crane returns to the city, reads the play, sees its worth and just as he plans what to do, receives a message of George's death. Sending a wire of condolence, he returns to the play. Why not claim it and change the author's name? This he does.

The play turns out to be a big hit, and royalties flow into Crane's pocket. We see Crane in the box at the opening made to say a few words, and in his home receiving the checks from his manager. Guilty at heart, he tries to ease his conscience by sending a check to Mrs. Lawrence, not speaking of the play.

More than surprised at receiving a letter and the check from Crane, Mrs. Lawrence decides she must go at once and return it. She arrives in the city the night Crane is giving a dinner party. She goes to his home, but finding him out, makes up her mind to go and see him at the dinner. Just as the dinner is at its height, Mrs. Lawrence's card is handed to Crane. He can hold out no longer. He must tell all the truth.

Meeting her in the hall, he begs her, as she is trying to speak of the check, to come to the dinner. For his sake she goes, and he confesses. The guests slowly go, and Mrs. Lawrence forgives as only mothers can.

ESSANAY

THE RANCH FEUD (June 14).—Desperate tactics are usually used during a feud. Broncho Billy's father, determined to soothe his passion with revenge, starts out after John Mackley. Broncho Billy persuades his father to keep cool. Mackley, however, gets his revenge by shooting his daughter's sweetheart, Broncho Billy. On his knees Broncho Billy crawls to his home where his father takes him in, and sends for a doctor. The doctor informs the father that the only thing that will save his son is a reconciliation. Mackley is finally persuaded to allow his daughter to see Broncho Billy. Broncho Billy recognizes her. Both fathers agree to end the feud.

MRS. HILTON'S JEWELS (June 18).—Frederick Hilton, a stock broker, is on the verge of failure, but he keeps his sad secret to himself, but his wife, a lover of all the gleam and glitter of life, further imperils him by her extravagance. She has a gorgeous set of jewels she desires to have expensively reset. He asks her to defer this for the present. She is perverse and impetuous and does not understand such delay. He leaves the door of the private vault in their palatial residence open. She has just taken out the jewels and steps back into the vault to escape him, when he returns and closes the door with a bang, unwittingly imprisoning her. During the day the

When he comes home, elated with the good news, he cannot find his wife, and at once jumps to the conclusion that the hutler has made away with her in order to get the jewels. As they are struggling at the door of the vault, he hears a faint tapping on the inside. During the rush of the day he has lost his memorandum of the vault combination. Spurred hy desperation, he secures the aid of two safe-hlowers, who finally open the iron room and the imprisoned woman is released, hringing new hope and happiness to his arms.

PATHE FRERES

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 25 (June 16).

A TOUR THROUGH TOURAINE (June 17).—This film is a personally conducted tour through beautiful Touraine, France, showing the various examples of architectural splendor which were huilt by the various kings of France, from the fifteenth century to the revolution. It shows the chateau of Villesavin, the chateau of Cheverny, the Court of Honor which is adorned with a very pretty Italian fountain, the chateau of Chaumont (lying in the beautiful valley of the Loire River), and many others which make the film interesting, of great educational value and pleasing to the eye.

On the same reel:

RHODES (ASIATIC TURKEY).—The little city of Rhodes, the capital of the island of Rhodes, where the French inhahitants live among the landmarks and now ruined reminders of former Turkish magnificence.

THE SACRIFICE (June 18).—Jane Hunter, the wife of Cleveland Hunter, the noted illustrator, could not hear to see her husband spending so much time with his art, and consequently went home, with her child, to her mother. Hunter, who was not in the best of health, soon found that he was a victim of the white plague and that it would be necessary for him to go to a sanitarium. There the physicians decided that blood transfusion was necessary to save his life and they sought someone who could make the sacrifice. When Jane learned of her husband's predicament she promptly volunteered. The operation was a success and Hunter showed signs of marked improvement, but the haby was left alone with his father, hecause Jane died.

THE OUTLAW'S LOVE (June 19).—"Dare-devil" Larpin, a notorious outlaw, wins the heart of Lillian Conklin. Her hrother Joe objects strongly to the alliance and, through his efforts, Larpin is kept out of the vicinity. The outlaw writes to Lillian suggesting that since her parents have willed her and Joe an equal interest in the cattle she could cut out her share, sell it and start housekeeping on the money. Lillian is delighted with the idea. The cowhoys discover someone rustling the cattle and inform Joe Conklin. Joe, not knowing the rustler is his sister, fires on her. She flees with Joe and another cowboy in pursuit. At a sharp turn Lillian is thrown from her horse and mortally injured. Her dying request is to see Larpin and, although he knows that the authorities are after him, he heeds her call, reaching the hedside just in time to bid her an affectionate farewell, and as Lillian passes away the outlaw willingly submits to arrest at the hands of the waiting sheriff.

THE BURIAL OF A RICH CHINAMAN (June 20).—For the very many people who have never witnessed the burial of a Chinaman this film will prove a remarkahly interesting entertainment. The deceased in this case happened to have been very wealthy and, as a result, no expense is spared to make a stupendous showing. The hody is carried at the head of a procession followed hy gloriously colored banners on which are inscribed the dead man's many virtues. The edibles and objects that he loved are buried with him and his family pay their farewell respects.

On the same reel:

ANTIBES (FRANCE) AND ITS ENVIRONS.—The views of the old town at which Napoleon disemharked on his return from Elha in 1815. It is from this city that one may secure an idea of the heauties of the sunsets on the Mediterranean.

On the same reel:

MONUMENTS AND CASCADES OF ROME.—A visit to the beautiful monuments and waterfalls of the capital of Italy.

THE JURY'S VERDICT (June 21).—Henry Wilson, a celebrated lawyer, whose son has left home and secretly married the girl of his choice, is called upon to defend a girl charged with murdering her hushand. After he has undertaken the case he learns that it is his own son whom the girl is accused of killing. He believes her innocent and makes an impassioned speech to the twelve men who are to decide and then, exhausted from the strain, awaits hreathlessly the jury's verdict. Suspense is the keynote of this film and to all exhibitors who realize the popularity of a really dramatic production, this release offers an opportunity to book the kind of film that their patrons enjoy.

GREAT NORTHERN

AN UNWELCOME WEDDING GIFT (June 14).—Mr. Strieholt is a stout old party who has accumulated a fortune in the motion picture husiness and he is the proud father of a heautiful daughter for whom he has great hopes in the matrimonial market. Agathe, the young woman in question, is in love with Jack Wormold, a young actor who has made a distinct hit as a film actor and who returns the affection of Striebolt's daughter. All goes well until Count von Swindlestone appears upon the scene and, learning that Strieholt has accumulated a fortune, decides to win the hand of the daughter. The Count is impecunious, like many others of his fellow nohlemen, hut he puts up a bold front and proposes for the hand of Agathe. The latter detests him, but the will of her father prevails and she unwillingly consents to become the wife of the adventurer. Jack is furious, hut that avails little with Striebolt, who has his mind set upon having his daughter shine in society as a full-fledged countess. The Count is all attention and when he places an engagement ring upon the finger of the hride-to-be his happiness seems to be supreme. But the Count is not all that he appears to be on the surface and Jack decides to play the part of an amateur detective. He urges Agathe to play her part, and in the course of time Jack finds an opportunity to catch the nobleman in a trap. The latter boards a train with a music hall actress, and Jack, disguised with whiskers and carrying a motion picture camera, is on hand to make a picture of the departure. He even accompanies them on the train to their destination and makes a series of excellent pictures. On one eventful evening, some time later, the Count, Strieholt and Agathe are seated in the old gentleman's picture theatre when, to the surprise of the little group, the screen is adorned by the picture of the Count and the strange lady. The finale may easily be imagined.

PILOT

A CHILD OF THE HILLS (June 19).—Barton Grey, a young composer, is ill from overwork and worry through the failure of his efforts to meet with the approval of the publishers. His physician orders him away for a rest cure, and he goes to the Blue Ridge Mountains. There his recuperation is fast and he decides to work on his "Song of the Soul." Barton takes his violin and goes to the mountain top where, in the solitude, he endeavors to woo the muse. Attracted by a voice plaintively singing, he seeks its source and comes upon Pam, a wild rose of the hills. Their friendship ripens into love, and she becomes the inspiration for his work. They are married at the little mountain church and Barton takes her hack with him to the city.

In time Barton becomes famous and is hailed as the man of the hour in musical circles. At a reception given in his honor Pam sees him "lionized" by his feminine admirers and herself neglected. His hostess intentionally places him in a compromising position with herself. This Pam witnesses and, heartbroken, she leaves the reception. She returns to her mountains, leaving a little note of farewell to Barton, which reveals to him his unintentional neglect of her.

There on Thunder Gap he seeks her, and finds her as he did at first, on the mountain top, again the child of nature, pouring forth her soul in song to the winds.

CINES—GEORGE KLEINE

THE RIVAL ENGINEERS (Two Reels) (June 16).—Jean Caletti and Pierre Brazon are engineers in the employ of the same railway company. Jean, a favorite among the workmen, has incited the jealousy of Pierre, who, aided by his own surly disposition, seeks to injure him.

One day an opportunity presents itself to Pierre. While Jean is beneath his engine inspecting it, Pierre purposely bumps his engine into Jean's, causing serious injuries to him. Jean is carried to a nearby hospital where his recuperation afterwards takes place. Pierre, in attempting to make his escape, is arrested and, while pacing his cell, swears that he will yet avenge himself.

Jean is hack on his old engine. Pierre, having been released from prison, finds another opportunity to satisfy his heinous purpose and, mounting to the cab of Jean's engine, he almost completely severs the brakes so that they will give way to the least pressure. When approaching a gang of laborers Jean finds it necessary to use the brakes, but they do not respond to his efforts and several of the gang are killed. When the engine is brought to a standstill Jean is found in a state of collapse, the horror of his experience having driven him mad. The engine is examined and the defective brakes are discovered, thus betraying the cause of the accident.

When Pierre sees what his nefarious scheme has brought about, he at first rejoices, but the death of the two workmen comes as a shock to him and, conscience-stricken, he ends his own life by jumping in front of an approaching train.

Meanwhile, Jean is placed in an asylum. Medical aid fails, and as a last resort his favorite child is brought to him with a hope that the power of love will restore his sanity to him. The plan works splendidly, and his mind fully comes back to its normal state. Upon Pierre's person is found a full confession of his guilt, which completely restores Jean to his employer's confidence.

URBAN-ECLIPSE—GEORGE KLEINE

BEHIND A MASK (June 11).—Jack North, a young artist, while touring South America, meets with a queer experience while out sketching. An apparition appears to him of a beautiful young girl in a reclining position, and he is about to sketch her when a man emerges and draws her away. He is Don Ramon Valdez, her guardian and tutor, who afterwards reproaches the Indian servant for allowing Lola to leave the villa. Jack having become curious, returns the next day and he and Lola are about to engage in a conversation when Valdez again appears and removing Lola's veil, shows Jack a horrible face, disfigured with black marks.

Disappointed the artist goes back to his hotel and soon afterwards receives a mysterious letter, asking him to save a woman from distraction by being present at the Governor's Ball. Attracted by the mystery of the adventure, Jack accepts the invitation and disguised under a domino meets Lola, who to his surprise is now a beautiful woman. In fact, to avenge herself for her master's brutal treatments, the Indian girl who had disfigured Lola on Don Ramon's orders years before, had used artifices only known to her to restore the girl's beauty.

Valdez infuriated at not finding Lola at home rushes to the ball, but in the meantime Jack has wrapped himself in Lola's domino, and when the tutor arrives he mistakes the painter for his pupil and drags him home. There the tables are turned. Valdez asks the supposed Lola to sign a schedule bequeathing all of her fortune to him and Jack signs the paper. Seeing the young man's name, Valdez unmasks him, but Jack draws a revolver and keeps the scoundrel at bay until Lola and friends of the artist arrive and overpower Valdez. Thus saved by Jack's courage, Lola warmly thanks him with a kiss.

SOLAX

THE MERRY WIDOW (June 25).—A young and charming widow is courted by two young men, neither of whom can she decide she loves best. She is, however, a great lover of athletics and decides to take the strongest and the most strenuous and devises a test of their forces. She invites them both to accompany her to a friend's house in the country, and both accept with alacrity. Before the journey she fills her grip with all the old iron, keys, door knobs, hammers, and such like tools that she can find, and when ready with her two friends to leave goes to take her grip, but both young men immediately rush forward and fight for the honor. The one who succeeds, however, finds that he has more honor than joy in the undertaking, but they are compelled both to take turns so that neither has cause for jealousy. Arrived at the railroad station, the bottom falls out of the grip and its contents fall on the ground before two policemen on the lookout for a gang of burglars. They think surely they have captured the bunch and arrest them. The sergeant takes up the grip and placing it on his shoulder, lightly carries it off, showing that he is a "strong man." The young widow immediately feels great sympathy for the sergeant, and on the road to the station, the sergeant and the widow become great friends. Arrived at the station, the captain is also found to be very athletic and handles the grip even more lightly then the sergeant, succeeding thereby in winning, to the discomfiture of the three other admirers.

On the same reel.

THE DYNAMITED DOG.—Mrs. Hawkins' husband is much worried by their neighbor's dog, Grip, and his wife decides to put an end to his worry and at the same time an end to the dog. She buys a stick of dynamite and ties it to the dog's neck, hoping in this way to send Grip to Heaven. Grip, however, suddenly becomes very much attached to Mrs. Hawkins and when she goes to leave him, he cannot bear the separation and is quite annoying to Mrs. Hawkins, who, in her efforts to place a reasonable amount of space between herself and Grip and also the dynamite, goes through many exciting adventures: she almost drowns swimming across a river and only arrives safely on the other side by the help of Grip himself, minus the dynamite which he has lost in the chase.

THE MESSAGE TO HEAVEN (June 27).—Mr. King treats his wife and baby very poorly, but Mrs. King makes the best of things until the handsome Mr. Johnson arrives and falls in love with her. She then finds that she cannot resist the temptation of all the fine things he offers her, and she goes away with him. This act makes Mr. King realize what he has done and he reforms. He cannot, however, overcome his hard feelings towards his wife.

As his child grows older, she constantly asks for her mother and the father always tells her that she is in Heaven. One day a neighbor dies and little Emily puts a note in the dead person's hand, asking God to please send her mother back. On her way home she is run over by an automobile and is taken to the hospital. It so happens that her mother was in the automobile that ran over Emily and in this way a reconciliation is brought about between the mother and father. But little Emily insists that God answered her note and sent her mother back home.

FEATURE FILM PURCHASES DOING WELL WITH ITALA SUBJECTS

Feature film purchases during the week include that of C. Lalumiere of Montreal, who will rent Itala's "The Shadow of Evil" in Canada. Arthur Wirtenberg of Schenectady, who is showing "The Great Aerial Disaster" in New York State, is negotiating for "The Shadow of Evil." The Attractive Feature Film Exchange of Philadelphia has begun well with "The Dread of Doom" and has also obtained many bookings on "The Fatal Grotto." The Monarch Feature Film Company of Kansas City, Mo., will show "The Dread of Doom" in their territory. E. T. Peter of Dallas, Texas, has purchased another print of "The Great Aerial Disaster." A. Bradley of Chicago has purchased rights on "The Great Aerial Disaster" for Wisconsin and nearby states. Sol Lesser, of the Golden Gate Film Exchange, while in New York renewed his standing order with Itala for all of their features. W. B. Schram of Detroit, Mich., encouraged by his success with "The Palace of Flames," has purchased rights for Michigan on "The Great Aerial Disaster." L. R. Frank, one time with the Gaumont Company, now with the Sedeg Feature Film Company, is negotiating for the purchase of "Tigris" rights in Minnesota, North and South Dakota.

THE RELIANCE TO STAR ROSEMARY THEBY

Manager J. V. Ritchey of the Reliance has selected "The Tangled Web" as the drama in which to introduce Rosemary Theby as a new attraction in Reliance films. "The Tangled Web" is the work of Garfield Thompson and was one of several strong dramatic stories written expressly for this talented actress. It is in three reels and will be staged by Oscar C. Apfel.

Miss Theby will be starred in the production, playing the part of an adventuress, a strong emotional role, somewhat similar to several of the characters created by her for the Vitagraph Company.

After a much-needed vacation, part of which was spent in St. Louis, Miss Theby started work under J. V. Ritchey's management on June 1st, and will be seen in at least one release every two weeks beginning at an early date.

AN EXCLUSIVE COLORED THEATRE

Wandering through the city the other night, I landed at One Hundred and Thirty-fifth street and wended my way into the Crescent Theatre, which is an exclusive house for our colored friends. I was delighted with the way in which it was conducted and at the decorum exhibited by these ladies and gentlemen, but more especially was I struck with the program presented by Ed. Winn and his Sunny South Company, who carried out the following program with great justice to themselves:

"MINSTREL DAYS"

Tambo ..... Wilbur Dixon
Interlocutor ..... Ed. Winn
Tambo ..... Henry Gant

INTRODUCTORY OVERTURE

Especially arranged and produced by Ed. Winn, introducing the entire company in a medley of plantation songs and popular melodies.

NOTES FROM THE MAN AT THE WHEEL STUDIO

Herbert Barrington, of the Pilot Company, has been entertaining for the past week at his country home "Woodcourt," Tarrytown-on-Hudson, Miss Mary A. Willis, his cousin from London, and a party of English globe girdlers, who are just completing a tour of the world. During his spare moments Barrington has been showing his guests the sights of the Metropolis. On Wednesday they visited the Pilot studio and were delighted and astonished at the extraordinary care and detail necessary to make a moving picture. They vowed it was the most novel experience of their trip; having seen many wonderful things in this country; being entertained by a Maori princess in New Zealand and a guest at the Mikado's garden party in Japan. They sailed for England last Saturday on the Carmania, and Barrington is going to take the rest-cure to make up for the strenuous time he has had.

Miss Lillie Barrington, of the Pilot Company, who sailed for a four months' tour of Europe, is returning to America on the 17th of June on account of the sudden death on June 6th of her traveling companion, Mrs. M. A. Wright, of 12 West Seventy-first street, New York City, in Berlin, Germany.

J. W. Hartman, who has been playing in an all-star cast at the Lyric Theatre in "Arizona," is back again with the Pilot Compny. Mr. Hartman was with the Pilot Company prior to the time he played at the Lyric.

The Pilot Company has completed its outdoor stage, and already taken one picture on it. The stage was finished last Tuesday, and Director Vale and his troupe were at work turning out a comedy drama the next day. A pinochle game progressing with much gesticulating was conspicuous in a far corner of the plot.

E. J. Martin, scenic artist of the Pilot Company, is now prepared for Summer sport. He has just bought at 22-foot 5-hp. motorboat. Some class, eh?

CAESAR ROMANO IN "THE FATAL GROTTO"

Cæsar Romano, whose clever work in "Tigris," the Itala big feature of the same name, which is breaking house records from coast to coast, is again seen in the forthcoming Itala feature, "The Fatal Grotto," this time in the role of a gentleman smuggler. Spectators find peculiar fascination in Romano and his work, which is attention-holding. As one critic is quoted: "He first makes one hate, then admire him. While he has a face of a devil, he is handsome, and his sardonic smile cannot obliterate his winning ways of deviltry."

In "The Fatal Grotto," when he sets out to win the "girl," the spectators unconsciously hope to see him succeed, so great is their admiration of his daring originality. But, of course, it would never do to have the villain win "the girl," and accordingly, by a very plausible combination of circumstances, the grotto is destroyed by an explosion and the villain goes the way of the wicked.

SHOWING THE CLEAREST AND BEST PICTURES WE EVER HAD

This is the verdict of both New Star Theatre, Ithaca, N. Y., and Lyceum Theatre, New London, Conn., who have installed Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizers. They both write Mr. Hallberg to that effect and express themselves as being highly pleased with their investment. Mr. Hallberg reports a large sale of Hallberg A. C. Economizers the past week, and also of motion picture machines of all makes, amongst them being a Powers No. 6A with Hallberg 25-cycle A. C. Economizer to Tropical Amusement Co., Colon, Panama; Powers No. 6A with Hallberg Rectifier and full line of supplies to V. A. Warren, Massena, N. Y.

Lyllian Leighton, the jolly, plump, youthful-looking character woman and comedienne of the Chicago branch of the Selig Polyscope Company, played in stock and road companies for thirteen years. Before that she was a newspaper owner and editor; in fact, held for some time the title of America's youngest publisher.

MALTESE FIRM DESIRES TO REPRESENT AMERICAN MOVING PICTURE HOUSE

Trade Opportunity Department of Commerce
Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce

Washington, June 2, 1913.

"Moving Picture News,"
30 West 13th Street,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen: I beg to inclose herewith a copy of a report by the American Consul at Malta, relative to the desire of a firm in that city to represent American manufacturers of moving picture films. It is believed that the information contained in the report will prove of interest to you.

Respectfully,

A. H. BALDWIN,
Chief of Bureau.

Malta, May 5, 1913.

The Honorable,
The Secretary of State,
Washington, D. C.

Sir: I have the honor to report that Mr. S. L. Cassar, a professional photographer in Valletta, Malta, desires to represent an American moving picture house. Mr. Cassar has an apparatus for taking moving pictures.

Many things happen here which would make good films for an American house. There is a large military garrison and Malta is one of the chief naval stations in the world. Reviews before well-known generals, admirals, etc., are frequent. The King of England recently visited Malta and the Eucharistic Congress has just taken place here.

There are also numerous picturesque religious processions and local feasts and many historical and interesting natural objects. Good films can be secured here from time to time.

Correspondence may be in English.

I have the honor to be, Sir,

Your obedient servant,
(Signed) James Oliver Laing,
American Consul.

POWERS STUDIO NOTES

Having finished the three-reel production of "Sleeping Beauty," Director Harry C. Matthews is engaged upon another of the popular Powers kid plays with the original Powers kids, Early and Hattie, in the cast.

"Sleeping Beauty" is certainly a beautiful production and apart from the scenic effects and the many quaint touches given to the story, the acting is away above the average for this class of production. Miss Elsie Albert is charming as Beauty and the little form of Baby Early flits through the play as the Fairy Sunbeam. She is pretty as can be and natural throughout. Director Matthews seems to have claimed the realm of fairy tales for his own.

J. Farrell Macdonald is now engaged upon the production of "Elsie Venner," and special preparations have been made for a fitting presentation of this beautiful story. Mr. Macdonald will make use of the same strong cast which gave such a fine rendering of "Francesca da Rimini" recently. The players include Miss Constance Crawley, the famous English actress, Arthur Maude—also from the other side—Joe Harris, Edith Bostwick, Fred. L. Wilson, Jay Horley, and other clever people. In this series of classical plays the Powers Photo Plays, Inc., are giving the public some artistic and well acted photoplays which must be appreciated.

Tom Evans is fitting up his laboratories at the present time. Development and drying rooms as well as dark rooms and an assembling department are being added to the other equipment, and a projecting room is now being built. With the additions the studios will be thoroughly well equipped.

Elsie Albert has been enjoying herself. She has been adding to her already extensive wardrobe. Her dressing room now has a variety of new, fluffy, musliney (this is as near as men can get) dresses and things, all of which are to be used in the fairy productions which this company will produce from time to time. At the same time Baby Early is not forgotten: there are new filmy things for her, too, and Miss Albert's room looks like a theatrical costumiers right now.

Edith Bostwick, who is Mrs. J. Farrell Macdonald in private life, is one of those actresses who thoroughly love the moving pictures. She likes to act in them and talk them by day and see them at night. Miss Bostwick is a very capable actress and is at home in either dramatic productions or comedy. She had her start in the profession at Eliche's Gardens in Denver, the same as many others. After a few years with prominent companies in stock and special productions Miss Bostwick joined the Imp company in New York; later she played character leads with Pathe in New York, and then joined the Powers company. She was a member of the Universal for one year, and left that concern to join the Powers company.

OPERATORS' CHAT

By Ralph Knaster

In the chat column of a recent issue you read about the road to success. This time you will note that I quote from an article by one of the most prominent writers of the day, it is interesting, as well as food for the brain. After reading this chat, you should at all times remember the good lesson.

There is only one need in the world, the need to love our fellow workman as ourselves; to do exactly as we would be done by. We need to understand that the human race is one body, and that when we do anything which harms or hurts one individual, we harm all individuals, ourselves included.

When we stop and think about the world, the whole process of life becomes very pitiful.

Each, being born upon the earth, is striving for happiness, from the cradle to the grave, in his own way. According to his light, he is doing the best he can. He does not know it, but the only satisfying things which he can get out of life are peace of mind, self-respect and love of his fellow men.

Nothing he can obtain without these things, nothing he can achieve or become, is of any real value. No man can be happy without those three blessings. Any man can be happy with them. Even though he is saddened by the sorrow he sees about him, the sorrows which results from striving after the needless things of earth; after more than we need; after the possessions of others.

There would be no war; no industrial problems; if man will set forth in life on that threefold quest, for peace of mind, for self-respect, for the love of his fellow men.

This is what I call good food for the brain, and it is needed just as the stomach requires good food, and it will surely lead you toward success. All men who follow this example are successful in their undertakings, and are the making of a successful organization, no matter what kind of an organization it may be. The proof of this is the great progress of the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Local No. 1. This organization is trying to assist all fellow men. The members of this union are doing all that can be done to elevate the craft they are in, and to better the condition of every operator.

Last Monday night the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union of Greater New York, Local No. 1, held an open meeting. President Robert Goldhlatt opened the meeting; he referred to the best way for amalgamation on equal basis with Local No. 35 or a charter, giving the members the same rights that every local of the I. A. T. S. E. enjoys.

There were a few members of the new branch of Local No. 35 present, and it was learned that the branch is looking for the same thing that Local No. 1 is seeking. We also learned that the new branch of Local No. 35 are going to send Mr. Richardson to Seattle, as a delegate to the I. A. T. S. E. convention, and to instruct him to ask for a charter or amalgamation. Strange enough that the members of the new branch have started the same cry that the ex-auxiliary had for five years.

Some new branch men say they only want jurisdiction of the picture machine, and that in order to run a spot lamp, it would require a card from both departments.

This is ridiculous, the same trouble would arise. The man holding two cards would run the man with one card out of his job, because he could work both spot lamp and machine, thus depriving a union man with one card from a livelihood. There should be two distinct locals and each local to govern itself, and if a man held two local cards, namely a spot lamp card and a picture machine card, he should be entitled to run either one or the other, but not both. One of the branch men said he saw a lot of new faces. True, there were new faces at that meeting, they went there to make application at the present small entrance fee of $5.00; every one is fully aware of the conditions in New York, and favor the Moving Picture Machine Operators' Union, Local No. 1. There will be one more open meeting, on June 23, 1913, so hurry along with your applications if you want to get in for that small fee, for after that date the initiation fee will be fifty dollars ($50.00).

Applications can be made at the office of the Union daily from 10 A. M. to 5 P. M., at 133 Third Avenue, near 14th Street, N. Y.

NOTICE

There will be a grand spread given by the members of Local No. 1 at the next and last open meeting on June 23, 1913, at Teutonia Hall, No. 66 Essex Street. Refreshments and music to all who honor us with their presence at this meeting. A farewell address will be delivered by President Robert Goldblatt, as this is the last meeting before the I. A. T. S. E. convention. All operators welcome.

R. J. KNASTER, Press Agent.

Brother John R. Pickards has returned from Wilmington, Del., with the dough bag, containing one thousand dollars which was left to him by his grandfather. Brother Pickards said, a mere trifle, just spending money for the moonlight excursion and cabaret dance which will take place August 2, 1913, held by the M. P. M. O. U. of G. N. Y., Local No. 1.

A new theatre on 125th street and Amsterdam avenue will be opened Saturday, June 14, under the same management as the Arch theatre on 3d Avenue and 28th Street, New York. Mr. Chas. Johnston, the manager, has engaged Brother McQueen to operate the picture machines, both Simplex.

Mr. Chas. Johnston was formerly with the United hooking offices, and knows the show business thoroughly.

AN APPEAL FROM ALMOST FIVE HUNDRED MEN

To the Officers and Members of all Locals, I. A. T. S. E.

Dear Sirs and Brothers:

The hour of the convention is near at hand, only regretting that it is a long distance from the Eastern Locals. Of course we do not include ourselves as one of them to the I. A., since the last convention. Nevertheless this Organization is sending a representative to Seattle to appeal to the delegates to give the New York Operators justice and to right the wrong which was done unto us by the executive hoard of the I. A. T. S. E. You are no doubt familiar with the fact that President Chas. C. Shay, at the last convention, said that he would appoint an impartial committee to do the reorganizing of the former Auxiliary to Local No. 35, which would have been the proper way of doing it. But such was not the case after the return of President Shay and his executive board from the last Peoria convention to New York, and instead of his giving us that impartial committee, who were to consist of (as follows) two of New York, two of Brooklyn and two of New Jersey. The above named we did not get. By his failing to live up to his promise to the last convention is responsible for our breaking away from the I. A. T. S. E., not with any intentions of remaining apart from the I. A. We therefore appeal to you to use your utmost means in making it possible for the New York operators to get justice once and for all time. Why should not such a large body of operators as they are in our big city enjoy the same privilege as the other picture locals do in the I. A.? Why should we be subject to Auxiliaries and such as a branch that now exists in New York, which is goverened by Local No. 35? The conditions which were proposed to us by the Executive Board of the I. A. and Local No. 35 last August, were such that no man who craved for justice would abide by.

Brothers, consider this fact that this organization has a membership of almost five hundred and a nice little bank account, and only in existence ten months, and for five years that we were connected with Local No. 35 they claimed at the last convention that we owed them over a hundred dollars; "rather queer, isn't it?" The reason for that is that the former Auxiliary did not have the handling of their own money. And in spite of the fact that we're doing so wonderfully well, our complete happiness is marred by the thought that we are apart from our fellow workingmen of the I. A. T. S. E.

Do give this appeal your careful consideration, and kindly ask your delegate while at the coming convention to bear in mind the pleading of the New York operators.

The writer of this hopes to meet your delegate in Seattle during the convention.

For further information I refer you to the circular letter which I enclose.

Thanking you in advance for whatever little you might do for us.

Give us a direct charter, or make us bona-fide members of Local No.35, or else give us the impartial committee that we were to get at the last convention.

With much success to your organization,

Fraternally yours,

ROBT. GOLDBLATT,
President.

AMERICAN FILM MFG. CO.

Charles O'Connor, E. and H. Wennestrom and Ernest Jurgenson, all employees of The American Film Manufacturing Company, are popular figures in Chicago theatres using "Flying A" pictures. The boys have formed a quartet and are obtaining remarkable prices from local picture houses. Incidentally, they are billed as "The Flying A Quartet."

The North Dakota, one of the Pacific Fleet now manœuvering off Santa Barbara, was used in a picture last week. Some splendid scenes were made through the courtesy of the cruiser's officers, who loaned themselves to the task of showing how a shanghai man is taken from a vessel. The pet parrot and pet monkey of the Dakota, well known in naval circles, were also used in the same subject. Some memorial day features of the fleet's visit were utilized in the same picture.

That Santa Barbara has not yet accustomed itself to a resident picture company was evidenced by considerable excitement created on the exclusive Mountain Drive one day last week, when a "dummy" was tied to one of the horses and sent scurrying down the road. Several laborers, seeing what looked mightily like Kerrigan dragging along the road and swinging against trees, notified the local police. This is the second time in two weeks that either the fire department or police have been called upon to put out a "film" fire or arrest some desperado.

Miss Kathleen Kerrigan, sister of Jack Kerrigan, was the center of a family reunion last week. Miss Kerrigan completed her summer tour with the "Everywoman" company and was joined by the various members of the family at Los Angeles, where the show closed for the summer. Miss Kerrigan spends her summers with her mother and two brothers at Santa Barbara.

Itala Company to Increase Its Output to Two Features a Month

Issuance of two Itala "Big Films" instead of one a month has caused the Turin Company to enlarge its company. Forthcoming features will show a number of new faces. Conspicuous by her beauty and dramatic merit as well as by her unfamiliarity to the screen is Theresina D'Angelo, who has the leading woman's part in "The Fatal Grotto." Signorina D'Angelo has one of the proudest and most angelic names in Italy and her family owns one of the most beautiful villas on Lake Como. She is independently wealthy and gives to charity the money she earns in motion picture work.

J. V. RITCHEY PRESENTS RODMAN LAW IN A NEW RELIANCE THRILLER

A plunge over the Stillwater Falls, on the Penobscot river, Maine, in an open boat, is Rodman Law's latest feat, performed during the production of a coming Reliance release.

Edgar Lewis and a company of Reliance actors left New York on Decoration Day and met Rodman Law at St. Johns, New Brunswick, where he was to have made a trip over the St. Johns Falls. They found that the location of the St. Johns Falls was not in keeping with the situation called for in the drama, while the Stillwater Falls were better suited to the action of the story.

The fact that only one man had ever gone over the Stillwater Falls alive and was rescued in the rapids below, a raving maniac, did not cause Law to even hesitate. Director Lewis placed one camera above the falls, one directly over them, and one about fifty feet below, so that none of the thrills would be missed. Law pushed off from shore in a small boat, paddling with a single oar as calmly as a college boy in a birch-bark canoe. The plans had been carefully laid and every possible movement of the boat figured out to a nicety, but the action of the water at the bottom of the falls caused the little skiff to perform a surprising feat. It shot straight down in a vertical position, stood up on the point of its bow for several seconds, and, spinning completely around, landed right-side up without shipping more than two buckets of water.

Law managed to stay in the boat until it had almost reached the bottom of the falls, when he shot into the whirlpool like a cannon ball. For several seconds, which seemed like hours to the watchers on shore, he did not appear. His hand and arm then became visible, and Director Lewis heaved a sigh of relief as he saw that his daredevil actor was not only alive but swimming strongly with the swift current. A boat put out from shore and approached the rapids as closely as possible, but Law quickly measured distances with his eyes and swam toward his own boat which, although almost swamped, was still capable of sustaining his weight until the worst part of the rapids had been passed, and he could be taken in charge by the rescuing party.

Although the Stillwater Falls are particularly dangerous because of the large number of rocks into which the immense volume of water pours, Law had scarcely a scratch or bruise on his body. But a thing which he is at a loss to explain is the fact that a number of his teeth had been badly loosened. His statement to Manager J. V. Ritchey, of the Reliance, upon his return to New York was, "We got some great stuff, Mr. Ritchey, but I've thought of a new stunt that is a corker!"

Rodman Law's trip over the Stillwater Falls will be featured in a coming Reliance regular release.

PATHE'S WEEKLY TWICE A WEEK

A Weekly on Monday and on Thursday Hereafter

Licensed exhibitors throughout the country will be interested to learn that Pathe's Weekly will be issued twice every week in future, beginning with the week of June 23rd. There will be a weekly on Monday, June 23rd, and another on Thursday, June 26th, although this double service will not be inaugurated west of the Mississippi until the week of June 30th. The St. Louis exchange will be considered in the Eastern territory because of the fast and frequent train facilities thereto. After the first week, of course, all exhibitors will be able to get the two Pathe weeklies every week.

Pathe Freres have installed a printing plant of their own and will supply the exhibitors with posters for the weeklies direct. These posters will be mailed on a three-months' subscription basis, and the price will be based on a sliding scale, varying according to quantity. This new poster service applies only to the two weeklies.

Besides giving the exhibitors an opportunity to book two weeklies every week, Pathe Freres say the new arrangement will make both the reels more timely as the news of the world will, naturally, be released three and four days earlier than was previously possible.

The addition to a second weekly reel will increase the output of Pathe Freres to seven reels per week, exclusive of multiple reel subjects.

CHARLES ZIEBARTH

Mr. Charles Ziebarth, factory superintendent for the American Film Manufacturing Company, is one of those hustling younger men who are rapidly revolutionizing the important technical phases of the business. Mr. Ziebarth is 32 years old.

He is a master mechanic, and prior to his connection with the American had charge of various technical departments and various large manufacturing concerns. Mr. Ziebarth has been with the American ever since its organization in charge of the mechanical and electrical departments. His marked ability and ingenuity have brought about his prompt promotion to the position of superintendent.

UNIVERSAL FILM CO. SUED BY MILLER BROS., OWNERS OF THE FAMOUS "101" RANCH"

Suit for $100,000 has been filed in the United States Southern District Court against the Universal Film Company and its president, Carl Laemmle, by the three Miller brothers. Joseph C., George L. and Zach T., owners of the famous "101 Ranch," who allege that the Universal Film Company has unlawfully entitled many of its Western pictures "101" films, while having no authority to use the name.

All "101" pictures are produced by the "101" Bison Company, which, according to the Millers, has sole rights. "101 Ranch" itself is located in and around Bliss, Okla. It comprises 110,000 acres of land and includes several smaller towns.

ADOLPH ZUKOR ON SILENT TRIP

Adolph Zukor left New York last Sunday night on his way to the office of the Famous Players Film Company in Chicago. It is rumored that Mr. Zukor has some unusual purpose in this sudden trip West, but what its significance is could not be learned. It is promised, however, that upon his return some interesting news might be forthcoming.

BEN SCHULBERG A BENEDICT

By the time this isue is in the hands of the readers, our good friend "Benny" will have passed the Rubicon and have taken unto himself a wife. The ceremony was performed Saturday, June 14th, and we are sure everyone in the industry will wish Ben Schulberg and his wife a happy future. Fuller particulars will appear in our next issue.

Four Multiples That Show the Reel Excellence of General Film Service

These are the features that indicate the uniform superiority of our service. But their extreme merit must not make you forget that more than forty single reel films are released by us every week —made from stories just as vivid and strong and gripping, but restricted to a single reel because when a story can be quickly told, we tell it quickly. Many a masterpiece is being compressed into a single reel, for we won't waste time and space. When we let a film run longer than one reel, you can depend on it that the material demanded a multiple. And every single reel is packed full of ideas from the first second to last.

RELEASED ON SATURDAY, JUNE 28

"THE TRAPPER'S MISTAKE"

The trapper's wife forgot to tear up the note that said she was going away. So when the Redskins caught her and carried her off, the trapper naturally thought she had run away with his best friend. How the three meet in the thick of a fight with the Indians, how the two men confront each other and the woman explains—that's the skeleton of this cracker-jack frontier photoplay by Pathe Freres. It's in two reels.

RELEASED ON WEDNESDAY, JULY 2

"THE TIGER LILY"

An animal picture with a real, gripping story behind it—the story of a woman torn by jealousy who sends a tiger to destroy the girl she hates, little knowing that the girl is her own daughter. A storm, a flash of lightning, a villa set afire and in it the fast-coming events that bring the destruction of the Tiger Lily herself.

It's all that you hoped they would do some day with a wild animal theme. The Vitagraph actors present it in three reels.

RELEASED ON MONDAY, JUNE 30

"THE PENALTY OF CRIME"

All the appeal of the crook play, now at the crest of popularity, is in this ingeniously conceived story. The girl who is sent to fascinate the rich young jeweler is so successful that he falls in love with her. She falls in love, too, and wants to break off with the underworld—but her pals won't let her. A baggage car robbery, a motor car chased and plunged over an embankment—these are some of the quick events that follow. The Lubin Company players appear in this gripping story in two reels.

RELEASED ON FRIDAY, JULY 4

"SHENANDOAH"

Uncle Sam's birthday is a mighty appropriate release date for the best battle play ever written about the Civil War.

You can't beat the patriotic appeal of those scenes where the Federals are wavering, where General Phil Sheridan gallops in from "twenty miles away," rallies the scattering forces and snatches a victory out of the fire. It's a Kalem in three reels.

EX-CATHEDRA

THE COMING CONVENTION

MUCH has been written, and the columns of the Moving Picture News have been open, giving all the exploitaton possble toi the exposition to be held at the Grand Central Palace, New York, July 7th to 12th, and in the multiplicity of notes and information regarding this exposition, which undoubtedly will be worldwide in its fame, I feel to some extent that the main object of the exposition is being forgotten, namely, the convention of exhibitors. It is only the national convention of exhibitors meeting on these dates that makes the exposition possible, and so I want to say a word to the exhibitors about their convention. The exposition will officially open at 9 a. m. Monday, July 7th. The convention will officially open on Tuesday, July 8th, at 10 a. m. This will be an open meeting to welcome the delegates, officers, civic authorities and other guests of the convention. At 3 in the afternoon a convention in executive session will be held for the appointment of committees to carry on the work of the convention during the remainder of the week. I presume the exhibitors have given a great deal of thought to the legislation suggested for the convention to take up. If not, it is quite time they commenced to think about the matter. It needs careful thought about the election of officers, and at present the only one I have in view for president is the re-election of M. A. Neff, who has so ably, consistently and systematically brought the National Exhibitors' League to its present stand. Then, again, matters very pertinent must be considered. The censoring of pictures will take a very important place in the deliberations of the assembly. The public welfare of every exihibitor must be thoroughly discussed, and the exhibitors must come fully determined that they will not be dictated to by any class of manufacturers or any individual connected therewith. They must be perfectly free and independent, they must legislate for the choice of pictures they shall exhibit to the public. The question of educational films will also be a very important point to discuss. The ways and means to keep out of their houses pictures of a demoralizing influence, pictures that will have a tendency to lower rather than raise the stand of cinematography.

I have not an official program before me, but I believe very important matters, both of statewide and nationwide influence, will be fully discussed and adjusted, all tending and working towards the benefit of the exhibitor, at this coming convention. I predict the exhibitor will be a supreme power in the industry from then onward, and if honest, high-minded, public-spirited, whole-hearted officers are elected to lead them on, victory for the exhibitor and the public is absolutely assured.

THE GERRY SOCIETY AND MOVING PICTURES

IN the April 5th issue I wrote an editorial on the "S. P. C. C. and the Motion Picture Theatre" which has caused a great deal of comment from many sources, both civic and social. A few days ago I paid the society headquarters at Fourth avenue and Twenty-third street, New York, a visit, to learn more fully for myself the work that this society is doing. When I wrote the article, I did not intend to belittle the magnificent work that that grand society is doing on behalf of the children. Commodore Gerry's fame will last for many, many years in the hearts and lives of the children. He has helped many, and they will remain a standing monument to his sterling good qualities. The only part I was concerned with was the moving picture part, and in conversation with Superintendent Walsh I learned much about the work, and what the society was doing in the moving picture theatres.

Their object is not to censor pictures nor legislate them. Mr. Walsh enjoys a good picture, as many of us do, and commented very largely upon the advance made in the picture art within the last few years. What the society is trying to do is to make it impossible for crimes against children to take place in the darkness of the theatre. In this I am in full accord with him. Oftentimes in my editorials I have asked that the theatre should be made light; in these days a dark theatre ought to be a thing of the past. It is possible, by means of subdued light, to make it possible to see from one end of the theatre to the other, and this is the chief aim that the society is trying to accomplish. I believe I voice the sentiment of every exhibitor when I say all of them are more than anxious for their houses to be clean in material as well as in a moral sense, and if proper representations were made to them, they would endeavor to do away with any evil effects or the slightest suspicion of evil effects occurring in their houses, and that they would work heart and hand with the S. P. C. C. in doing away with the crime against children.

I saw affidavits covering a number of years, of cases that have been brought against employees in the theatres, that would never have occurred had the places been properly managed and lighted. At the same time, I pointed out to Mr. Walsh that similar cases occurred in every other walk of life, which he acknowledged was perfectly true, expressing the hope that the moving picture shows would be lighted up so that any cause of offense would be infinitesimally small. This wish I re-echo, and believe that the exhibitors will endeavor to make their places light, to do away with all cause of complaint.

Alfred H. Saunders.

UNIVERSAL DIRECTORS DISCHARGED ON LARCENY COMPLAINT

Magistrate Herbert, in the West Side Court, New York, Monday, June 16, refused to entertain a complaint against William Swanson, secretary of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Burton Garrett, the assistant secretary, and Howard Thurston, an actor, who were arrested earlier in the day on the complaint of Carl Laemmle, president of the company.

Laemmle charged the men with the larceny of the books, a certificate of stock and the seal of corporation of the Universal Film Company from the offices of the company, No. 1600 Broadway. The men were arrested on Laemmle's complaint after they had, according to the president, thrown the books out of the window.

In support of his claim that the men had taken the books, etc., illegally, Mr. Laemmle said that Swanson was no longer secretary of the company, having been deposed at the meeting held last week. Attorneys for the defence contended that as a director Swanson had not been informed of the meeting, and therefore could not have been deposed, and that under the by-laws he had a legal right to the possession of the books, no matter how he secured them. Magistrate Herbert was of the same opinion.

KINEMACOLOR CHANGES

At a meeting of the Kinemacolor Company of America held on June 12, Mr. Henry J. Brock was made chairman of the Board of Directors and Mr. A. P. Barnard, at present chairman of the Executive Committee, was elected president and general manager. Mr. W. H. Hickey, general manager of the Natural Color Kinematograph Company of London and London representative of the Kinemacolor Company of America, who has been in New York for the past four weeks, will shortly return to London. Plans which have been for some time under way for the formation of a large Kinemacolor Producing Company, which shall produce Kinemacolor pictures for Kinemacolor companies throughout the world, have been practically consummated, and Mr. Brock will return with Mr. Hickey to London in the interests of this project.

"THE WAGES OF SIN"

Motion Picture News,
City.

Gentlemen: We beg leave to call your attention to the fact that the picture "The Wages of Sin," as presented before the trade paper reviewers contained the cast of characters in which Rose, Vallon and Scheppe individually posed with their names underneath. This cast of characters was included in the eliminations made by the National Board of Censorship in line with the position taken by the board to eliminate, as far as the film itself was concerned, the exploitation of these characters, though allowing them the privilege of motion picture acting. Very truly yours,

THE NATIONAL BOARD OF CENSORSHIP,
W. D. McGuire, Jr., Executive Secretary.

"THE DEATH KNELL" POWERFUL, KEEN INQUISITION INTO SOUL STIRRING EMOTION

Melancholy are the dirge notes in "The Death Knell," funereal in tone though not in swiftly moving action its sombre measures. Here is a story reminiscent of the darkling hours of Poe, redolent of the significant sweet of burial blooms.

Love, keyed sometimes in the fortissimo of youth, sometimes in the adagio of age, is the theme of the tragic toc-sin-love whose flitting feet leads the actors of the story into caverns carnal, into by-paths of experience solemnly sinister.

Though the story looms dark in shadow, not retarded is its progress on the fast flying film whose every foot of progress leads the spectator's interest into cumulative depths of power and feeling. There is not time for the spectator to sit back in his chair and prepare for the next shock. Only at the momentary intervals of reel change can he allow himself to relax, permit his breath and heart to return to normal.

"Let me live and love for a year, a year only," is the piteous cry of the man doomed to two fates—death from the grim insidious disease which holds a twelve months' mortgage upon his body and the mockery of grappling with his passionate love unrequited.

Not his alone is the suffering. Crucified with him upon the cross of sacrifice is she whom he calls wife and another, a man of his own kin. The former's is the agony of knowing that his wife in spirit is the spiritual bride of the rival whom the bonds of blood prevents him from hating. Theirs is the anguish of seeing each other after the year of absence and knowing that a life intervenes between them and that happiness of which the seraphs sing.

A drama of primal motives and one whose springs start in the still waters of the soul is "The Death Knell." To see it is to have peered into the twilight celestial, to have felt the swish of the sable wings of the Spirit, to have known life.

MIMI NIGHT AT THE COMEDY

A clever idea was originated last week by the management of the Comedy Theatre, at Broadway and 14th Street, which succeeded in rousing the genuine enthusiasm of the audience at that theatre last Tuesday night. "The Comedian's Mask," in which King Baggott and Little Mimi Yvonne, the popular six-year-old actress, shared stellar honors, had been booked for the evening, and Mimi was asked to appear before the audience and make an address. Nothing daunted, Mimi accepted the challenge and appeared Tuesday night as big as life, and achieved new glory as an infant orator. Mimi proceeded to let the audience in on the inner secrets of her art, and would have continued ad. infin. had she not been interrupted by the pleased audience that insisted on applauding. Rumor has it that but for this direct demonstration of the audience's appreciation of her remarks Mimi would be disqualified as a "silent actress."

League President Gives Warning of Clash Between Cleveland and Ohio State Censors

Cleveland, Ohio, June 16.—A clash between city and state authorities is likely if Cleveland's City Council passes an ordinance now pending, providing for city censorship of motion pictures.

Such was the declaration made yesterday afternoon at a meeting of the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, in the Columbia Building, by M. A. Neff, of Cincinnati, state and national president of the league.

"If Cleveland thinks it is bigger than the State of Ohio," exclaimed Neff, "it's about time for a showdown."

Lauding past achievements of motion pictures, predicting wonderful possibilities for future development, sharply criticising the prevailing notion that a censor is necessary and resenting the attitude of politicians who seek to mulct exhibitors, Neff aroused enthusiasm among the exhibitors present.

Following Neff's speech, visitors were requested to leave while members went into executive session to discuss the ordinance now in council.

"I'm against city censorship," declared Neff. "I'll go further than that. I'm against state censorship, although I assisted in getting through the Legislature the bill providing for a state board of censors.

"Authorities agree that Congress has not power to establish a national censor board. It must be done by states and by concerted action of these boards, national censorship may be established which will censor, with final authority, pictures to be exhibited all over the country."

Neff appealed to the exhibitors to be their own censors when in any doubt.

"We must do it," he continued, "or else it will be done by politicians who know nothing about our business."

According to the speaker, there are 17,000 motion picture theatres in the United States, 929 in Ohio and 131 in Cleveland, which on the average, employ ten people.

"There are too many people in this business," Neff said. "A man used to think that a screen and a machine were all that were necessary to make lots of money. Every week in Cleveland several theatres fail or change hands.

"Motion picture shows are too long. Two reels are enough for any one. But some theatres, to meet competition, put on four, five and sometimes more."

Neff concluded with an eulogy of picture men he had met in his travels around the country.

"I never had a theatre manager ask me how he could attract people into his theatre. They always asked me in what way they could provide better and cleaner shows."

NEW JERSEY STATE CONVENTION

The second annual convention of the New Jersey State Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America will be held at Achtelstetter's Hall, 844 Broad Street, Newark, N. J., on Monday, June 30th, at 10 a. m. sharp.

Mr. M. A. Neff, national president; Mr. S. H. Trigger, president of the New York State League, and many prominent officials and representatives of the clergy and press will be present.

State officers for the ensuing year will be elected as will be delegates and alternates for the national convention, which will be held at the Grand Central Palace, Lexington avenue and 47th street, New York City, from July 7th to 12th next.

Other very important business will be enacted, including the campaign of action for the next session of the Legislature, which will materially benefit your business.

The league will provide a splendid luncheon and everything will be done for the comfort and entertainment of visiting exhibitors.

All New Jersey exhibitors are invited to attend whether members of the league or not, and they are requested to bring their neighboring exhibitors and help this convention be a great success by their presence.

Address all communications to Mr. Paul Kirschner, Bijou Theatre, Union Hill, N. J.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXPOSITION

The marvelous, universal popularity of motion pictures with its remarkable growth and educational features, has long since received fitting recognition from an appreciative but discriminative public, but the intricate technicalities and various mechanical aspects of cinematography have remained practically a closed book. There is no industry in the history of the world that has achieved greater triumphs in the fields of educational and scientific development than animated photography, and yet this wonderful and fascinating enterprise which has shown such extraordinary progress has never been presented in an intelligent manner to the person who studies the march of events.

The need of closer relations between the public at large and those responsible for the mechanical and dramatic part of the motion picture business has long been a recognized necessity. In order to demonstrate and emphasize the hitherto hidden resources of the manufacturers of projectors, films and accessories, it was decided to hold the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art in conjunction with the Third Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, July 7 to 12, 1913, at the New Grand Central Palace, New York City.

Unlike most expositions, this will be held under the auspices of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, an organization which stands for the uplifting of the motion picture industry, and for all that is fair, recognizing the rights of the manufacturers and legislative bodies, but to-day in many states there is unreasonable adverse legislation, and one of the principal things to be taken up at this convention will be a national censorship board, with authority to pass on all pictures, and thus do away with the so-called reformers, who really are only looking for publicity.

This exposition is not being held as a money making proposition. At the time of its inception several well known promoters endeavored to obtain the rights of the show, but the Exhibitors' Association decided that if it were to be a money making proposition it would not have the desired effect both among the trade and the public.

That this exposition will be the greatest of any trades exposition ever held seems more than probable. There are more than twelve thousand motion picture theatres in the United States to-day, most of whose owners will attend the exposition.

The wonderful growth of this business during the past twenty years is emphasized by the fact that $80,000,000 was invested in the industry last year and the receipts aggregated over $300,000,000. It is estimated that ten million feet of film is produced weekly, and how many millions of people all over the world take pleasure in seeing the pictures is a matter of conjecture.

By a special act of Congress all articles brought from foreign countries to this international exposition for exhibition purposes will be admitted absolutely free of all duties. A number of foreign manufacturers will be represented.

Over three-quarters of the floor space of the New Grand Central Palace, which contains over 40,000 square feet available for display purposes, has been sold to leading manufacturers in all departments of the business, and although this exposition is not, as previously stated, a money making proposition, the advisability of manufacturers of articles pertaining to the motion picture trade of securing space immediately is unquestionable.

Aside from the fact that thousands of motion picture theatre owners will attend the convention and will be interested in the latest devices pertaining to motion pictures, there will be an assured attendance of not less than 350,000 people during the week, all of whom will be treated to a veritable feast for the eye when they behold the remarkable display of everything relating to the new art to which they are devoted.

Motion picture players will be there in numbers to give the fans, who so loyally watch their endeavors on the screen, an opportunity of meeting them.

Plans have been perfected by the committee in charge to build four model moving picture theatres on the mezzanine floor of the Palace. The idea of these theatres is to have the latest ventilating system installed, the newest thing in projection machines, the recognized leading screens, and in fact everything that goes to make the motion picture theatre a pleasing and safe place of amusement.

Manufacturers who take space on the main floor will be given an opportunity to show their products to exhibitors and the public in these theatres, so that from the time the doors open in the morning until they close at night there will be a continuous series of the latest and best pictures shown in each one of these model theatres, the admittance to which will be absolutely free.

The exhibits on the main floor are to be divided in six main sections, which will be classified as follows:

1. Development of the cinematograph industry from its inception to the present day.
2. Exhibition of American and foreign moving picture cameras and projection machines.
3. Representation of latest and notable film productions.
4. Theatre equipment and electric lighting appliances, novelties, etc.
5. Mechanical orchestral organs, pianos and other musical attractions in vogue for moving picture theatres.
6. Miscellaneous allied industries.

To make this exposition of more interest to the general public one large manufacturer has arranged to exhibit a duplicate of everything pertaining to cinematography from the start of the picture to its projection on the screen.

Among other interesting features will be a collection of old magic lanterns and early cinematograph apparatuses and accessories.

Associated in an advisory capacity to the general committee of directors is Mr. R. G. Hollaman, president of the Eden Musee. Mr. Hollaman has had twenty-five years' experience in exposition work, and his personal interest in this exposition has meant a great deal. He was among the first to see the remarkable possibilities of the motion picture both as an amusement and educational feature.

It is just twenty years since the first motion picture was exhibited at the Chicago World's Fair, where as an attraction and novelty it was second to none. During the last twenty years almost unbelievable strides have been taken in this industry, until now, this coming July, through the untiring efforts of this committee, the motion picture will have arrived in its proper plane, rating among the greatest industries of the world.

As an attraction for the public and of interest to directors there will be held what is to be termed a "Would-Be Actors' Competition," the winners of which will be awarded a cash prize and an engagement with one of the best known film companies in the country. The sole idea of the competition is to discover unknown talent. Any man, woman, girl or boy who wishes to may compete. Competent judges will be on hand every afternoon and evening, the chairman of whom will be Alfred H. Saunders. Those wishing to take part may register their names with Frank E. Samuels, the secretary of the Exposition Committee, whose offices are in the German Bank Building, Fourth avenue and 14th street, New York City. The scenario to be used is as follows: A man or a woman enters a room in a state of deep despair, sits at a table, then hearing a knock at the door rises to receive a letter. The letter is opened and is found to announce the fact that he or she has inherited $50,000 from an unexpected source, which naturally causes the actor to show surprise, joy and excitement. The envelope, which has been lying face downward on the table, is then turned over and found to be addressed to an entirely different person. Then the funny side is noted and the scene ends with a hearty laugh.

Another novelty to be presented for the first time in this country will be the "Life Target." This will probably prove to be the novelty sensation of the century.

HISTORY OF THE MOTION PICTURE EXHIBITORS' LEAGUE OF THE CITY AND STATE OF NEW YORK

(By One of Them.)

A distinctly checkered career has marked the history of the Moving Picture Exhibitors' Organization in New York City. Beginning some time in the early part of 1907, an association was formed of which Mr. Nicola Seraphine was president; Mr. Herbert Miles, treasurer; Mr. Chester Martin, secretary, and Florence J. Sullivan, general counsel. This organization was formed to resist the action of Mayor McClellan and his chief of the Bureau of Licenses from suspending wholesale picture theatre licenses without a hearing. Since that time associations have come and gone as occasion required, the picture theatre managers being periodically galvanized into action by some new order of regulation or suspension emanating from the mayor or some of the city departments.

In December, 1907, there was a general uprising caused by the order of Mayor McClellan, closing every picture theatre in Greater New York. This meeting was held at the Murray Hill Lyceum and two separate organizations, that seemed to be in existence at that time, were united, and William Fox, of the Greater New York Film Rental Co., and manager of picture theatres, was elected president. Marcus Loew was elected secretary and treasurer. A considerable fund was raised for purpose of defense, and through the efforts thus made an injunction was secured upon petition to the Hon. William J. Gaynor, then a Supreme Court justice, sitting at Brooklyn, restraining the sweeping order of the Mayor. This organization continued more or less active during the year 1908. Various efforts were made to improve conditions and combat the activities of city officials.

Nothing of great moment was accomplished until the year 1909, when the exhibitors' association undertook, at the suggestion of Alfred H. Saunders, editor of the Moving Picture News, to finance an experimental board of censorship on all pictures. This proposition was presented to Mr. John Collier, secretary of the People's Institute, by Mr. Charles Sprague, since deceased, following a conversation with Mr. Saunders, who outlined the plan to him on the Staten Island ferry, as they were travelling to and fro. Milton Gosdorfer Daniel Donnegan and Joe Driscoll backed the proposition.

Much adverse criticism by various civic bodies and members of the exhibitors' association required that some means of suppressing obnoxious subjects must be found. Mr. Collier's plan seemed feasible, inasmuch as it was represented that the manufacturers of pictures would cooperate in submitting their product to the judgment of the Board of Censorship. Accordingly a resolution was adopted at a meeting held in March, appropriating $900 to pay the expense of three months' trial of the censorship plan. This plan proved so satisfactory and was so generally effective, not only in the correction of pictures but in the stilling of the public clamor, that it was afterwards placed on a more permanent basis and practically continues as originally organized to this day. If Alfred H. Saunders and the New York exhibitors should never do anything else, the National Board of Censorship will remain a lasting monument to their good judgment. At this time the president of the association was Mr. Joseph Driscoll, then manager of several picture theatres in The Bronx; Mr. Daniel Donnegan was the secretary and treasurer.

But again interest fagged and the organization became but a name. The second attempt to organize New York exhibitors was made during the year 1910, at which time Mr. Will C. Smith was elected president. This organization was short-lived, and nothing further was done until September, 1911, when the exhibitors of New York were again spurred to action by the enactment of a law compelling them to instal asbestos booths. This latter organization has thus proved more satisfactory to its members, mainly through the efforts of its president, Mr. Samuel H. Trigger, and its secretary, Mr. Sidney Ascher, whose tireless activities in behalf of the members have proved to be of great benefit, not only to the organization in general but to the interests of many individual exhibitors in whose behalf they have come to the front in times of trouble.

The present organization received great impetus through an immensely successful social gathering at Palm Garden, when some three thousand exhibitors and their friends participated in an entertainment and ball. The success of this occasion put some money in their treasury and brought them closer together. This, with the energetic efforts of President Trigger and the officers and directors, has finally established a good working organization in Greater New York, and while the membership is but a fraction of the total number of the exhibitors in its jurisdiction, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Greater New York is a potent factor in the business today. Its influence has been strongly on the side of betterment in picture theatres and clean programmes for picture lovers.

It was through the energy and effectiveness of this organization that President Neff of the National Exhibitors' League, believed it possible to organize the State of New York, and the assistance given him on the occasion of his visit to New York City during the week of June 17th culminated in a successful organization of New York State Branch of the National League on June 19th.

As at present constituted, the officers of the New York City association are: S. H. Trigger, president; J. A. Koerpel, vice-president; Grant W. Anson, treasurer; H. W. Rosenthal, secretary; A. Bauerenfreund, financial secretary, and Robert C. Whitten, sergeant-at-arms. At the present writing the association numbers about three hundred members, has an ample fund in its treasury and a large stock of enthusiasm among its members. This time it looks as though it possessed all the elements of permanency.

As was said before, it was largely through the effective work of the local organization that President Neff was able to form the New York State League. On this occasion the members of the New York association, not then affiliated with the national organization, put forth every possible effort to secure a good attendance at the meeting held at the Union Square Hotel, June 19th.

The result was a big turnout and the most successful convention ever held. State officers were elected as follows: President, Sam H. Trigger; first vice-president, R. M. Davis, Binghamton, N. Y.; Harold W. Rosenthal, New York, secretary; John C. Davis, Saugerties, N. Y., treasurer; Sidney Ascher, national vice-president. Since that time the officers of the New York State League have been busy organizing in the cities and towns of the state. President Trigger, National Vice-President Ascher and Treasurer Davis visited Albany and formed a local of the exhibitors of Albany, Troy, Schenectady, Cohoes, Watervliet and Saratoga on July 19th, 90 per cent of the exhibitors joined the league and formed Local No. 2.

Locals were also organized in July, 1912, by State President Trigger and State Secretary H. W. Rosenthal, at Utica, Syracuse, Rochester, Binghamton, Elmira and Buffalo. Oswego was organized in April.

Exhibitors: Do not fail to attend the Third Annual Convention, to be held at Grand Central Palace, July 7th to 12th. The following have contributed toward the entertainment of yourselves and friends: General Film Co., Universal Film Co., Edison, Vitagraph & Kalem Cos., Hugo Reisinger, Warner's Features, Rudolph Wurlitzer and others too numerous to mention.

PICTURE BASEBALL FANS SEE RELIANCE-ECLAIR GAME

Lenox Oval, New York City, was the scene of a baseball struggle last Saturday afternoon that was conspicuous for its spectacular plays, and the enthusiastic support of the players by men and women well known in the moving picture art.

The occasion was the meeting of the Reliance and Eclair baseball teams, accompanied by a goodly crowd of admirers from both studios. Up to the third inning the playing proceeded in a business-like manner, but just as Irving Cumming, the Reliance captain, made a flying leap into the bleachers and caught a ball, hot from the bat of Rutter, the Eclair pitcher, a Screen Club delegation entered the field in a large touring car and the rooting started in earnest.

Arthur Leslie led the "Screeners," carrying a bouquet of pink carnations which he proceeded to distribute among the ladies in the grandstand, duplicating his entrance to the Lubin game on the previous Saturday.

The actors of the silent drama took this as a signal to use their neglected vocal powers and the umpire suffered heroically until the end of the game, which resulted in a score of 4 to 0 in favor of Reliance. On Saturday, June 21st, Reliance will play Pathe on the same grounds, and as both teams claim to be in line for the championship, the battle is looked forward to with interest.

BIOGRAPH COMPANY AND KLAW & ERLANGER TO COMBINE AND FORM THE PROTECTIVE FILM COMPANY

The announcement of Klaw & Erlanger some months ago that they were about to embark in the moving picture field has caused endless discussion in and out of the moving picture world of theatricals. Since then a corporation has been formed with a paid-up capital of $500,000, and the announcement is now made that Klaw & Erlanger have made an association with the Biograph Company for a long term of years.

The Biograph Company is the oldest moving picture corporation now in the business, having been in existence since 1896. It has its studios in the Bronx between Prospect and Marmion avenues, running from 175th to 176th streets, occupying twenty-six city lots, and is the biggest moving picture equipment in America, and probably in the world. Mr. J. J. Kennedy, the president of the Biograph Company, is enthusiastic over the association with the Klaw & Erlanger organization.

The service of this organization, which will be called the Protective Film Company, embraces an exclusive service of copyrighted plays and, at frequent intervals, large special films. Already nearly four hundred plays have been secured for this purpose, and rehearsals for the earlier ones will be begun next week. Over six hundred people will be employed in the carrying out of this project, which will begin releasing its films about October 1st.

Mr. Marcus Loew has already entered into arrangements to have all of his theatres, numbering nearly fifty, supplied with this service, and Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer Co. of Chicago, and Carl Hoblitzell, manager of the Texas circuit of moving pictures, have also availed themselves of the opportunity to get the films of this company.

The moving picture idea is not entirely new to Messrs. Klaw & Erlanger, as they became interested in the matter and saw the first moving picture exhibited in this city seventeen years ago in the spring of 1896, when a man named Latham gave an exhibition down in Park Row. Later they entered into arrangements with Messrs. Raff and Gammon, and they still have in their possession a contract made between them, Raff & Gammon, and Thomas A. Edison for an interest which was to have accrued to them upon certain subjects at that time suggested by Klaw & Erlanger.

Six stage managers and as many companies are being engaged for the production of the forthcoming pictures, and among the earlier subjects to be placed in rehearsal are "Seven Days," "Thelma," "The Three Guardsmen," "The Round Up," "A Japanese Nightingale," "The Liberty Belles," "The Pink Lady," "Broadway After Dark," "Divorcons," "Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde," "Mam-zelle," "The Devil," "Strongheart," "Peer Gynt," "St. Elmo," "The Land of the Midnight Sun," "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm" and the Rogers Brothers' series of comedies, including "In Harvard," "In Berlin," "In London," "In Paris," "In Central Park" and others.

The offices of the new organization will be in the Bronx near the Biograph studios, where the scenario writers, actors and others will congregate, and for this purpose a twenty-room house has been rented. Mr. A. L. Erlanger will be the managing director of the new enterprise, and Mr. Marc Klaw, president.

GREAT NORTHERN FILM COMPANY IN NEW QUARTERS

The Great Northern Film Company has moved its offices to the ninth floor of the World's Tower Building, 110-112 West 40th street. General Manager Oes hesitated to leaves the old quarters in 14th street, but with increasing business, space became congested and the uptown location was decided upon. When everything is placed permanently in position the new offices doubtless will prove among the most attractive in the city.

STATE OF MAINE EXHIBITORS

A meeting of exhibitors is called for the State of Maine to be held Monday, June 23d, at the Falmouth Hotel, Portland, Me. President M. A. Neff expects to be present, or L. R. Thomas, the special organizer, will attend to organize the State of Maine in line with the national organization, which will be represented at the convention in New York July 7th to 12th.

EXPOSITION NOTES

S. M. Speedon, publicity manager of the Vitagraph Company of America for a long time, and one of the oldest in point of service and best known publicity men in the motion picture business, has been appointed honorary chairman of the Publicity Committee of the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, which will be held in conjunction with the third annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America at the Grand Central Palace, July 7th to 12th. Mr. Spedon's post is intended to convey an appreciation of the work he has done for the motion picture business in general.

The Eastman Kodak Company, of Rochester, N. Y., have closed for the entire block of spaces at the head of the main aisle.

The Gaumont Company are located just the other side of the aisle.

Others who arranged for space during the past week are:

Hennegan & Co.
The Automatic Cash Register & Ticket Company.
The Morgan Litho Company.
The Automatic Coin Cashier Company.

Every week something is added to General Film Service to make it more attractive to exhibitors. Following close on the heels of the announcement of such elaborate multiple reel features as "Mary Stuart," "The Snare of Fate," "The Struggle," "The Tiger Lily" and "Shenandoah," comes the statement that two Pathe weeklies will be supplied in every week, on Monday and Thursday, beginning in the near future.

FRANK A. TICHENOR

Frank A. Tichenor, whose picture appears on the cover of this paper, has been in the motion picture business for the last four years. Three years ago he incorporated the Manhattan Slide & Film Company. To-day they are the largest manufacturers of slides in the world, 5,000 being shipped to all parts of the country every day.

When it was decided to hold the first international exposition of the Motion Picture Art in conjunction with the third annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America, Mr. Tichenor was appointed chairman of the committee. Since then he has worked untiringly to make it the biggest kind of a success. It is not an unusual thing to see the lights burning in his office, in the German Bank Building, long after business hours.

The success this exposition is assured to be, is greatly due to his efforts.

The New York Motion Picture Corporation will be well represented at the international exposition to be held at Grand Central Palace during the week of July 7th. "Mutual Day" is one of the good things planned and Kay-Bee, Broncho and Keystone will be names long remembered by those who take part in the event.

GENERAL FILM COMPANY

One of the most elaborate exhibits at the exposition in the New Grand Central Palace, beginning July 7th, will be made by the General Film Company. While the design of the booth has not been divulged, it is understood that it is to be something radically different from the conventional exposition construction.

The booth, which is to be 30 feet long and 15 feet deep, will be used exclusively for the reception of visiting exhibitors and the general public, the display of films, posters, banners, etc., being confined to the miniature theatre for which the company has arranged.

During the week, evenings will be set aside for the several licensed manufacturers, who have promised that their prominent players will be in attendance. Wednesday evening will be Vitagraph night, Friday will probably be Edison night; the others will be announced later.

* * * *

George Balsdon, formerly owner of the Photoplay Advertising & Specialty Company, of Pittsburgh and elsewhere, and now manager of the poster department of the General Film Company, was in Albany during the past week establishing a poster branch in connection with the local distributing office.

The early part of the month the Boston poster branch was opened and has proved a great boon to exhibitors in that territory.

APPLES OF SODOM

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Edison Release.)

"WHY, Mrs. Lawrence, these week-end visits are like oases in a desert. You need never feel that I am not being entertained. It is entertainment enough to get out of the city and sit under the trees."

"Besides," Philip added, "doesn't George read me his stories? What more could a tired business man want?"

"That will do," answered George. "No sarcasm, if you please. Go to sleep if you don't want to listen to my reading. I read because I like to."

"Seriously, Mr. Crane, what do you think of George's work?" asked Mrs. Lawrence.

"I think it is perfectly splendid, and I see no reason why he should not make a name worth having," Philip Crane told her.

When Mrs. Lawrence had left the two young men alone under the trees George leaned toward his friend with an air of mystery. "I have a secret to tell you," he said.

"Oh, joy! It reminds me of our youthful days. Go ahead," exclaimed Philip.

"Not so fast. Don't get so excited. When you are calm I'll tell you," George teased.

Philip leaned back and gazed up at the sky through the lacework of the leaves.

"Well," began George, when he thought his chum's curiosity had been restrained long enough. "Well, do you remember when we used to sit in our room at college and discuss what we wanted to do?"

"You bet I do. I don't think I could forget if I tried," answered Philip.

"Do you remember what I said I wanted most to do in the literary line?"

"Sure, I do! You wanted to write a play."

George leaned close again, his face beaming. "Well," he said, "I've done it."

"By Jove, that's fine. Is it any good?"

"I shall leave that for you to say when you've heard it."

"Well, get it quick. I'm consumed with curiosity."

George brought the manuscript from the house and led the way to a distant part of the yard.

"Why on earth are you coming away over here?" asked Philip.

"Don't say a word about the play," whispered George mysteriously. "I haven't told mother anything about it. If I can get it produced I want her to have a grand surprise. The name is 'Apples of Sodom.'"

The two friends settled themselves again and George began to read. When he had finished the first act he was seized with a violent coughing spell. "This confounded cold hangs on like a leech," he gasped. "Well, can you stand another act?"

Philip sat gazing at George in astonishment. "Old man, I must confess I didn't know you could do it," he told his friend. "It is simply corking. I haven't seen anything on Broadway half as good for years."

"It's fine to hear you say so, old fellow. I hope the managers will think so, too."

"Well, they are hopeless idiots if they don't. You'll be famous before you know it," Philip declared.

"Gee, but you're flattering," George laughed. "I'd better have you for my press agent. I'll read you the rest now if this beastly cough will let me alone."

He attempted the second act, but the effort brought on such a hard attack of coughing that he was obliged to stop.

"There's mother on the porch," he said. "She always appears as soon as she hears me coughing."

That evening Mrs. Lawrence followed Philip to his room. "I am so worried about George," she told him. He coughs so hard and nothing he does seems to do any good. I want you to persuade him to go to New York to a specialist. Will you?"

"Indeed I will. I'll do my very best," Philip assured her.

As he was leaving the next morning the anxious mother reminded him of his promise. "George does not seem so well this morning," she told him. "He coughed a great deal last night."

On the way to the station Philip broached the subject of the specialist.

"Come up to see him just to please your mother. There is no use worrying her, old man."

"All right, I don't mind. I don't want to worry my mother. I might kill two birds with one stone by seeing some managers at the same time," laughed George, taking his precious manuscript from his pocket.

"For heaven's sake, you've brought the child along! Say," Philip exclaimed, "how would you like me to take it and see what I could do? I know a few influential people in the dramatic circles. I may be able to set the ball rolling before you come up and then you won't have to waste so much time."

"Why, that's awfully good of you, Phil. It would be fine."

So Philip took possession of the manuscript to see what its fate might be.

That night he sat up late reading the play over. At the end he pronounced it capital. It seemed in his judgment more than worthy of success, and he determined to do the very best he could for his friend.

As Philip was leaving for his office the next morning he met a telegraph boy at the door. He tore open the envelope handed him and read:

"George died suddenly this evening.
"ANNIE LAWRENCE."

Philip did not go to his office that day. The shock of George's death made him utterly incapable of work. All day he sat in his room in a sort of lethargy. Then, as definite thoughts began to form in his mind, one main thought slowly took possession of him. Why should he not go ahead and try to sell the play and get the credit for it himself. It was not as though George had already made a reputation. He and George had been friends for years, and he felt sure that his friend would have approved of such a plan if he could have foreseen his own death. At least, Philip persuaded himself that this was so.

When the young man went to bed that night, after sending a telegram of condolence to Mrs. Lawrence, he had fully determined to carry out his plan in regard to the manuscript.

Philip's judgment of his friend's work had been correct. It was very soon placed with a promise of early production.

During the two months of waiting he constantly told himself that he had not done his friend an injury; that George would have wanted him to have "Apples of Sodom."

But in his heart Philip was not easy. Very often the thought of Mrs. Lawrence forced itself upon him. He remembered her love for her son and her great pride in his work.

At the first performance Philip sat in a box and watched, his heart beating rapidly and his face flushed. His companion thought his condition due only to the excitement of the first night of his first production.

When at the end of the second act he was called upon for a speech, he arose with parched lips and throbbing temples.

At the end of his short speech the applause was deafening. Again and again he had to come to the front of his box and acknowledge the appreciation of the audience.

That night Philip did not sleep. In the morning he mailed to Mrs. Lawrence a check for $500. Thus he thought to salve his conscience.

But somehow the thought of the mother haunted him. There came over and over again the memory of her face, so full of pride, when she said to him: "Seriously, Mr. Crane, what do you think of George's work?" and again the motherly love and the anxiety when she had asked him to persuade her son to see a specialist.

Philip tried hard to banish these thoughts from his mind, but he could not do so. They stole upon him like thieves, robbing him of his rest and peace.

About a week after he had sent the check to Mrs. Lawrence, Philip Crane gave a dinner to some friends at one of the large hotels. Among the guests were his managers and the leading members of the company producing "Apples of Sodom."

When the dinner was at its height a waiter brought a card to Philip. On it was the name "Mrs. Annie Lawrence."

For a moment Philip was startled. Then he thought, "She could not possibly know, as George wished to keep the play a secret from her."

He excused himself to his guests, and left the room. In the reception room he found Mrs. Lawrence, dressed in deep mourning.

"Oh, Mr. Crane," she began. "I am so sorry to take you from your guests, but I want to go back to-night, as I don't know any one in the city. I should have taken an earlier train, but I went to your home first, of course, and couldn't find you."

"What is it I can do for you, Mrs. Lawrence?" Philip asked.

"Why, it is about the check. I don't quite understand. I—I cannot possibly accept such a check from you, even though you and George were such good friends. I suppose you felt that you would like to do something for George's mother, since you were so fond of him, but, really, I could not possibly accept the check. You will forgive me; will you not?" she pleaded, laying her hand gently on Philip's arm.

"Yes, Mrs. Lawrence," he said hoarsely; "I will forgive you if you will come in and be my guest to-night. After awhile I will take you to my home and make you comfortable until morning."

Mrs. Lawrence protested, but Philip finally persuaded her into the dining room, where he had a place made for George's mother beside himself.

When the coffee had been brought Philip arose in his place and said:

"Friends, this is Mrs. Lawrence. Mrs. Lawrence, these friends have been invited to celebrate the success of my play, 'The Apples of Sodom.' My friends—perhaps I may no longer call you friends—'The Apples of Sodom' was written by the son of Mrs. Lawrence. He gave me the manuscript to see if I could place it. He died the same day very suddenly, and his mother knew nothing of the play. This is the first time she has heard of this. I tried to persuade myself that I was not doing wrong, since the author was my friend, and had never become publicly known. I sent a check to Mrs. Lawrence without telling her why. She came this evening to return it to me. I cannot make any other excuse than I have made. I leave it to you to judge me."

Philip's voice broke, and he sat down and closed his eyes.

Slowly his guests arose and left the room, embarrassment and astonishment written on their faces.

When the door closed upon the last guest Philip felt a light touch upon his shoulder. He opened his eyes upon Mrs. Lawrence.

"Have you not gone, too?" he asked.

"No, you need a friend now, so I stayed with you," she answered.

"How can you forgive me?"

George's mother smiled. "I do not know. Somehow, I seemed to look into your heart and then I forgave you. That is all I know."

Universal Star Expects to Compete in San Francisco Races, July 4.

As a result of the pressure brought to bear by her many friends, Lois Weber, the clever author and leading woman of the Universal Film Company, has decided to enter her racing car in the coming Los Angeles-San Francisco road race. Miss Weber, who is an enthusiastic motorist, having toured Europe and America in her own car, has participated in a number of endurance runs, but has never been in any racing contest.

Newark, N. J.—The Progressive Investment Company, of Newark, will erect a new theatre building at a cost of $50,000.

O. F. DOUD JOINS GEORGE KLEINE

Omer F. Doud, for the past two years connected in various capacities with the American Film Manufacturing Company, severed connections with that company last week to assume new duties as publicity manager for George Kleine.

Mr. Doud is well known to the trade. While in the American's employ he had charge of publicity, was editor-in-chief of the scenario department and handled much other work. He is an ex-newspaper man and brings a splendid reputation and experience to George Kleine. Mr. Doud was a reporter on the Chicago Inter-Ocean, Kansas

OMER F. DOUD

City Star and St. Louis Republic and also edited several trade papers, including The American Florist, Chicago Banker and Agricultural Advertising, published by the Taylor-Critchfield Advertising Company. In addition to representing Eastern papers in Chicago in an advertising way, Mr. Doud opened and had charge of the Sherman & Bryan Advertising Agency, was a copy writer for that concern and was a constant and well known contributor to such advertising periodicals as Printers' Ink and Judicious Advertising.

MURRAY F. BEIER GOES WITH EMBY FEATURE FILM COMPANY

Murray F. Beier, manager of the New York office of the Selig Feature Film Company, has resigned to start the Emby Feature Film Company, with offices at No. 145 West 45th Street, New York City. Mr. Beier will give special attention to Itala "Big Films" and has secured exclusive rights for the Itala product for Greater New York City and Northern New Jersey. Mr. Beier formerly held a high executive position with the Pathe Freres Company.

Mankato, Minn.—A new picture theatre will be erected by the American Amusement Company on a lot on South Front street.

Bentonville, Ark.—The new Royal Airdome, Leister & Blake, owners, has just opened for business.

Los Angeles, Cal.—Adolph Marks, attorney, of Chicago, is here to buy a suitable corner for a large building, which will include a theatre.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

The Legitimate Drama

TURNING our attention from the woes of those who are trying to write plays for the screen, let us dwell for a short time with those who are trying to write plays for the stage. Some one finds that there are at least 15,000 men and women who are trying to write plays. "Not more than eight are succeeding," said Bayard Veiller the other day. "The man who can write plays can have all the success he wants," said Veiller. "I've known of managers paying for rot just because it had the germ of an idea. Three weeks after 'Within the Law' came across I had been offered $45,000 in advance money. And there's no 'pull' needed to sell a play."

Veiller says it is the newcomers who have had all the success this year. The "star" playwrights have written most of the failures. And when the newcomers are succeeding in the difficult art of writing for the stage, many others during the past six months have made their presence felt in the profession of writing for the picture screen. Some of the most popular of picture plays, plays that have 'gone over' in every sense of the word, have been written by comparatively unknown writers. These picture playwrights who are arriving are those who have quietly forged ahead during the past year or so while others have been wailing about "favoritism," etc.

And these newcomers, we are pleased to notice, have brought some fresh viewpoints to the screen. Many of the former "star" script writers are stars no longer. They are written out. Their work shows it and the editors are anxiously fostering the promising ones. And like writing the legitimate drama, no "pull" is needed for those who have the goods to deliver. Original work is the only "pull" needed in any well-conducted editorial department.

A Promising Situation

While a great deal of prominence has been given the announcement of the Lubin Company that hereafter the editorial department will edit, and the directors direct, whether the scripts "appeal" to them or not, the fact is that Lubin is falling into line with Edison and Vitagraph. It has been the policy of these two latter concerns to put a working script up to a director with strict orders to produce it. Directors' temperaments have not been seriously considered by Vitagraph and Edison, and the policy has brought flattering results. The average run of releases of these two companies has been so excellent, in fact, that other producers have finally appreciated that it is best to permit those competent to judge good literary work to have authority and to assume their rightful niche in the studio system. Before many months have rolled around, the editorial department of every well-regulated concern will be found in rightful authority, and the director will have been relegated to the position where he belongs.

The average director has enough work to do without attempting to pass upon the merits of scripts that have previously been accepted by the editorial department. Many a promising author has been lost, and many an excellent script turned down, simply because some director has taken upon himself the duties of manager of production. We believe that sooner or later the new policy will work somewhat of a revolution in the script form. Instead of bare action, the more promising writers will be encouraged to embody suggestions, references and more detailed explanation so that the inspiration and atmosphere of his work can be completely retained.

Four years ago, Giles R. Warren, then editor for the old Independent Moving Pictures Company, demanded complete editorial responsibility for scripts he accepted, and he got away with it. He encouraged his more talented contributors to greater inspiration by asking for longer synopsis and more detailed explanation of character. Warren developed a large number of excellent script writers, men and women, who have written some of the best action ever filmed. When he turned a script over to a director, that script was complete and comprehensive and designed to appeal to the artistic instinct of the producer. And other manufacturers wondered at the amazing popularity achieved by the Imp films of that period.

Warren, we believe, can be named the pioneer of the present plan, which promises to recognize the literary worth of a story whether or not it "appeals" to some director. We hope that when the plan is universally adopted by both licensed and "independent" companies, that it will also develop what is termed the "natural reel." Let the picture run where it should. If 1,200 or 1,600 feet of film are essential to the proper development of a plot, why chop the story at 1,000 feet? Why should there be an arbitrary ruling of 1,000 or 2,000 feet in a picture play? It may be the rule of the present market, but art is not to be gauged by rule. Far too many interesting playlets are marred by the chopping and hacking that is in vogue. We believe the time will come when the "natural length" reel will be distributed. The time is now if the manufacturers so rule. When the time comes, the writer with the inspired story will have certainly come into his own.

Echo Answers "Where?"

Where do those correspondence school fakirs obtain up-to-date lists of would-be script writers? Echo answers: "Where?" Seemingly, a writer only needs to enter the field until he is deluged with "scholastic" literature. The latest "come-on" stuff is being mailed in No. 10 envelopes bearing big black letters reading: "Of Vital Importance to You!"

Reserving Picture Rights

We find that the editors of magazines are putting on the "lid." In past years, certain of these editors have been very kind in surrendering to us the moving picture rights to our magazine stories and sketches. It is not so easy now. McClure's is now reserving all moving picture rights and names "moving picture" right out in cold type. The publishers have discovered a remunerative field in selling story plots to film manufacturers and are not so much inclined to permit the author to carry away the coin.

Giving Authors Credit

It is announced that Essanay is considering the plan of giving deserving authors credit on the screen. We hope that the consideration results in a final determination to give the plan a fair and square trying out. It is not enough to credit the author in advance sheets. The writer of the deserving story should be exploited on poster and on screen. We venture the prediction that sooner or later all the film companies will have to come to it if they want to read the best stuff, and the company that first inaugurates the credit-to-author plan will get the cream of the market. Mrs. Louella O. Parsons, Essanay's script editress, is a charming young woman. She has charge of all the selection and the sorting of the innumerable manuscripts which come to Essanay and nothing of promise escapes her eye. She is also a successful writer.

Editorial Etchings

Do not send scripts to Giles R. Warren's home address. He has been averaging eleven daily. Mr. Warren is not in the market at present, and after a little deserved leisure expects to return to the production of big stuff. Don't send your scripts to any editor; send them to the editorial departments.

Marc Edmund Jones, after a few months' successful work in New York City, has returned to Chicago, where he will continue to turn out the higher class stuff for which he is justly noted.

Arthur Leeds is a versatile chap! He has been a globe trotter, actor, lecturer, script writer and moving picture actor. He collects autographs and once beat us to a mighty good idea by about thirty-five minutes of editorial time.

Lincoln J. Carter, author, editor and playwright, who has been directing at Universal City, is in the East for a short vacation. Later he will return to California.

D. H. Whitcomb is another newspaper man who has succumbed to the fascinations of script writing. He has resigned from the Los Angeles Examiner to join the script department of the Universal forces.

A "Comp" for Letendre

The May number of The Photoplay Author received and we take our pen in hand to say that we approve of it. Homer Croy writes about "Humor"; Ernest Newton Bragg contributes a character sketch about Arthur Leeds; the first chapter of "Photoplay Construction," by Leeds and J. Berg Esenwein, is promising, and "Gorenflot" argues that the editors should edit and the directors direct. The July number will contain a character sketch of Epes Winthrop Sargent. Editor Letendre is to be congratulated upon the improved appearance of his bright monthly publication.

A Little Something on Humor

Mr. Homer Croy in a recent article on "How to Handle Humor" in picture play scripts, says that the tendency in picture play writing is to have simple and plausible humor. We agree with him. Simple and plausible humor is greatly to be desired right at present. Then in conclusion Mr. Croy sums up with the following:

> "Humor is much easier to write than you would think when you first begin studying and analyzing it. After you have learned the fundamentals, it doesn't take you long to put in the deft touches that make picture play editors remember your name and address as being a person who can do a good comedy when they are in a pinch for something light."

With due respect to Mr. Croy, we would prefer to notice a larger number of allegedly humorous script writers approach their tasks in fear and trembling. The man who can do a good comedy whenever the editor is in a pinch for something light, is a rarity. The script containing real humor is the hardest thing in the world to write. Study carefully the comedy released by the various producers and you will appreciate the truth of our assertion. The comedy script does not read like comedy. The reader appreciates and chuckles over the bright sayings in Puck or Judge, but when a picture play script incites laughter, ten to one it will be a gloomy thing indeed on the screen. The man or woman who can turn out high-class comedy scripts right along need not worry as to a source of livelihood. The trouble is that good comedy is scarce. Two out of three of the playlets, by courtesy termed "comedy," are anything but that. When a bright and unusual comedy idea is received by a script editor, it is tended as carefully as an infant. You may have learned the "fundamentals" all right, but those "deft touches" in present-day comedy seem few.

Pertinent Pointers

Editor Calder Johnson, of the Universal Clearing Bureau, says the Universal is overstocked with scripts from the general public.

Vitagraph is in need of one, two and three-reel melodramas and full-reel comedies.

Lubin Western Co., 4550 Pasadena avenue, Los Angeles, Cal., asks for strong dramatic stories of military, Western and Mexican life.

The script editors wish material in proper form, namely: title, cast of characters, synopsis and action by scenes. Many editors complain that the short-story form of manuscript is being submitted.

Do not ask editors or others for carbon copies of old scripts. It is best that you write your own and develop your own individuality. A certain writer importuned us so persistently several months ago for the carbon of a script of ours that we loaned it. Never again; so don't ask. That script was passed along the line and caused us some annoyance before its return could be engineered.

We read an article the other day in which a writer boasts that his prime success has been achieved by the sensational plot. We believe he is a liar. You cannot go far these days with state and city censors springing up like mushrooms. Write the clean story. There's enough crime in this world without your adding to it.

Arthur Leeds, in The Photoplay Author, asserts that Mr. W. N. Selig doesn't like death and tries to avoid the "sob stuff" as much as possible. Moral: Have stories free from woe when submitting them to Selig.

We again suggest that you pay careful attention to your play title. Make it as short as possible and at the same time comprehensive and attractive. Not easy? Certainly not. But then nothing worth while is easy in this world.

Avoid the comparatively unknown film concerns. There are a number not affiliated with the various groups of releasing concerns. Some are dependable; some are not. Many writers complain that the promises held out by some of these concerns are not fulfilled. Play safe and submit to the companies you can depend upon.

Can you think in action? The next time you proceed to write one of those long-winded picture plays, don't write it. Think it all out first. Then sit down to your machine and type out what you can see in your mind's eye. Try and forget the mechanical part of your work. Keep trying to put down what you see your characters are doing. Frequently you will be surprised to discover that style, technique and length have cared for themselves and that the story ends just where it ought to end.

Last Call for Dinner

We are informed that all is in readiness for the Picture Playwrights' dinner at Hotel Euclid, Cleveland, Saturday evening, June 28th. Last call for reservations received by Mr. Ralph Stoddard, editor and author, Cleveland Leader, Cleveland. Tickets, two dollars per. A great time is planned. Be there.

A Courteous Way

A Chicago writer had a script rejected by Keystone and on the back of the rejection slip was written by the editor the information that "Keystone wants stories with a big central and novel situation." The script writer submitted another story and enclosed a note thanking the Keystone editor for his kind treatment, adding that it was hoped he would find the story interesting and available for use. The Chicago writer wishes to know has he observed the amenities. We think he did the courteous thing in thanking the editor for adding a word of encouragement to the printed rejection slip. A line or two expressing appreciation was sufficient. But why add to the note your belief that "he would find the story interesting and available?"

This seems a common failing. It stands to reason that the contributor hopes his work is interesting and available or otherwise he would not submit his story. Be thankful for small favors, or large ones, and express your thanks. But don't write useless notes or letters to script editors. They also hope that your work is interesting and available, but they have no time to read superfluities.

KINEMACOLOR AT EXPOSITION

Kinemacolor will be well to the front in the forthcoming International Motion Picture Exposition, at Grand Central Palace, as it was at the recent London exposition. On the principle that "Seeing is believing" and for the purpose of "showing" the numerous exhibitors "from Missouri," who will attend the convention, there will be a special Kinemacolor Theatre on the mezzanine floor, near the main entrance, where all the latest dramatic, comic, scenic, fashion and topical productions in the natural color process will be exhibited upon the screen. On the centre aisle of the main floor the Kinemacolor booth will display all the latest mechanical improvements, including the new 35-ampere projector, the color corrector and the light filters. At the recent Travel Show the Kinemacolor pictures were the popular feature, so before an audience of experts they should go even better.

FARNHAM SUES BRITISH-AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING CO. FOR BACK SALARY

According to Joseph W. Farnham this Canadian company owes him $546.27 for back salary and he has asked the Supreme Court to issue an attachment against property of this corporation.

Farnham rendered services to the company as New York representative and for which he was to receive a salary of $75 per week. During the time he was in the employ only $53.27 was received and Farnham sues to recover the balance.

L. Diamond & Co. have purchased twenty-five tons of fibre at an exceptionally low price and are therefore able to manufacture a line of fibre reel and carrying cases, shipping cases and trunks at a price that should command the attention of prospective customers of these goods. Their address is 679 Broadway, New York City.

Right at the juncture when friendly relationship between Uncle Sam and the Mikado was somewhat strained, and every reputable newspaper in the land had been quietly requested by the United States Government to make no sensational editorial comment on the situation, more Cinematographic silliness immediately developed. Seattle authorities have forbidden the presentation of a moving picture drama of the war of 1920 between Japan and the United States. The thriller depicts the Japs as a race of sneaking villains. Woodrow Wilson and Theodore Roosevelt are important figures in the development of the story, and both play important parts in the vanquishing and practical extirpation of the enemy.

"A more inexcusable offering," says the Ohio State Journal, "could scarcely be imagined. It is not likely that the Japanese government would take notice of so insignificant an affront, but the effect on the people, especially on the irresponsible boys who are a considerable element of moving picture devotees, might be deplorable. Such lurid representations are devised to appeal to latent jingoism, and on the Pacific Coast at present such an appeal is unquestionably pernicious. The manufacturers and exhibitors of the film were doubtless influenced by a desire to appeal to the spirit of unreasoning race hostility."

One is moved to wonder whether or not San Francisco would take action similar to that taken by Seattle. San Francisco is the head and front of anti-Japanese offending, and its city government is representative of the general feeling of hostility. Seattle, apparently, is blessed with officials of common sense.

ITALA FEATURE POSTERS MAKING A HIT

Harry R. Raver, general manager of the Itala Film Company of America, is a firm believer in exceptional posters, and devotes as much time to laying out designs and the proper selection of titles and captions for Itala posters as he does to other departments of the company. As a result, the Itala buyers are enthusiastic over the Itala lobby displays.

"Speaking about our posters," said Mr. Raver, "my past experience in the theatrical and exposition field, where I had occasion to place large contracts for lithographing and, as well, supervise the designing of hundreds of styles of posters in all sizes, gave me a practical knowledge of lithographer's processes and the difference in quality of paper stock, inks and material used in the printing trade. Most printers need careful watching, and the lithographer will invariably economize on the amount of artist work devoted to the original sketch of a poster unless you keep hammering away in an effort for plenty of detail. I simply change printers until I get what I want, and that is the secret of the superiority of Itala posters over others. We select scenes that are strongest, and then tell the lithographer how we want them arranged, besides specifying the most effective color combinations to use in printing, and then write the subject matter and captions with a view to inducing the public into a theatre. The mission of the poster is to make business for the exhibitor, and all manufacturers should keep this in mind."

One of the largest buyers of Itala features has this to say about the poster situation:

"Your posters pull business because they not only tell a story, but look like real Broadway theatrical paper. We have written to other manufacturers from whom we buy films, asking them to please look at some of your posters and get some ideas, as the films are not money-makers unless the posters have some pulling power."

RAMO FILMS

Mr. Cobb, of the Ramo Film Company, showed on Wednesday afternoon at the Independent Exchange, two very good pictures, one (two-reel feature) entitled, "Man and Woman," a strong drama, full of emotion and excellently acted. The story tells of a busy man's neglect of his wife, who seeking pleasure meets a musician of note at a musicale, and is carried away with his playing. The musician becomes infatuated with her, but she realizing her folly, rejects his attentions, and he commits suicide by shooting himself.

The wife in the meantime receives a note from her lover informing her of his intention to kill himself, and arrives there just as he fires the fatal shot. She hides and escapes unnoticed by the police.

A man, whose child is very ill, is driven to desperation and resolves to rob the musician's house, but is scared away by the shooting, is caught and held as the murderer. The husband of the neglected wife interests himself in the case, and the wife, to save this innocent man, confesses her association with the musician, and the man is acquitted. The courtroom scene in this is a very impressive one, if not the best scene of this kind ever produced.

The other film shown, "A Dog-Gone Baron," is a very good comedy, and is full of laughs. The dog, a very intelligent and persistent animal, and the Baron, furnish the funny situations. The would-be Baron, married, with a large family, is continually henpecked by his wife, decides to leave home, and adopt the role of a Baron seeking the hand of a wealthy girl. His suit is favored by the mother, but not by the father, which causes considerable trouble. The couple plan to elope, and the Baron is seen placing a ladder at the side of the house, with the dog close at his heels, but escapes up the ladder into the mother's room, who hides him in the closet just as the father enters. The Baron escapes and is again pursued by the dog, with the result that he accidentally falls on a hobo, and they have a tussle. The family in the meantime have caught up with them, so had the dog, and the older daughter discovers the "dagger" mark on the Baron's arm, and remembering the description sent out by the police, communicates with the wife. The wife is then seen coming up the road with all the children, and the Baron seeing them takes leave. A very funny picture is seen of him running up a hill with the dog still in pursuit.

GEORGE KLEINE IN EUROPE

Mr. George Kleine is now in Europe, where he is arranging for a line of foreign subjects which, it is hinted, will make "Quo Vadis" seem one of the many instead of being the present last word in motion pictures. Mr. Kleine's plans are a secret and no advance information as to names of the subjects he expects to release this year is obtainable, but his intimates are well enough informed to expect some tremendous things from the present trip to Europe.

* * * *

The Chicago headquarters of George Kleine are fairly inundated with requests from great newspapers, press syndicates and magazines for still pictures and information concerning the making of "Quo Vadis." For instance, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, in its issue of Sunday, June 8, devotes two entire pages to the great spectacle, and the Dispatch is only one of the many great dailies that are constantly calling for "Dope." Mr. Kleine is certainly to be congratulated on the enormous success of his masterfilm and the entire business of picture making has been elevated to a higher scale in the minds of newspapers and the people as a result.

* * * *

But few persons are acquainted with the enormous scope of educational work in motion pictures that has passed under the observation of George Kleine during the past few years. The world of professors and scientists in various branches of medicine, surgery, history, archaeology, botany and zoology are well acquainted with the exhaustive stores of splendid educational films that Mr. Kleine has gathered from abroad. Private exhibitions of such film, which by its very nature cannot be placed on the general market, are regular occurrences at Mr. Kleine's Chicago headquarters. Just recently a film showing how the skull is trepanned by French surgeons was shown a group of well known Chicago surgeons and excited much scientific comment among them.

MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

In these piratical days of misconception and misrepresentation regarding the rights and privileges of patentees, and particularly in view of the confiscatory provisions of the Oldfield Bill, it may not be amiss to hark back some sixty years or so and consider fundamental principles as expounded by George Ticknor Curtis, the American "Blackstone" on patent law and practice. "A patent for a useful invention is not, under our law, or the law of England, a grant of a monopoly, in the sense of the old common law. It is the grant by the government to the author of a new and useful invention, of the exclusive right, for a term of years, of practising that invention. The consideration for which this grant is made by the public is the benefit to society resulting from the invention; which benefit flows from the inventor to the public in two forms: First, by the immediate practice of the invention under the patent and, secondly, by the practice of the invention, or the opportunity to practice it, which becomes the property of the public on the expiration of the patent. As the exercise of the invention is wholly within the control of him who made it, who may confine his secret entirely within his own breast, it is apparent that his consent to make it known and available to others, and finally to surrender it to the public, becomes a valuable consideration, for which, upon the principles of natural justice, he is entitled to receive compensation, in some form, from the public to whom that consideration passes. Inventors, in this respect, stand upon the same broad ground with authors. Both of these classes of persons have created something intellectual in its nature, the knowledge of which it is desirable to others to possess. Both of them have, at first, the complete right of disposition over that which they have created; and when they part with the exclusive possession of this knowledge, and confer upon others the opportunity of reaping the benefits which it confers, they manifestly consent to something for which they are entitled to receive an equivalent." This from the pen of a man who is still quoted as the leading authority on the subject. Verily, a la Longfellow:

"Whatever hath been written shall remain,
Nor be erased nor written o'er again;
The unwritten only still belongs to thee;
Take heed, and ponder well what that shall be."

A Bumpological controversy. Bumpus vs Bumpus, 53 Michigan, 346-19. Northwestern Reporter. "Wouldn't that jar you."

Commissioner Moore, in ex parte, Oneida Community, Ltd., holds that when a patent showing a certain construction expires the public has a right to manufacture articles in accordance therewith, and the right cannot be taken away under the guise of a registration of a Trade Mark. The appellant sought to register as a mark "the raised substantially circular or O shaped film having distinct edges, appearing on the back of the spoon bowl," i. e., a spoon having a pure piece of silver thus placed thereon prior to silver-plating. No use trying to spoon around the Commissioner.

The American Photographic Text Book Co., of Scranton, Pa., has made application for registration of "PHOTEX" as a Trade Mark for Cameras, Lenses, Camera Stands, Print Rollers, Print Frames, Negative Racks, Focusing Cloths, Photographic Printing Paper, Photographic Dry Plates, Photographic Shutters and Metal Tripods, claiming use since Feb. 25th, 1913.

The Eastman Kodak Co., a corporation which seems to absorb a large percentage of patents issued for Cameras, etc., is the Assignee of Patent No. 1,061,736, covering William F. Folmer's Improvement in Multiplying Camera Backs, the object of which is to provide a simple and efficient construction that will present safeguards against improperly positioning the plate with reference to the exposure aperture in the back and also to provide means for halting the carriage and maintaining it accurately in position. The usual back frame is applied at the rear of a camera. On its rear side it carries a pair of rails 2 and 3 between which slides carriage 4, that is retained against the back frame by an overhanging strip 5, on lower rail 3, and by a track 6, adjacent to upper rail 2, with which track grooved rollers 7, carried on the forward side of the carriage, are arranged to co-operate. The back frame 1 has the usual exposure opening 8, in a diaphragm 9, applied thereto and removable and replaceable with others of different sizes to vary the size of the exposure opening. When the carriage is moved to the extreme right, focusing screen 10 is brought into position opposite the exposure opening. After focus the carriage is moved to convey the screen to the left and a plate frame 11, occupying the other half of the carriage is carried into position behind the opening. This plate frame 11 carries the plate holder, and is fitted with a fixed keeper 12 and a releasable keeper 13 for this purpose. The frame is itself held on the carriage by a fixed keeper 14 and a movable keeper 15, in either of two positions, one of which disposes the greater dimension of exposure opening 16 horizontally, and the other of which disposes this dimension vertically. The interlocking mechanism comprises a spring latch, 17, secured at 18 to the top side of the upper rail 2, on the frame 1 and pierced by a guide pin 19, adjacent to a laterally extending finger portion 20, formed on the spring plate constituting the body of the latch. A pointer 26, on indicator plate 27, co-operates, indexes characters 28, 29 and 30. The illustration is a rear elevation of the device partly broken away.

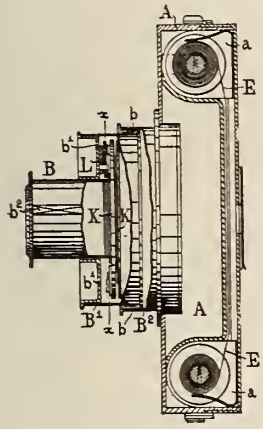
An important decision affecting Patent Office practice has been rendered by the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia overruling the decision of the Commissioner of Patents in re. Karbeck. With all due respect it cannot be denied that under Commissioner Moore's administration, the tendency has been to restrict the granting of patents, and some Examiners have become virtually obstructionists. In fact, the practice has been most illiberal, all doubts being construed as against the inventor, a policy which is obviously reversed by the decision of the Court in this case, Judge Van Orsdel ruling that:

"It is easy to dispose of a case, where the issue of invention is close, by holding that the advance over the prior art constitutes a mere mechanical change apparent to those skilled in the art. But, in the absence of proof to support this conclusion, and where the question of patentability is close, the doubt should be resolved in favor of the applicant. While the use of new materials to produce a known result, or of known materials to produce a new but obvious result, may not always constitute invention, if the new idea, when applied, brings success out of failure, produces a new and useful result and saving in operation or production, or efficiency instead of inefficiency, gives to the device new functions and useful properties, it is invention, and may be patented."

We think the decision is most just and equitable as well as opportune. By all means give the inventor the benefit of the doubt, and let the public decide as to the merits. If people do not want the innovation it will suffer innocuous desuetude—if they do they should be willing to pay the piper.

Assistant Commissioner Billings rules that the word "ARAB" is not registerable as a Trade Mark, being essentially geographical as the equivalent of Arabia, and hence deceptive if applied to goods not from Arabia and descriptive if applied to goods therefrom.

"The Inventor—That machine can do the work of ten men. Visitor—Goodness! My wife ought to have married it."—Puck.



This invention of Arthur Gray Pickard, of Altrinchen, England (Patent No. 1,061,115), relates to photographic hand cameras in which the lens is mounted in a series of concentric tubes working telescopically one within the other to be compressed into narrow compass. In constructing the camera with the shutter fitted behind the lens with oscillating leaves on the lens tube the shutter leaves and operating levers are mounted on a flange on the lens tube facing the lens. And on the back of the flange of the second ring a sliding piece is mounted, having a slot which engages with a pin on the operating lever of the shutter and a pin projects to the exterior by which this slide is moved. An eccentric for controlling the duration of exposure is also mounted on the flange of the second ring. To prevent rotation of the lens tube relatively to the second ring, which would throw the parts of the shutter out of register, the lens tube is fitted with a key, the second ring being provided with a slot to slide over the key. This construction prevents the shutter being operated when the camera is folded. The figure is a sectional elevation of camera extended. The camera is constructed with a box body A of sheet metal, preferably rectangular, and of a form to receive either film E or plate holder. A series of concentric telescopic tubes, B B^1 and B^2 are fitted into the front of the narrow box body A in the central one B, of which the lens C is mounted. The rings B, B^1 B^2 are capable of longitudinal movement, the joint between one ring and the next being packed with plush velvet or similar material b to render the joint light tight. The telescopic tubes B, B^1 B^2 fold inward almost against the film or plate. The camera is fitted with a shutter (of an ordinary type) with two oscillating leaves K carried on the inner end of the lens tube B. To prevent rotation of the lens tube relatively to the ring B^1, which would throw the part of the shutter carried by the tube out of alignment with the part carried by the flange b^1, the lens tube is fitted with a longitudinal key b^2, and the flange b^1 of the ring B^1 is provided with a slot to slide over the key and prevent rotation.

Evidently not adapted for use as a Motion Picture Theatre. "A New York theatrical man was appointed receiver for a small opera house in an upstate town in New York. He was anxious to sell it and so was willing to take the first offer made. He advertised the place, and after waiting a week he was delighted when an inquiry came in.

"Say, mister," the prospect asked, "how much do you want for the theatre?"

"My friend," the receiver replied, "I am extremely anxious to make a sale, and I'll let you have it for your own price."

"Please, mister," said the inquirer, "can't you do a little better than that?"—Post.

That our national law makers have little or no conception of the principles and theory of our patent laws is evident from the composition of the House Committee on Patents, and particularly of its sub-committee of six, responsible for the pending Oldfield Bill, four of whom hail from extreme southern states, the remaining two from Illinois and Wisconsin, thus hardly representing manufacturing interests at all. The chairman of the committee is from Arkansas, and the following sentence from his report to the House on the substitute bill bearing his name is sufficient self-indictment, i. e.:

"A patent is so dangerous an instrument that its mere use in such combination (meaning a combination of large capital that had rendered itself amenable to the Sherman Act) should be held conclusive evidence of the unreasonableness of the restraint exercised." The above quotation shows obviously lack of conception of the broad distinction between "trust" monopolies effected by combining a plurality of industrial enterprises into one, and the equitable monopoly granted under our patent laws. In fact, the whole deplorable situation is a confirmation of the old adage that a little knowledge is a dangerous thing, and reminds us forcefully of an experience of the late Chief Justice Fuller, who shortly before his death presided over a certain church conference. During the progress of a heated debate a member arose and began a tirade against universities and education, thanking God that he had never been corrupted by contact with a college. "Do I understand the speaker thanks God for his ignorance?" interrupted the Chief Justice. "Well, yes," was the answer; "you can put it that way if you want to." "All I have to say, then," said the Chief Justice, in his sweetest musical tone, "is that the member has a good deal to thank God for."

JUST GOSSIP

By The Mahoney

To be a fat man, it does not necessarily follow, is to be a comedian.

We saw a Vitagraph picture last week, showing two "beefy" individuals, struggling for supremacy to gain the attention of a very attractive young woman, at a seaside resort.

The audience numbered something over two thousand persons, of which approximately one thousand nine hundred and ninety two were willing to laugh at the crook of a finger. Yet, these two apparently overfed individuals labored like self-conscious pierotts to excite laughter, but their efforts were fruitless. Never a smile. Yes, once or twice on the boardwalk, when they turned their hippopotamus-like backs and stood "close up," their coattails fanned by the ocean breezes, showed more "mobility" than their expressionless countenances, and occasioned a faint snicker.

That was all.

Funny? No! They were just fat!

Chance threw us in the way of that prince of good fellows C. Lang Cobb a day or so since, and he was most enthusiastic in praise of the product of the Ramo Company, whose interests he now represents.

We have known C. Lang for several years, and have always found him the same, whether fortune smiled or frowned upon his efforts.

C. LANG COBB

The same spirit of sincerity and aggressiveness he displayed in "boosting" the output of organizations with which he has been associated in the past is reflected by marked expressions of praise of the output of the Ramo Company, with whom he is at present prominently identified.

Anything Mr. Cobb undertakes to do he does well.

Of the many recently organized companies for the manufacture of motion pictures, the Canadian Bioscope, Ltd., of Halifax, N. S., has a future that is destined to place them in the very front rank of all feature producers.

Instead of rushing blindly into the fray, without previous thought or investigation, their plans were carefully fostered, and when perfected the company, numbering a score of widely known and thoroughly tested film artists, among whom will be recognized Lee Beggs. Elmer Buffham, Jack Cowell, Walter Fisher, William Vaughan, the gifted and accomplished leading woman Mabel Emerson, Lillie Leslie, Della Marsh, Viola Bancroft, were immediately placed under contract.

For several weeks past this splendid organization augmented by the pick of the most available of talent among the garrison of Halifax, to the number of several hundred and more, have been laboring assiduously each day under the able direction of William S. Emerson.

Mr. Emerson's deft handling of an army of extras will shortly be seen in their first release, a gigantic three-reel subject, employing the services of several hundred people, which entailed the building of properties in the form of vessels, costing a small fortune.

The technical head and managing director of the Canadian Bioscope is Mr. G. J. B. Metzler, who, with his able lieutenants, Fred Armitage and Jack Gill, in the camera department, will insure perfection in photography.

Schools! Schools!! Schools!!!

There seem to be educational institutions for every branch of the Cinematography art, except that of judgment and common sense. Is it not a remarkable condition of affairs, when in an industry in which such vast capital is involved so little discernment is shown in its handling.

A company incorporated a little more than two years ago spent in actual cash more than seventy thousand dollars in the manufacture of motion pictures, and in spite of the fact that they exhibited a score and more of prints to the powers then in control, of as excellent quality, technically, histrionically and from the literary viewpoint, for approval, as any made by those with whom they hoped to compete, they were denied a market for the goods, except on prohibitive conditions.

The same men who combined against the admission of this company and opposed their efforts at affiliation have since destroyed the one independent distributing company in existence at that time, formed two others, disintegrated the last named two and finished by splitting apart themselves.

What an edifying thing that situation must have been at 1600 Broadway when fiery Bill Swanson, et al, sent the archives of the Universal Company and their armorial seal hurtling through the windows into Broadway.

It was strongly suggestive and even more strenuous, that some of the red-hot seances behind barred doors, when the "Little Corporal" used to kneel in the president's chair, with elbows on the directors' table and smile approval at Pat, his valiant and sturdy henchman, whenever that gentleman "put over" one of his grand coups, while "honest" Bill Gray, gentle and confiding; Dave Horseley and submissive Mark Dittenfass humored the situation with modest chuckles.

Will they ever settle down to business and make good pictures again?

It is to be hoped so, for their past efforts prove them more than capable.

Fred Held, one of the premier class camera experts of the times, an absolute master of the instrument, who understands its freaks and frailities, knows how to humor them and never fails to accomplish results, has been placed under contract by Charles L. Gaskill, of the Helen Gardner players, at Tappan, N. Y.

Mr. Gaskill is to be congratulated upon securing the services of such a valuable addition to his already brilliant and distinguished organization.

Clever and resourceful people are a real joy to The Mahoney, and when we meet one it is our one delight to chronicle the fact.

That "Fools rush in where angels fear to tread" has recently been demonstrated in the case of a certain Oracle, who prepares long dissertations on how scenarios should be written and directed and through a gratuitous correspondence school presumes to instruct managers of theatres how to conduct their business.

In fact, every department of Cinematography is covered by this gentleman, who sagely theorizes on what should, and what should not, obtain in the art, from the development of the plot of the story to its projection on the screen.

This individual was a pest to the vaudeville performer for several years and seemed to experience a degenerate delight in wounding the feeling of some inoffensive vaudevillian, whose personality was not in accord with his liking.

Circumstances recently gave him an opportunity to display his marvelous constructive qualities and genius for production, and we are authoritatively informed that the fruits of his efforts (nine pictures) representing several thousand feet of negative, were relegated to the rubbish cans of the studio where they were filmed.

TO FILM THE WORLD IS SHIPMAN'S PLAN

Ernest Shipman, theatrical manager and lately identified with the manufacture and exploitation of feature films, stopped off in Chicago for a few days en route to New York, where he meets with a syndicate of moving picture men, who are planning a cruise of the world aboard their own vessel for the purpose of making pictures in countries as yet unexplored with the camera.

The expedition will be composed of a picked company of twenty moving picture artists, three directors, four camera men, two scenario writers and the necessary technical and mechanical staff and the crew.

Arrangements are under way whereby a noted scientist, equipped with the most powerful microscopes procurable, will secure film valuable from an educational and scientific standpoint.

One or two newspaper men and magazine writers will complete the party, which weigh anchor from New York Harbor early in September.

The main purpose of the expedition is to manufacture from five to ten-reel subjects of international interest, such as "The Conquest of Mexico," "The Rise and Fall of Maximillian," "The Sacking of Old Panama by Buccaneer Morgan," "The Pirates of the Spanish Main," "The Horrors of the Rubber and Coffee Industries," etc., etc., all of which will be augmented by vivid and realistic environment and local color.

One, two and three-reel dramatic and humorous stories will also be manufactured, using the members of the company in conjunction with the native element, and interweaving stories into the historical legendary and romantic background of the various countries visited.

In addition to these subjects, books of fiction, having their settings in the tropical or sub-tropical countries, will be made into picture plays on the spot, and released in multiple reels, varying in length according to their importance and subject matter, but with all semblance at padding eliminated.

Contracts call for a three years' cruise, the first leg of which will be the West Indies, Central and South America and the Polonaise group of islands.

Contracts have been entered into for approximately seven thousand feet of film per week, which will be released through various sources, as the syndicate will manufacture for the open market.

Data is in hand covering almost every style of craft, open to purchase or charter, now riding in American or British waters, including the Nourmahal, the yacht of the late John Jacob Astor, now at Rio de Janeiro.

The vessel finally contracted for will be equipped with all the necessary equipment for the safe and sure manufacture and finishing of both negative and positive, without delay, and the populace of the various countries will be given an opportunity to see themselves in the pictures before the company departs. In this connection some valuable advertising contracts will be negotiated between the company and the government, and publicity departments of the various countries visited.

Ernest Shipman, who will be identified with one of the business departments of the undertaking, is no stranger to the foreign conditions that will arise, as he has piloted theatrical companies around the world on many occasions, and gave the "Kilties Band" a 45,000-mile jaunt, twice crossing the equator. Melba, Nordica and other celebrities have toured the Antipodes, and David Bispham is in Australia now under the Shipman banner.

Hugh D. McIntosh, the Australian sports promoter, gathered in $200,000 out of the exploitation of the pictures of the Burns-Johnson battle, which Ernest Shipman sold to William A. Brady in this country and sent into every corner of the globe.

Plans for the world's cruise, now being carried out, indicate that this foreign-made film, manufactured aboard the first floating studio in the history of moving pictures, will be ready for the world's markets by next November.

The two boats preferable to the committee were The Nourmahal, yacht of the late John Jacob Astor, and the Columbia, recently seized by Japan.

If the Columbia should be decided upon it will be delivered at San Francisco at the end of its present cruise.

VITAGRAPH NOTES

"The finest sight of the whole trip," remarked Maurice Costello, talking over the tour of the Vitagraph "Globe Trotters," who have just returned from their travels, "was the skyscrapers of New York, as I saw them coming up the bay on the way home. I saw no place else that gave me such a thrill of pleasure. Many a time when I have been dining in semi-state in one of the big hotels of India, China and Japan my mind has wandered back to Manhattan and I have thought longingly of the buckwheat and beans that I could get at Childs'."

He had a lot to say regarding the natives of these various countries visited during the tour. The Chinese were very superstitious regarding the moving picture camera and it was with the utmost difficulty that any of them were persuaded to pass before it, and as to posing them—well, it was almost impossible. On one occasion, when some men had been hired and the money actually paid over to them in advance they had absolutely refused to pass in front of the machine. It was not until after they had been threatened with dire penalties and perils by some officers of police that they would fulfill their bargains.

The Japanese were vastly different; it was a puzzle to keep them away from the pictures. The Japs knew what was going on and one and all wished to appear upon the screen. The natives of India were the least troublesome of all. They were just as easy to handle as the average Americans, and seemed to realize just what was wanted of them. It took the Egyptians, however, to put the lid on. They were money-mad. It almost seemed as if whenever one looked at a native he would ask for a piastre (about 5 cents). In Italy the party met with the utmost courtesy from every one. It seemed as if the Italians could not do too much for them. Several of the Italian moving picture companies invited them to visit their plants and asked them many questions regarding Vitagraph methods in America. The "Globe Trotters" will always have a good word to say of Roman hospitality, so well were they treated. The French, too, were well liked by the party, with but one exception. One gentleman of the party hit a snag in the person of a customs officer in Paris, who opened his trunk when it was taken out of bond. He had forgotten to declare some tobacco that was lying in the bottom and was fined heavily. It cost him 45 francs and 60 centimes (over $9) for a half pound of tobacco that he had bought in New York for 45 cents.

Mr. Costello was accompanied on the trip by several other popular Vitagraphers, including William V. Ranous, James Young, Clara Kimball Young and the two Costello children, Helen and Dolores. They all have much to say regarding their adventures and are kept pretty busy just now telling their many friends at the studios of the sights and experiences in the various countries they have visited.

STUDIO BREEZES

Edwin August, a former star of the Universal Company, who has been with the Vitagraph company for some months, returned to the Universal ranks on June 1 with his leading lady, Miss Mary Charleson. Mr. August will produce pictures of the Powers brand. In addition to writing and directing the pictures, Mr. August will take the leading roles.

Mrs. Fred Truesdell, the winsome wife of the big leading man of the Eclair Company, and known to the stage before her retirement as Miss Ethel Dovey, is appearing in some of the big features of that popular company. Miss Dovey has parts in "The Sons of a Soldier," "Thus Saith the Lord," "Why?" and other picture plays.

The Lubin team, which believes in the old saying, "If at first you don't succeed, try, try again," has arranged another game with the Pathe Freres team, to be played in Philadelphia on July 4, where the Lubin boys expect to get better results than from the last game, in which they were defeated by the score of 6 to 2.

Charles Wallace, who is the scenic artist for the Powers Photo Plays (Inc.) and who has made the models for the production of "Barabbas," was connected with the Orpheum Theatre, in Los Angeles, for six years. He was also with Dick Ferris at the Auditorium. Mr. Wallace is a thorough artist and he is putting forth his very best in "Barabbas."

* * * *

Tom Evans, the general manager of the Powers Photo Plays (Inc.), has added a new machine to the company's list of properties. This makes five autos constantly on the job now, and they are kept busy, too. Directors MacDonald and Matthews have their own cars and the new Kissel car belonging to Mr. MacDonald is fitted with about everything a car could be fitted up with. Bobby Ross asserts that he has a fireless cooker somewhere around, but this must be taken with a grain of salt.

Frank Mostyn Kelly, the noted caricaturist and actor, is at present with Director J. Farrell MacDonald at the Powers Photo Plays (Inc.) studios at Hollywood.

In the engagement of Miss Grace Caryle, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company has added a leading woman of great dramatic ability to its forces. She has been under the direction of Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, the latter the only woman in the business who writes, acts and directs her pictures.

Miss Caryle was born in Richmond, Va. When a child at boarding school she became possessed of a longing to go on the stage. Her ambitions ran counter to the rules of the school and Miss Caryle was sent home for producing too many theatricals.

In 1907 she went to New York and was engaged by the Frohmans to play the leading role in "The Thief." Later she played the lead in "Fires of Fate," produced by the same firm. She later was with Annie Russel in "The Impostor." She was Madame Nazimova's leading woman in "The Marionettes," and later played with her in stock in San Francisco. She also played lead in stock in Denver.

As a token of appreciation for the kindness shown them by General Manager A. M. Kennedy, employees of the Universal Film Company who are employed at Universal City presented Mr. Kennedy with a saddle and bridle a few days ago. Mr. Kennedy on his arrival at Universal City was halted by two deputy sheriffs, who told him he was under arrest. After he had been led to the stables under guard, his favorite horse was brought out equipped with the handsome saddle and bridle. Mr. Kennedy in a brief but sincere speech thanked the employees for their thoughtfulness. After the picnic at Universal City on May 11 the employees held a brief meeting and took up a collection for the purchase of the bridle and saddle, which is the last word in saddlery. At the conclusion of Mr. Kennedy's speech three rousing cheers were given for the popular manager.

Lorimer Johnston, the new director of the American, has arrived from Los Angeles and will immediately assume charge of the department. Mr. Johnston was for six years in the American diplomatic service at various foreign ports. Later he engaged in the regular theatrical field, and had direction of some very big productions. A year and a half ago he decided that the moving picture field was very promising. In order to acquaint himself with the best methods he went abroad and studied with the Pathe Freres, in Paris; the Itala, at Rome, and later with the Great Northern, in Copenhagen. He returned to this country and for nine months was with Selig, in Chicago. He came West four weeks ago. Mr. Johnston enjoys an excellent reputation as producer, and with the splendid opportunities that Santa Barbara affords it is safe to say that the American productions will be placed on the top notch.

Mr. Johnston is a southerner, a native of Kentucky. He is a grandnephew of General Albert Sidney Johnston, the Confederate commander who was killed the second day of the battle at Shiloh. He is specially enthusiastic over the Mountain Drives and its possibilities in moving pictures.

"There is no kind of a picture story that cannot be made in Santa Barbara," he said. "Every known period of the world can be shown. I even found a location to-day I shall use for a Druid story. I have been especially pleased with the class of people Mr. Hutchinson has surrounded himself with here. I know of no company that can equal them as ladies and gentlemen."

When "The Road to Ruin" was shown recently at the Palace Theatre, Santa Barbara, Cal., Miss Louise Lester had but an ordinary part, but in some of the allegorical scenes she had a make-up of the "witchy" sort. She did not suppose anyone would notice her from among all the others at the Old Mission ruins, but a little girl in the audience is credited with the following remark: "There's Calamity Anne, gone to Heaven."

Little Helen Armstrong came near going on a strike Saturday when she figured in a flood scene. Helen was pictured as a child in distress, but later rescued. When she got home that night the four-year-old informed Mrs. Armstrong: "I refuse to work any more if I've got to get wet."

JACK'S CHRYSANTHEMUM (June 25).—Lingering amidst the beautiful scenery of Southern Japan in search of pretty subjects for his paintings, Jack one day meets his heart's desire. In turning a corner in his rikisha he collides with another and in the confusion sees uncovered for a moment the pretty face of its occupant, Kichimatsu, the daughter of Nakamuta. Following her at a distance, he discovers her residence, the garden of which he visits clandestinely the next day. Jack experiences considerable difficulty in speaking to Kichi, who tells him that it is not seemingly for a maiden to converse with strangers. His winning smiles quickly win others in return and arrangements are soon made for future meetings. They meet at an old temple, where she poses for one of his pictures. She tells him that her father wishes her to marry Waki, a rich Japanese whom she detests, and that she fears to go against his wishes. Jack breaks down her objections and they elope and marry after the American fashion.

Writing home to his father, Jack asks him to visit Japan and see his beautiful Japanese bride, promising to give him a right good time. The announcement of the sudden marriage surprises the old man a good deal, but he telegraphs his acceptance of the invitation and leaves on the next steamer. During the voyage, he is much troubled by seasickness and is very much annoyed when Jack laughs at his account of the trip. As soon as he sees Kichimatsu, the old man is completely captivated and forgets all about his previous troubles. At first he has difficulty in dropping into Japanese customs of living and eventually suggests that Jack and his wife return with him and that they all live together. The tables are turned on the voyage home when Jack is the seasick one and his father has the laugh on him.

THE LOVE TEST (June 28).—Ralph Holden has heen working his mine with fuse as an explosive. One day a hlast fails to discharge and a workman is badly injured by the delayed explosion. The accident preys on Holden's mind, and he decides to try another method. Being of an inventive nature, he begins work on an electrical device which will automatically discharge the blasts; he is so engrossed in his work that he neglects his wife. Dr. Harding, a young physician in the neighborhood, is a friend of the Holdens, and his social visits are welcomed. One night Harding telephones the Holdens asking them to accompany him to town and visit a picture show. Ralph, who has almost perfected his invention, refuses to go and asks Harding to take Katherine. On their return from the theatre a slight accident happens to Harding's automobile and while waiting for its repair Harding preys on Katherine's lonesomeness and hegs her to elope with him. She is foolish enough to listen, but does not finally consent until the next morning, when Ralph rushes off to his work without even saying "goodbye." Katherine then decides to leave Holden and, packing a few of her belongings, she leaves a note for her husband and is ready to leave. That morning Holden is trying out his new device. It fails to work, and as he enters the mine to investigate, a careless workman stumbles over an electric coil, causing a contact which explodes the charge. Holden is hadly injured and blinded by the accident. A miner rides for the doctor and catches up with him at the railroad depot. He tells them of the accident. Mrs. Holden knows her husband needs her and they rush to the scene of the accident. They assist him to his home and administer to his wants. Dr. Harding calls the next morning, but learns that another physician will be engaged in his stead. The miners make a discovery of an enormous gold lode and inform Mrs. Holden. Their future is assured even though Holden may be hopelessly blind. The right road lies open to Katherine now and she gladly follows it.

EDISON

HOW DID IT FINISH? (June 25).—One of those rare comedies which depends for its effect more on innate humor than on the efforts of the actors to make entertaining pictures out of prosaic situations. A clever satire on the blood and thunder type of novel and particularly amusing because of the mock-seriousness with which the melodramatic actors take their parts and because of the absence of undue caricaturing.

Father finds Mary reading a novel and indignantly takes it away from her with the intention of destroying it. To ascertain to what depth his daughter's low tastes have led her, he reads a paragraph of the obnoxious book. From a hostile critic he rapidly develops into an interested follower of the vicissitudes of the characters portrayed. Interrupted at exciting crisis by members of his family and visitors, he gradually retreats from room to room until at length he is obliged to take refuge in the cellar. The story of the novel is thrilling to say the least. The bewitching heroine and the curly-haired hero are captured in the very midst of a touching love scene by swarthy ruffians in the pay of the tall and sneering villain. They are carried to the old mill and to our horror we learn that the villain intends to drop the hero through a trap door into the water unless the heroine consents to be his wife. Profiting by a lucky moment when the villain and his confederates are standing in a corner and hissing prospective felonies into each other's ears, the heroine cuts her lover's bonds and drives the thwarted rascals by their own revolvers.

Later the villain lures the heroine to a rendezvous by means of a forged note. The hero speeds to the rescue on a bicycle and a terrific struggle ensues. Suddenly, at this harrowing moment, father discovers that the last page of the book is missing. Mother at the same time discovers that the kitchen stove needs more coal and, descending the cellar stairs, she trips over father with appalling results to hoth of them.

In the course of the resultant lecture from his outraged better-half, father discovers the missing page among mother's curl papers but she refuses to give it to him and father will never know who won that fight.

THE FLY (A Menace to Public Health) (June 28).—Flies! Garbage! Two very different words, yet very closely associated. How many of us know the life history of our all too common house fly? Its eggs, laid on garhage or other refuse, hatch rapidly into our common maggot which, after a short pupa stage, become our deadly enemy, the fly. How many of us know that the hairy legs and hody of just one fly can carry millions of disease-hearing germs and cause, hy so doing, thousands of deaths annually?

If dangerous why not let us fight the fly as an equal enemy with the mosquito instead of making opportunities to encourage its production.

The picture has been founded on the above question. We have produced in remarkably clear detail every stage in the development of a fly, following which we have shown the terrible and unsanitary conditions prevailing in a large city. For example, scenes showing garhage by the ton either lying or being dumped into the streets; women nursing bahies practically on top of garbage heaps; children wallowing in prevailing squalor, and so forth.

In the same connection we have produced a series of interesting scenes showing our dangerous and horribly unsanitary neighbor, the push cart peddler, and with flies swarming about his products which rapidly decompose by the fierce heat of the sun.

This film is highly instructive and intensely interesting. It should make not only the people who are forced to live under such conditions rise up and command better legislation, but should also make the people who don't even know that such conditions exist alive to the awful situation.

AMERICAN

QUICKSANDS (2 reels) (June 30).—Frank, in love with Helen Hubbard, lives beyond his means in order to buy her costly presents. He works for her father. His own father is in danger of disgrace owing to financial troubles, and Frank steals from his employer to assist his parents. Then, to recoup, he plays the market with some more ill-gotten money and loses. He thought it was Hubbard's tip that he was playing. He gets work on a schooner sailing for the South Pacific. A mutiny springs up and he is marooned with the captain. After many days of hardships their little boat comes to an island, hut too late to save the captain. Frank meets the missionary and his daughter, Ruth. A man plus a girl plus a paradise of an island equals love. At home Helen sells all of Frank's presents and pays her father hack all that Frank had taken. Then she waits.

A year passes. The call of the white man is heavy on Frank; the new life is too exotic. Ruth has never known any other life and cannot understand his desire to get "home." The semi-annual boat comes to their island and the call of home becomes a passion. Ruth, seeing this, tells him to return—she will be happy in his happiness. He does, even though her heart breaks. At home he finds his debt squared and Helen engaged to Warren. One night he follows a strange man into his former office. Thinking it to be a burglar he telephones the police and to Hubbard. Then the burglar's hat falls off and Frank recognizes him as Warren and decides to save him for Helen's sake. Warren was taking the money to cover a defalcation. The police and Hubbard with Helen are heard coming, so there is no escape. Frank makes up the deficit in the safe from his own resources, and then pretends that Warren has captured him. Frank is spared by Helen's pleadings—she guesses the truth, and Warren has heen taught a severe lesson. The call of the tropics and an island paradise are strong and Frank returns to Ruth.

PRIDE OF LONESOME (July 3).—The cheery smile of hig-hearted Ed Daton, a simple Westerner, causes a little girl to sense the thrill of happiness. Her desire for a greater measure of this, to her unknown joy, prompts her to steal away from her ahusive parents and wander back to the little station known as "Lonesome." She is taken in by big Ed and the other nohle herdsmen and develops under the new environment to a bright and cheerful maiden. Out of gratitude she guards the welfare of her benefactors and prompts them to nobler deeds of manhood. Her activity in behalf of her friends causes her to arouse the animosity of the keeper of the one grog shop "Lonesome" boasted of and with the decrease in business he conspires against "Pride," as she has become known to the people. The plots against her were duly foiled and one would have been disastrous to the penetrators but for the timely arrival of "Pride," who prevents their untimely demise on the promise never to attempt further molestations.

A TALE OF DEATH VALLEY (July 5).—Lillian Pierce and Jim Wentworth love each other and with the consent of Lillian's parents become engaged. Jim was employed on her father's ranch and was a favorite of the father's. Will Mason was working on the same ranch, but less favored, and his proposal was met with the announcement of Lillian's engagement to Jim. Will concocts a plot with Julia Rivers, a dance hall frequenter, who agrees to pose as Jim's deserted wife. The plot works well and Jim, in disgrace, leaves the scene of what had been his paradise. Will presses his suit with a vengeance and still meeting with staunch refusal, he seeks aid from a band of desperadoes in Death Valley. His mission is fruitless and he succumbs to exhaustion. Later Jim comes upon the bleached skeleton of Will Mason and the forged marriage certificate. The reunion of Jim and Lillian is a foregone conclusion. Excellent dramatization.

KINEMACOLOR

LOVE IN THE DARK.—Contrary to expectations which might be aroused by the title, this is not a farce, but a photodrama with a well defined plot and novel climax. The heroine is deprived of sight by a peculiar accident—a premature blast just as she is passing a big excavation, and she is saved from worse injury by the young engineer in charge. During her convalescence the young engineer is very devoted, and although she has never really seen him, Bertha consents to become his wife when she recovers her sight. Before this occurs the engineer is called away on another contract, but leaves his photograph where Bertha can see it as soon as the doctor will permit the bandages to be removed from her eyes.

Another admirer, whom she has never seen, substitutes his photograph for that of the absent engineer and endeavors to hoodwink the heroine into the idea that he is her fiance. By intercepting letters from the engineer the schemer almost persuades her to fulfill her promise of marriage when the real fiance returns to confront his wily rival.

Face to face with two suitors, neither of whom she has ever seen, the girl is puzzled to pick her real sweetheart, when she has the inspiration to blindfold herself and make her choice literally "in the dark." That sixth sense which the blind seem to develop guides her aright, and the young engineer is made happy while the wily rival is hoist with his own petard.

BEYOND REPROACH.—Albert is a "raffles"—a social highwayman who, while mingling with high society, takes toll of their jewels and pocketbooks so cleverly that his pilferings are unsuspected even by his big brother Jim. Both love the same girl, but Albert has the luck to steal her heart—on the very evening when detectives have been detailed to shadow and arrest him at a grand reception. It happens that suspicion is shifted to Jim and, on being searched, a diamond brooch and an engagement ring are found in his pockets. Having just witnessed his brother's acceptance by his lady love, Jim does not explain that he purchased this jewelry in hopes of winning her himself; and when the knowledge of Albert's guilt is forced upon him, he decides to pay the penalty rather than spoil the girl's romance.

Albert reforms after his marriage, but the knowledge that his brother is paying the penalty of his crimes in the penitentiary weighs upon him, and his health fails. Feeling that his end is near, Albert writes a full confession; but when this document is delivered to Jim he tears it up—refusing to secure his release at the price of disgracing his brother's widow and child. So Albert's memory is left "without reproach."

RAMO

THE WORTH OF MAN (June 25).—Jack Moore, through a misunderstanding, believes his rival, Bob Clarke, is going to marry Mary Blair. Both men being employed in the same office, they are on friendly terms. Jack discovers a shortage in Bob's accounts and he loans him enough money to cover it.

Realizing that Jack is protecting him for Mary's sake, Bob allows him to believe that he is going to marry her. Jack leaves for the West after writing Mary a letter stating that he could not remain and see her marry another. Mary, who loves Jack, is heartbroken when she learns of his departure. She waits anxiously for his return, but in vain—later believing that her sweetheart is lost to her forever. She is easily persuaded by her father to marry Richard Barker, a rich broker, who turns out to be a reprobate and a brutal husband.

In the meantime Bob has been following the wrong road and becomes associated with evil companions.

Jack returns East after he has struck it rich. He meets Mary and learns of the fatal mistake that separated them. Realizing that her married life has been unhappy, Jack sympathizes with her. Barker misconstrues Jack's attitude toward his wife. He makes a base insinuation, which Jack and Mary resent. This brings on a heated argument. Mary's husband, being maddened with rage and drink, draws a revolver. Jack defends himself in the struggle, the revolver is accidentally discharged and Barker is killed.

Bob has fallen from bad to worse. Being surprised by officers while burglarizing a house he is pursued and is forced to enter the Barker home to escape the police. He overhears the quarrel and sees the shooting. Coming on the scene, he tells Mary and Jack that appearances are against them, and in order to protect them he will throw suspicion on himself. He leaves the house in view of the officers, who, having heard the shot, are coming toward the house. Bob is shot and the officers draw the conclusion that Barker w shot by the burglar, thus exonerating Jack and Mary from all suspicion.

MAJESTIC

DORA (June 28).—Dora, the heroine of Tennyson's famous poem, lived with her uncle, Farmer Allan, and his son, William. Her uncle had cared for the girl since childhood and longed for the day when she would wed his son. But William did not propose to the girl, and his father, mistaking his silence for bashfulness, called William and Dora to him and informed them that it was his wish that they wed.

William, living in the same home with Dora and knowing her since they were children together, did not regard her as a sweetheart, and to his father's surprise and indignation, refused to marry her. The father stormed and threatened, but to no avail. Dora, who had always loved William, was heartbroken at her cousin's action, but generously tried to reconcile the two. But her efforts were useless, for the farmer ordered his disobedient son from his home.

The months passed. William obtained work at a neighboring farm and married a farmer's daughter. Illness and misfortune came upon him, but his father, stern and inflexible, refused to aid his disobedient son. But Dora, the forgiving, secretly sent money to William, contriving it so that he did not know from whom it came.

When William's son was five years old William was taken sick and died. Dora, determined that the child and its mother should be forgiven by Farmer Allan, came to the little home and induced Mary, William's widow, to let her take the boy with her into the fields. There Dora and the child met the stern old farmer, and Dora told him that the boy was William's child. Allan, suspecting that the child's presence was due to a trick of Dora and Mary, upbraided Dora and ordered her to leave his home, but said that he would take the child.

Dora sadly returned to Mary's home, but the high-spirited mother, when told of the old farmer's action, refused to permit Dora to be sacrificed, and declared that they would take the child away from him and she and Dora would work for the boy and care for him together. But when they reached the farmhouse they found that the child had softened the old man's heart, and he humbly asked them to pardon him for the wrongs he had done to them and to the dead William.

THANHOUSER

FORGIVE US OUR TRESPASSES (June 24).—The young telegraph operator had for many years been a faithful employee of the railroad, but one day when word was brought to him that his little daughter was dying he left his post and hastened to her bedside in time to kiss his child before she died.

When the griefstricken father returned to the station a stern-faced man sat at the telegraph desk. It was the superintendent of the road. He listened contemptuously to the telegrapher's explanation, then told him curtly that he was discharged, saying that "family troubles" did not concern him.

The other railroads did not care to employ the disgraced telegrapher and the positions he was able to secure did not pay sufficient money to enable him to properly care for his wife. Grief for her child and privation did their work, and the man found himself alone in the world, with a bitter and implacable hatred towards the man who had caused him so much suffering.

Several years after the operator was discharged a train dispatcher made a blunder which gave the right of way to two trains going in opposite directions on a single-track division. The dispatcher telegraphed to the station where the trains would meet, but received no answer. Finally, after repeated calls, he received a response. The operator was the discharged telegrapher, now a homeless wanderer, who had entered the station to find the operator in a drunken stupor. The superintendent, who had been waiting impatiently, pushed the dispatcher aside and answered the call himself. He instructed the man at the other end of the wire to switch one of the trains on to a siding and avert the collision. To his horror the answer came that his operator was drunk, that the man sending the message was the discharged telegrapher and that he would do nothing to avert the threatened wreck. The superintendent, terror stricken, double so because his wife and daughter were on one of the trains, pleaded with him, but the discharged man would not listen. But the memories of happier days came back to him; he seemed to see his little daughter as she said her prayers, and remembered the words "Forgive us our trespasses." His anger and resentment faded away. He ran to the nearby switch just in time. And many lives were saved because of the prayer of a little child.

THE GIRL REPORTER (July 6).—Pearl White, reporter, is ordered by her newspaper to get an interview with the mayor, Frank Brockly. She visits his house just as the mayor leaves it in an automobile. A valise belonging to the mayor drops off and Pearl finds it. She enters the house, believing the mayor will return for it. The butler admits her and bids her wait. She enters the parlor. Meanwhile, "Natty" Nixon, a sneak thief, finds the door open and enters the house.

Pearl mistakes him for the mayor. He plays the part. Later, he locks her in the room and tries to escape, taking the valise Pearl found with him. The butler sees him and chases him down the street, finally capturing him. Meanwhile the mayor returns and discovers Pearl. He thinks she is a thief and she thinks the same of him. He cows her with a revolver and is about to 'phone the police when, by a trick, she wrests a revolver from bim. She 'phones the police and two policemen are sent to the mayor's mansion on the double quick. They enter just as the butler returns with "Natty," and eventually all entanglements being straightened out, Pearl gets the interview and all ends well.

On tbe same reel:

MUCHLY ENGAGED.—Richard Hunter is a flighty and evidently forgetful young man. He calls on Ethel, vows she is the only girl he has ever loved and gives her an engagement ring to bind their faith. He next calls on Gertrude and goes through practically the same performance. He returns home and is informed by his valet that Marguerite, another girl friend of his, called him up. He decides to visit her, and does. While there he again falls in love and gives her a ring to bind their engagement. Later, he walks along the street and is bit by an automobile. A great crowd gathers and while he is not seriously injured, still he is burt enough to have to be carried home and put in bed. Newspaper reporters get on the job and a full account of the accident and tbe injuries to Richard appear in all the papers. Ethel reads of it and, getting some flowers, proceeds to pay her fiance a visit. The other girls also read of it and also come to nurse him back to health. The three meet, with the result that a free for all fight very nearly ensues, when explanations are in order and result in the throwing of his rings at Richard by all three girls. Later, fulfilling his prediction that the girls like to be fooled they return, but again meet, and all chances of reconciliation are at an end.

A hilarious offering, novel in idea, and full of laugh-provoking incidents in every scene. A sure purveyor of mirth.

"101 BISON"

AT SHILOH (July 5).—During a temporary cessation of hostilities below the Mason-Dixon line, Col. Carlton is granted leave of absence and, accompanied by Lieut. Carney, his daughter's sweetheart, visits his Southern home. There Lieut. Carney is honored by Virginia Carlton accepting his proposal of marriage. At the expiration of their furlough the Lieutenant and the Colonel leave to rejoin their regiment.

Strife of war dangerously adjacent prevents tbe making of a trip by the Carltons to get a new wedding outfit, with the result that the solicitous mother unpacks the attic trunk and her own wedding garments undergo altering for the happy occasion of her daughter's marriage.

Meanwhile, the opposing armies draw nearer and Grant's force is discovered by the Confederates to be in a weak condition. To enable the strategic maneuver of the Confederates taking advantage of this position of the Federals, Lieut. Carney voluntarily assumes the perilous responsibility of slipping through the Federal lines to warn other Confederates of the contemplated attack, likewise securing their reinforcement.

This plan of Lieut. Carney's is thwarted at a crucial period by the Federals detecting his effort to get through their lines. Carney's horse is shot and he is compelled to seek safety in flight. The chase ends with Lieut. Carney fleeing to the home of his sweetheart, hotly pursued by the determined Federals, who suspect he bears important dispatches bearing on the hazardous position of their division. When Carney breaks into the house, Virginia and her mother are draping the wedding dress on an improvised "form," beneath which Carney is hidden as the Federals enter.

Driven to desperation, Virginia is steeled to play the part of an obliging hostess to gain time. The tired Federals succumb to her charms and she is enabled to gain time to assist Carney in escaping. The officer of the squad becomes intoxicated, and Virginia, with the assistance of Carney and two family slaves, bas bis uniform changed to that of Carney, and the Federal, in Confederate uniform, is put in a wagon and sent away in apparent flight, which is detected by the Federals, who give chase. Carney then escapes.

Witb the help of the passport which he finds in the coat of the Federal officer, Carney delivers his message in safety, enabling the Confederates to accomplish their purpose. This advantage is later turned in the opposing army's favor and the Confederates are forced into the "Hornet's Nest," where lack of water aids in weakening their opposition. Virginia's horse, ridden by Carney, is sent with a note asking for water, and Virginia accomplishes the perilous feat of carrying through the fighting lines of the Federals enough water to enable the hard-pressed Confederates to hold their ground until the Federals, in command of Gen. Grant, decide to abandon trying to gain their place of retreat. Virginia is acclaimed a heroine by the cheering army of Confederates, and she flies, embarrassed, to the eagerly waiting arms of Lieut. Carney.

HE AND HIMSELF (July 4).—Lee spruces himself up, says "Ta ta" to his friend, the actor, and sallies forth to meet THE girl. On the way to her home he meets his little cousin Gertie, and they chat about family affairs. He says good-bye to her and goes to the door, but alas! Evelyn has seen him and, believing he is flirting, slams the door in his face. Poor Lee wonders what has happened, and soon a note is thrust at him telling him he is a base, deceiving wretch and never to speak to her again. Lee arrives at his rooms in a suicidal condition, but his friend, the actor, is one of those clever persons full of bright, original ideas. "That's easy," he says. "Go as a friend of your own and square yourself." The idea sounds well and Lee decides to try it, and his friend makes him up with moustache and beard.

Lee gains admittance and his nervousness changes into cocksuredness when he finds he is not recognized. What is worse, though, Evelyn falls in love with him! Lee departs in a quandary. He consults the clever person, who tells him "Go back as yourself now." He does, and is ignominiously kicked out. Once more the man of ideas tells him to "return as the friend, steal something and tben take it back as yourself and the girl is yours."

Lee carries this advice out to the letter and comes away with Evelyn's purse. The theft is discovered too soon and Lee has to run for it. He drops the purse, but is caught and taken to the police court. Evelyn is telephoned for and so is the actor. They arrive and Lee pulls off the moustache. Evelyn is unforgiving until the judge sentences Lee to six months hard labor. Then she shrieks and relents and intercedes, and finally takes him away with her. They both round on the man of brilliant ideas and he is not invited to the wedding.

REX

SUSPENSE (July 6.)—A young couple live in the country several miles from town. Their only maid, dissatisfied with the lonely life, leaves the house without other notice than a note, telling the mistress she is leaving and will put the back door key under the back door mat.

The wife, left alone with her baby, receives a telephone call from her husband saying he will not be home until late and asking if she will be safe. The wife answers that she will be, and later, when she discovers the maid's note, although fearful of being alone, determines not to alarm her husband. She locks the house securely but, afraid to go around the house to get the key, leaves it outside.

A tramp peering through the windows sees the wife alone, and when she takes the baby upstairs, attempts to get into the house. The wife, hearing the noise, is alarmed and, looking from the window, discovers the tramp. She rushes to the phone and calls her husband, but the conversation is interrupted by the tramp cutting the wires.

The husband, however, has been informed that a tramp is entering the house, and rushes out of the office. In his haste to get to his wife he enters another man's automobile and dashes away. The man, seeing his machine stolen (as he thinks) gets the police and makes chase. The husband is caught and detained by the pursuers, but makes his escape and dashes on.

In the meantime the tramp has discovered the back door key and entered the kitchen, where he helps himself to food. The wife has barricaded the bedroom door with furniture and is waiting in terror. Finishing his meal, the tramp goes upstairs, searches for valuables and, finding none, breaks down the door leading into the bedroom.

Shots are heard and the wife faints in terror as the tramp dashes from the room and upon the steps, where he meets the husband, followed by the police. After a struggle the tramp is secured and bound by the police. The husband, finding his wife safe, explains his wild ride to the police and the pursuer and fondly kisses his wife.

VICTOR

A SHIFTING FORTUNE (July 4).—Marcus, Gertrude's grandfather, owns a farm adjoining Jim's, and the young people are attracted to each other. This feeling is not shared by their respective hired men, Jake and Dick, who are at deadly enmity.

Dick clears Jim's field of rocks by the simple process of throwing them over the fence, into Marcus' field. Jake throws them back, and Gertrude and Jim have difficulty in keeping the men from fighting. Dick's final act of reprisal is to unload a wheelbarrow of rocks on Marcus' land, during the absence of Jake.

Harry, a mining engineer, comes to the country for his vacation, and secures board in Marcus' house. Gertrude is attracted to Harry, and this has a saddening effect on Jim.

While strolling through one of Marcus' fields Harry finds the rocks Dick has brought there in his wheelbarrow. Harry discovers traces of copper in the rocks, and secretly determines to buy the farm. He returns to the house in time to find an old skinflint of a squire threatening to foreclose a mortgage he holds on Marcus' farm.

Harry follows the squire home, and buys the mortgage. He then proposes to Gertrude that she became his housekeeper, and makes violent love to her. She and Marcus leave indignantly, not waiting to be driven out. Jim arrives at this juncture, and Gertrude has difficulty in keeping him from attacking Harry. Jim takes Gertrude and Marcus to his house. Gertrude is thoroughly disillusioned in regard to Harry.

Harry writes to a capitalist, in New York, asking him to come on, investigate the copper property, and advance money to develop it. The capitalist arrives, and Harry takes him to the copper-bearing rocks. Jake, the hired man, arrives. He is very indignant at finding the rocks, and informs the horror-stricken Harry that they belong on Jim's land.

The capitalist goes to Jim and offers to develop the copper mining possibilities of his farm. Jim, Gertrude and Marcus are happy, and Harry finds himself with a useless farm on his hands.

IMP

JANE MARRIES (July 3).—Jack is a rather gay bachelor, given to clubs, parties and poker, but a good fellow notwithstanding, and it is only the fact that he is at the end of his financial rope that causes him to consider seriously a ridiculous will made by his departed aunt that he must be married before his twenty-sixth birthday or her fortune is to be used to establish a home for "Indigent Plumbers." The day of the twenty-sixth birthday arrives, and a curt note from his aunt's lawyer notified him that he must be married by 4 p. m. or sacrifice a fortune to undeserving plumbers.

Jack puts it up to the lawyer to get him anyone that will leave him after the ceremony, and goes into the park for a walk. There he rescues a girl from a pickpocket and gets a serious knife wound in the arm before the thug is overcome, and Jack finds himself in the hospital, and only two hours to find a bride. The girl, tearful with gratitude, hastens to her father's office and shows him the card of her rescuer. Her father is the lawyer, and she learns from him that Jack must have a wife in a few hours. Jane, without telling her father, decides to save the fortune for the young man who came so nobly to her rescue, and with her maid procures license, ring and minister and, veiling herself in an automobile veil, goes to the hospital and Jack is married just in time. The lawyer comes to sympathize with Jack in his loss and learns that his daughter has become a blushing and very heavily veiled bride.

Expostulations are too late, and Jane swears her father to secrecy, and returns to her home, leaving Jack in ignorance of his wife's identity.

Jack's search for and finding of his wife form the conclusion of the story, and Jack's despair when he finds that he has fallen in love with a married woman, is turned to joy when he learns the identity of her husband.

PATHE'S WEEKLY NO. 26 (June 23).

THE CARRIER PIGEON (June 24).—Every person has heard of the carrier pigeon, but few have ever had an opportunity to study the nature and care of these interesting birds, because they are far from common in the United States. The film treats the subject thoroughly through the different stages of growth of a pair of squabs, their early training, the interesting method of wedging a rolled message to one of the pigeon's tail feathers, the remarkable system employed to determine the winner of a carrier pigeon match, and one scene showing the start of some ten thousand pigeons in a race.

On the same reel:

HOW A BLOSSOM OPENS.—A timely film which shows a flower's growth, which the naked eye cannot discern, and which is released at a time when everyman and his neighbor is concerned with his garden.

THE HUNGER OF THE HEART (June 25).—Morton Gill, who has no scruples about the manner in which he obtains money for his support, makes the acquaintance, at a summer colony, of young and wealthy Mrs. Stoddard. Mr. Stoddard has made the common error of neglecting to appease the hunger in the heart of his wife by paying her some of the little attentions which won her during their courtship. Mrs. Stoddard, therefore, encourages Gill just a little. Gill attempts to borrow some money from Mrs. Stoddard. She refuses. He takes a necklace which she wears, and it is then that Mrs. Stoddard realizes that she cannot complain without causing a scandal. There seems no hope for Mrs. Stoddard when her husband misses the necklace. But a deputy sheriff arranges things so that the thief is punished and Mrs. Stoddard learns a lesson.

CLARENCE THE COWBOY (June 26).—Clarence, a really refined young man, went West to grow strong and sturdy with the rough life of the plains. With his hair nicely parted, he donned a cowboy outfit, diamond ring, shooting iron and all and set out to be one of the boys. The real cowpunchers tricked Clarence into believing that he killed a man. In a panic, Clarence flees. The pursuit is hot, and to escape he unlawfully enters the home of a sweet little Miss, the belle of the town. When he discovers that he has been hoaxed, Clarence turns the tables on the bunch and he wins the girl into the bargain.

THE SPOTTED ELEPHANT HAWK MOTH (June 27).—One of the most beautiful and gorgeous of all the moths is the perfected insect transformed from the familiar red and yellow striped caterpillar. In this film the entire metamorphosis is shown in a clear, concise, instructive and entertaining manner.

On the same reel:

ATHENS.—This film permits the audience a personal visit to the ruins of the city, which was once the center of civilization, and of which millions of persons have read and studied but have never seen.

THE SECOND SHOT (June 28).—To end a feud, Dave Burns and Dr. Lopez agree to have one shot at each other. In the duel Burns wounds the doctor slightly before the latter can take advantage of his shot. Later, Burns, on the way to summon Dr. Lopez to attend his mother, who is ill, meets the physician, who has come to fire the shot that is due him by the agreement. Burns pleads with him to attend his sick mother first. The doctor agrees, and, after Mrs. Burns shows signs of improvement, he and Burns go out. Dave stands motionless before the doctor, who raises his gun to fire, but——

THE HOUSE OF PRETENSE (June 23).—Mr. and Mrs. Deacon live together in a beautiful mansion. No childish voice is ever heard in the big empty halls. No boy shares the father's walks—no little clinging hands on the beautiful wife's knees. Each thinks the other doesn't care. And so through kindness and courtesy they build up a house of pretense and grow further away from each other every day. In his office Deacon makes a pal of his scrubwoman's little boy, and they have great games together. The boy becomes very fond of the big silent man. Beatrice, oppressed by the loneliness of her home, visits the orphan asylum daily, where she has fallen in love with little Anna, whom she would love to adopt but dare not, for fear her husband would object. The little boy's mother dies and the child comes to his friend, for he has no one else. The pathetic little figure appeals to Deacon, and he assures the little fellow that "You'll be my boy now." And that day Beatrice brings home Anna. Deacon slips in with Dick and fixes him up so as to make a more favorable impression in Beatrice's eyes. His wife, fussing over Anna, hears the knock. As he enters he sees the child close in her arms and slowly they understand each otber. He brings Dick forth and they clasp hands and into their hearts comes a real feeling for each other for the first time in many days. And later a happy wife and straight-limbed son watch a boyish father and a wee daughter play rather an uneven game of ball upon the big lawn. The House of Pretense has become a home of reality at last.

THE TANGLED WEB (June 28).—Hugh Conway, a young college student, takes Leone St. Regis, of doubtful morals, to a fraternity tea. He is requested to withdraw because of Leone. An argument follows and Hugh knocks one of his fellow students down, then withdraws with Leone. For his misdemeanor he is expelled from college. He goes to the home of the beautiful siren to say farewell. She uses every art at her command to persuade him to remain with her, but he remains obdurate. A heated argument follows, during which Hugh becomes so furious that he is about to strike Leone when the maid enters with tea things, sees his upraised arm, expresses alarm. Hugh orders her roughly from the room, then gives his parting words to Leone, that he is done with her forever, and exits. Leone is almost crazed by his desertion of her and realizing that he has gone out of her life, never to return, decides to end it all. In the butler's pantry, the maid tells of the awful row going on between Hugh and their mistress. A loud report is heard and maid and butler rush into Leone's room. She lies unconscious upon the floor, a smoking pistol near her. Maid looks about for Hugh then assists butler in reviving Leone. Leone regaining consciousness and having failed in her attempt to end her life, charges Hugh with the supposed crime, to revenge herself for his desertion. The officers arrive, learn the supposed facts of the case, and later Hugh is arrested for attempted murder. The evidence being so strong against him, he is sentenced for seven years. Leone is jubilant over his conviction. Five years elapse. Hugh escapes from prison. The growth of a Vandyke beard and mustache, together with the prison pallor, effectually disguise him almost beyond recognition and he seeks solitude in his summer home. James Stark, a resident, receives notice that his note for $2,000 and bearing interest is due to Samuel J. Elder. His son, Dick Stark, an inveterate gambler, requires money. His father unable to give him same because he has but half of the amount required for the payment of the note, is forced to refuse. Stark appeals to Elder for an extension of time, which is refused, Elder refusing to take half the amount. The evil brain of Dick concocts a plan by which he may obtain the note for a sum of $500 to which his father reluctantly agrees. Hugh goes out for a ride, dismounts in the roadway near a mansion, to remove pebbles from horse's hoof, is about to remount when, casting his eyes through a high iron fence, he meets those of Ruth, the beautiful daughter of Elder, gazing upon him. Love at first sight. In a shady lane, Hugh hears the approach of rapid hoof beats, draws in at side, three ruffians ride rapidly by. Hugh strikes off into woods. Further on, ruffians dismount. Elder enters the scene on horseback and is waylaid by them. Hugh springs from side of road to the rescue, engages in terrific battle with two of them, the third going through Elder's pockets taking all papers therein. The three men then escape. Hugh recognizes in Elder the lawyer who defended him at his trial and assists him to his home where it is discovered that a paper incriminating Elder has been stolen by the ruffians. Hugh makes known his true identity to Elder who has all along believed in his innocence. Elder introduces him to his daughter Ruth under an assumed name. Thus the lovers are brought together. In the meantime Dick Stark has received the papers taken from Elder and delivers them to his father, who finds not only the note but the incriminating paper which now gives him the greater power over the man who would give him no quarter. Hugh declares his love for Ruth. It is returned. Elder discovers them in embrace. Hugh asks for daughter's hand. Elder agrees to give same if Hugh will find the missing papers. Stark calls upon Elder and demands the hand of his daughter for his son, Dick. The scene is overheard by Hugh who follows Stark to his home and locates the hiding place of the missing papers. The following day Stark takes his son to see his fiancee. Hugh obtains the papers during his absence and with a sheriff goes to the home of Elder, where Stark and his son are arrested. The papers are safely returned to Elder. Hugh claims his reward—Ruth. A month later, Hugh and Ruth now happily married, attend a dog show where he again meets his Nemesis, Leone. Upon their return home, he receives a telegram from her, demanding his immediate presence. Realizing that it is in her power to destroy his present happiness, he goes. Upon his arrival she demands that he leave his wife and come back to her. This he refuses to do, ignoring threats made by her to send him back to prison and also to tell his wife. Excusing herself for a moment, she phones his wife to come to her home immediately if she would know the whereabouts of her husband at that time. Her jealousy aroused, Ruth starts for the home of Leone. In the meantime, Elder calls on his old friend, Dr. Pierce. Ruth arrives in time to see that which convinces her of her husband's seeming unfaithfulness. A scene takes place during which, in the presence of his wife, Hugh confesses all. The wife's heart softens, she takes Hugh home, leaving Leone to do her worst. Her final plan having failed, Leone goes mad, writes a letter to the police denouncing Hugh as an escaped convict, then revels in her madness. The servants, discovering her plight, send for Dr. Pierce, who responds to the call, taking Elder with him. The doctor, upon his arrival, finds the note, calls Elder and shows him. Doctor administers opiate which quiets the now mad Leone. Elder persuades her to sign a confession which will clear his son-in-law. She does so, then dies quietly. Elder and Dr. Pierce now rush to home of former. Hugh is about to flee. Elder arrives in time and, producing the confession which clears his name, quiets Ruth's suspicions and removes the tangle from the web of their lives.

PILOT

AN INNOCENT CONSPIRACY (June 26).—Esther Price, an authoress, is busily writing in her copy apartments, with just a vestige of loneliness, when she receives a letter from a kind old man, signing himself Uncle Brakemyer, urging her to leave her work and spend a few days on the farm.

Many miles away, Jack Bruce, in his downtown office, suffering from over-taxed nerves, receives the same kind of a missive and he decides to accept.

At their country home Uncle Brakemyer and Aunt Martha are preparing for their guests and she unearths from a cubbyhole in her large cupboard a stained newspaper clipping which shows that Jack Bruce and wife, Esther, had been divorced, and the old couple laugh over their plan of reuniting the two.

Esther arrives first and is whisked away to her room, where Aunt Martha innocently asks Esther what had ever become of her husband, and cunningly adds that she had never known or seen the scamp, but Esther is loath to talk about such painful history, but it makes her tbink.

Jack arrives on the heels of Esther and is shown to his room where he proceeds to don a sweater and smoke a pipe with real pleasure. Aunt Martha comes upon him and, preparing the way for her deceit, innocently asks Jack why he has never married, and whispers to him that she has a very beautiful city girl visiting her and desires him to meet her. Of course, this pleases Jack, and we see him primping before the mirror, so as to look his best when he meets the girl.

It is not long before Esther descends to the sitting room and begins to read a magazine.

Now Jack also comes down and, searching about for the old couple, who have discreetly vanished, comes upon Esther. Imagine the surprise of the one-time husband and wife meeting for the first time in five years. The first thing they do is quarrel, and that beautifully; each determined to depart if the other remained.

Uncle Brakemyer appears at the opportune time and very formally introduces Jack to Esther, and the young couple, not wishing to hurt the feelings of their hosts, conceal their past differences and try to deceive the old man, who laughs till his sides ache when Jack bears Esther on his arm to the dining room.

Here the situation is equally as funny, for they are placed side by side and Jack, in his excitement, upsets a dish of pickles and then pours gravy into his coffee. This creates mirth for Esther, and increases his anger.

After the meal, Jack hastens out for a walk, as does Esther and, much to their surprise, they meet face to face in the woods, where each blames the other for following him, then they part in anger.

Back at the house Aunt Martha and Uncle Brakemyer are wondering how to relieve the situation and she thinks of the plan of taking a drive and allowing the two to be alone, thinking that they can work out their own salvation, so the old couple hitch up their team and drive off.

Two tramps who have been watching them think tbey see an opportunity for a rich haul and immediately seek to gain entrance to the house.

Returning to Esther and Jack, the two meet again as if by fate, and Jack, thinking that Esther is seeking to torment him, is violently angry again, but Esther has begun to yearn for him.

Esther returns to the house and encounters the tramps, who have been filling up on Aunt Martha's pies and searching about for plunder, and the latter intend to bind and gag her so that they can proceed unhindered. However, she screams for help and is heard by Jack returning, and he rushes to her assistance where, with a chair, he holds off the two men until the latter hear Brakemyer and Martha approaching and flee.

This is the beginning of the inevitable. Esther seeks her room in misery and Jack, yearning for her, seeks his room also.

Here he hears sounds of Esther's sobbing and, unable to stand it longer, he crosses to her door and listens, then he rushes in and the barriers are all broken down.

The week-end has passed all too soon and when the young couple bid the old couple good-bye it can be seen that, strive as hard as they might to deceive their hosts, they cannot conceal little actions of love for each otber.

Some time later the old couple receive a letter from Jack and Esther informing them that they have been married again and that the old couple will always hold their best regards.

GREAT NORTHERN

SHANGHAIED (June 21).—William Sanderson is a young seafaring man who has risen from the ranks of an ordinary seaman until he has reached the post of second officer on board the ship "Aetna." He is in love with and is beloved by Edna, the daughter of Miller, the shipowner, and the latter favors the match because of the manliness of the young officer. It is partially on this account that Willie, as he is called by his shipmates, receives his commission as second officer. The "Aetna" is to sail on a long foreign trip and, after being granted shore leave, Willie falls into the hands of evil companions and finds himself in a resort frequented by sailormen. His better judgment is overcome by a desire for frivolity and he proceeds to "treat" all hands without any regard for expense. But when he is left alone and is called upon by the boarding-house keeper to pay his bill for refreshments, Willie is in financial straits. The boarding-house keeper takes whatever money he has left and then causes the young officer to sign a paper, the contents of which the latter knows nothing about. Willie is hustled into a bedroom and left to sleep off his stupor, but Millie, the daughter of the boarding-house master, has become suspicious and plans to bring about the release of the young officer. On the following morning Willie is rudely awakened from his slumbers and hustled aboard the ship "Cuttlefish," which is being made ready for a long voyage. She is well on her way to sea when Millie notifies Edna and her father of what is happening. Their steam yacht is brought into commission and after many hours the "Cuttlefish" is sighted. Willie has been ordered to do his trick at the wheel and when he overhears the skipper remark that the vessel is being chased he decides upon desperate means and leaves the wheel, after shifting the course of the "Cuttlefish" in the direction of the approaching steamer. Willie scales the shrouds and, when the crew of the vessel attempts to overtake him, he plunges headlong into the ocean and eventually is rescued by the sweetheart and good friends who are aboard the steam yacht. There is general rejoicing and, while the "Cuttlefish" tacks into the breeze and disappears, the young second officer and Edna enjoy a reunion. In the meantime, Millie, the daughter of the boarding-house master, who is also aboard the yacht, finds an admirer in one of the young officers and all ends happily.

MANAGER RITCHEY AND HIS ROUND TABLE

In order to avoid any possible confusion that might arise between the film and the play, "Her Rosary" will be the title under which a novel picture drama containing the beautiful lines of "The Rosary" will be released on July 16th. This single-reel subject was staged by Oscar C. Apfel, who considers it the best thousand feet of film that he has ever produced.

* * * *

Lawrence McGill anticipates receiving an honorary degree from some prominent university as the result of his latest efforts as a director. He recently completed a psychological subject to be released on July 2d, under the title of "Dick's Turning," and is now staging "The Wager," which deals with a sociological experiment in which a child of the slums is made to change places with a child of luxury as a result of a wager as to the effect of the change of surroundings upon the two lives.

* * * *

Irving Cummings is being put to the severest test of his whole career as an actor in "Hearts and Flowers," a coming Reliance feature by Marion Brooks. Starting as a youth of twenty, in 1861, Mr. Cummings will be called upon to show an event taking place in every year of the life of the character up to 1913. This feat will call for acting such as has never been attempted in the history of the drama. In fact, the idea of the story, which is being staged by Oscar C. Apfel, is entirely different from anything ever attempted for stage or screen production.

* * * *

In line with Manager Ritchey's interest in the "paper problem," the three reel drama, Rosemary Theby in the "Tangled Web," will carry a line of one, three and eight sheet posters instead of one, three and six sheets. The eight sheet is a more uniform size poster than the six sheet, and should be more valuable to the exhibitor as well as being more artistic. The Reliance is now successfully putting out both one and three sheet posters with each release.

PILOT NOTES

Miss Mary O'Neil, of Portland, Me., has been the guest of Miss Louise Vale at the Pilot Studio for several days.

* * * *

Miss Lottie Pickford, of the Pilot company, was celebrating her birthday last Monday. Lottie got a shampoo in the morning and left the parlors before her hair was perfectly dry. She contracted a severe cold, which caused her to lose her voice. She's been whispering to everybody now for the past several days.

* * * *

Director Vale, of the Pilot company, received an offer at a large salary from the B. C. Company, to manage their English productions. Owing to his contract with the Pilot he turned the offer down.

* * * *

Lottie Pickford gets over some good acting in "A Child of the Hills," release of June 19th.

* * * *

The Pilot outdoor studio is working at full blast now.

* * * *

It seems that baseball and tennis fans are equally divided at the Pilot Studio. The "tennis-baseball" fans don't want to give up tennis, and the "baseball-tennis" fans don't want to give up baseball. Ed Karst, a well-known baseball pitcher, however, says, "We've got to get a baseball team," and he is making some progress.

WESTERN LABORATORIES AND STUDIO OF THE AMERICAN FILM MANUFACTURING CO.

The building and grounds of the new Mission Street studio have now taken such form that one can easily comprehend what the completed whole will be like. The last important piece of work to be started is the ornament wall on Mission Street. This is now well up and is of brick to be a height of eight feet. It will later be given a coating of cement, the same as the group of buildings. In the main the following buildings are completed: Administration, development plant, garage, players' dressing room and quarters, property building and carpenter shop. The foundation is in for the glass studio. The mission style has been carried forward nicely and the entire plant has a most substantial appearance, to which has been added much that is attractive.

There will be a handsome roadway leading through a very ornamental arch gate. As soon as possible the grounds will be landscaped. There will be gardens, walks and arbors, the scheme being to use these bits occasionally in moving picture stories. From some points it will be possible to take unusual close-up stuff, with mission towers and similar effects and real mountains in the background.

Lorimer Johnston, who has visited most of the important studios here and abroad, states that he knows of none that equals what the new American will be.

OPERATORS' CHAT

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION OF GREATER NEW YORK, INC., LOCAL No. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Secretary-Treasurer—Robert Levy.
Recording Secretary—George Epstein.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—J. A. LeRoy.
Telephone—Stuyvesant 619
Office—133 Third Avenue.

NOTICE TO ALL OPERATORS

LAST OPEN MEETING AT TEUTONIA HALL, 66 ESSEX STREET, 12 P.M., JULY 23rd. CORDIAL INVITATION EXTENDED. REFRESHMENT SERVED.

Despite the exceedingly warm weather, the last meeting of the M. P. M. O. U., Local No. 1, on Monday, June 16th, was well attended by members and many matters of interest were brought up and discussed. It was exceedingly gratifying to know the interest the members are taking in their organization; also the operators who are now joining at the low entrance fee of $5, which is only in force until June 30, 1913. On and after July 1, 1913, the applicant for membership in M. P. M. O. U. will have to pay $50. The next and last open meeting will be June 23, 1913. This will give all applicants for membership a chance to attend and realize the benefit they may receive from an organization such as ours, as, for instance, the members of M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 are and always have been advised to work in harmony with the employers. In case of trouble or disagreement between the employer and employee, every legitimate effort is employed to make or bring about a peaceful settlement. A recent instance will illustrate this. Last Thursday, June 17th, the new manager of the Grand Music Hall endeavored to discharge one of the operators without the customary week's notice. (The operator has been on the job over nine months.) This manager was politely informed by letter that if he did not give the operator the usual week's notice and if this concession on his part was not made, the organization, through the business representative, would pull out the other operator at once. (The Grand Music Hall is a two-shift house and employs two operators.) Our request by letter was sent at 11 a. m., received by the manager and refused absolutely, with vile language and assault upon the operator who delivered the letter. The business representative at once pulled the operators off the job and awaited results. At 5 o'clock the same day, the manager appeared at the office of the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1, very contrite and humble in spirit, realizing that his actions were such as would not meet with any fair-minded man's approval. While discussing with the business representative the best means to get out of the difficulty he had placed himself in, he candidly acknowledged that he made a grave mistake by allowing his temper to get the better of him, and apologized to the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 for his vile language and actions and said he would hereafter try to be in harmony with the organization, provided he could get his two operators to go back to work at once, and any amends he could make he would cheerfully do. The business representative then outlined to the manager just what was required from him, to-wit, re-employment of the two men on the job, without prejudice, a week's notice to be given or taken by the operators, also two days' pay to be given to the operators for lost time. These terms were fully agreed to by the manager. Result—men on the job, working to benefit the manager; the men benefited by the organization; manager has more respect for the operators, realizing that they have some rights that command respect. So we may say, "All's serene along the Potomac," until the next outbreak, which perhaps is quite distant on the part of the manager. The reader will realize that the methods employed by the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 to settle this controversy were only to restore harmony all around. Therefore, it is absolutely necessary for all operators to belong to an organization which endeavors to benefit them in every way and at the same time not take any undue advantage of the employer.

Now to revert back to the meeting, our worthy president, Robert Goldblatt, received full instructions (which have been the same for the last five years) for the coming I. A. T. S. E. convention at Seattle, Wash., and was voted $500, or more if it was required, for expenses. Twelve new members took the obligation and ten new applicants were proposed for membership. So all operators will get this into their heads that now is the accepted time to join at the low rate of $5, because on July 1st the proposition fee is $50, and no excuses will be accepted for failure to join now. All licensed New York operators who are not members of the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 will have one more opportunity to attend the last open meeting, which takes place Monday, June 23d, at 12 p. m., at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street. There will be good speakers on matters of the operators' craft, and refreshments will be served, so don't fail to attend the open meeting. Applications for membership will be received at the office of the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 from 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. every day until July 30, 1913.

Don't forget the moonlight excursion given by the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 up the historic Hudson, rain or shine. Dancing, cabaret entertainment and a good time for all. Don't forget the date—Saturday, August 2, 1913. Gentlemen's tickets, $1; ladies' tickets, 50 cents.

J. A. LE ROY,
Business Representative.

ITALA COMPANY ANNOUNCES FIXED TERRITORIAL APPORTIONMENT

Itala Features, or "Big Films," as they are perhaps better known, in the future will be distributed according to the following territorial apportionment. This arrangement deviates but little from the former Itala policy, except in rare instances, where states are divided so as to allow better and wider circulation of the features, the aim being to place the product with as many exhibitors as possible.

Canada will be sold alone.

Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Connecticut, Rhode Island and Massachusetts will be sold together.

New York State, exclusive of New York City, sold alone.

New York City and Northern New Jersey, sold together.

Southern New Jersey ahd Eastern Pennsylvania, together.

Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, together.

Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia, together.

Tennessee, North and South Carolina, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia and Florida are sold together or separately.

Michigan and Wisconsin, together.

Ohio alone.

Indiana and Kentucky, together.

Illinois, north of Litchfield, sold alone.

Illinois, south of Litchfield, and Eastern Missouri, together.

Western Missouri, Kansas, Arkansas and Northern Oklahoma, together.

Southern Oklahoma and Texas, together.

Minnesota, North and South Dakota, together.

Nebraska and Iowa, together.

Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and New Mexico, together.

Washington, Oregon and Idaho, together.

California, Nevada and Arizona, together.

The foregoing schedule was decided upon after a careful estimate of the population of the various territories had been made and the number of theatres in each.

Much of the territory has already been contracted for, covering all Itala releases at the rate of two each month, for periods ranging from three months to one year. The contract system assures the buyer of exclusive control of Itala "Big Films" in his territory, besides offering the advantage of wholesale prices on such time contracts.

NOVELTY SLIDE COMPANY

One of the many interesting exhibits at the Moving Picture Exposition at Grand Central Palace will be that in space No. 32.

Brilliatly illuminated from many lights within, a beautiful dazzle of vivid colors and artistic splendor will radiate from a number of revolving racks, presenting a constantly changing view of over one thousand hand-colored lantern slides for every conceivable requirement of the moving picture exhibitor.

A display so complete, so attractive, or so unique has never before been attempted, and the variety of slides to be shown thoroughly covers all the very latest and best ideas in stock announcement, advance slides for features, picture player slides, advertising slides, and other "profit-increasing ideas for exhibitors."

In addition to the exhibit of beautifully colored glass slides, a new line of indestructible brass slides and of perfect mica slides will be shown.

The Novelty Slide Company, of New York, will make this display the finest and most complete exhibition of slides that money and brains could produce. Exhibitors will gain some valuable information and post themselves on some new ideas in slides by paying a visit to space No. 32.

To the Members of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America GREETING

The National Convention to be held at Grand Central Palace beginning the week of July 7th and closing the night of July 12th will be a grand success! The deliberations will be written into history that will be read by future generations!

The importance of attending this National Convention should appeal to every member of the League, especially at this time, as there are many vital questions pertaining to the Motion Picture Industry that are now agitating not only the exhibitors but the mind of the public in general. Calm and wise counsel must prevail at the Convention to accomplish and bring about the great needed reforms.

Every effort will be put forth, in a fair, honest, effective way, to meet the situation and bring about harmony and co-operation for the best interest of each and every one connected with our great industry.

For all information pertaining to the National Convention address M. A. Neff, Suite 423 425 Imperial Hotel, New York.

For all information pertaining to the New York State Convention and convention arrangements, address Samuel H. Trigger, 136 Third Ave., New York.

Under the efficient management of the Committee of the International Exhibition of Arts the exhibit will be a wonderful revelation to all who attend.

EX-CATHEDRA

CRITICISM

I AM using letters from critics of my editorials this week. I fully believe in giving both sides to a subject. After perusing the following letter my readers can read my remarks thereon:

VANOSCOPE COMPANY
MANHATTAN BUILDING
Chicago, June 11, 1913.

Mr. Alfred H. Saunders,
Editor Moving Picture News,
My Dear Mr. Saunders:—

Like a great many other readers of the Moving Picture News I had almost come to look upon you as an authority or sort of "a living encyclopedia" on matters pertaining to moving pictures, and I read with a great deal of astonishment your article under the title of "Ex Cathedra" with the subtitle of "To Be or Not To Be" contained in the issue of May 17th, and I frankly say that my astonishment increased the further I got into the article referred to because of the amount of mis-information contained therein and the amount of general knowledge which appears to be lacking regarding the basic principles of taking and projecting motion pictures; also the evident lack of information displayed regarding the rules of practice of the United States Patent Office.

It is indeed hard for me to believe that you personally wrote the article referred to. The writer has had the pleasure of meeting you personally and talking with you on several occasions; and can hardly conceive how a man of your intelligence would make the erroneous statements contained in this article. I am writing you simply to set you right on some matters which are absolutely incorrect and can easily be verified with regard to the possibilities of projecting motion pictures from a continously moving film in some new way not in general use to-day.

Of course I have no means of knowing what projecting machine you refer to, as you merely state that you have received several visits and letters from several men who have been approached to put money into an invention of this kind, but from your description of the operation of the machine and the fact that you include in your remarks any projecting machine in which the film moves continuously, I am led to believe that you refer to the Vanoscope, which is the only machine being manufactured to-day which does all of the things referred to in your article and which you seem to think are impossible.

Now, so far as the inquiries from people whom you say have been solicited to put money into the stock of such a company I wish to say that there is no stock in the Vanoscope Company for sale, nor will there be any in the future as ample funds have been subscribed by a private underwriting syndicate for all present and future needs.

You refer to an old patent issued to Joseph Bianchi where a prism is used in projection, and you make the broad statement that "this patent will interefere with any other like device that manufacturers may try to make or inventors try to invent." Of course, this statement is qualified by the words "like device," but the inference is plain that in your opinion any machine with the film running continuously wherein reflectors are used in projection would be anticipated by this patent.

Now, for your information, I want to tell you that the Bianchi patent has nothing similar or in common with the Vanoscope except that the film runs continuously. There are on record in the neighborhood of 100 patents wherein a continuously moving picture film is shown, but so far as we are able to learn none of these devices has proven practical, for various and obvious reasons.

The patent of Bianchi is not practical because the rotating prism distorts each picture and in one position reflects at least one-half of the light or incident rays off because of the angle at which they strike the prism, so that they do not go to the screen. The focal distance between the film and the lens varies continuously and besides the thickness of the prism through which the rays must go would absorb a large part of the light.

In the patents which have been allowed covering the principles and construction of the Vanoscope no reference was ever made to this Bianchi patent by the examiners, as it has no bearing whatever on the present invention.

In the first place the Vanoscope does not use prisms, but merely reflectors and the rays are only reflected once. The focal distance between the film and the lens is constant and there is no variation in the volume of light thrown upon the screen. There is absolutely no vibration, but each successive picture dissolves into the one preceding it in such manner that the change cannot be observed in running the film at as low a speed as one or two pictures per second.

You say that "The main object of such an invention is to get away with any patent that may be in existence on the present projecting machine, doing away with the Pross shutter, the Latham loop, the sprocket wheel and all such devices."

Now, my dear Mr. Saunders, you are sadly mistaken in that statement. In the first place the Pross shutter and the Latham loop have been declared invalid by the courts, and there are no existing patents that I know of, covering any important features of the present projecting machine. If you know of any such patents that are valid I think the Patents Company would like to know about them. In fact, anyone may go into the manufacture of such projectors without fear of being bothered. There is no patent on the sprocket wheel, and I am surprised that a man of your knowledge would make a statement to the contrary. In fact, this feature has never been covered by any patent. Your reference to the great loss of light and blur in the continuously running picture would apply to the Bianchi machine, but it does not apply to the Vanoscope machine.

You say that you have interviewed some prominent manufacturers in the industry with a view of obtaining their ideas of such a machine, and that they all agree with you that "such an invention to-day is absolutely useless, etc." It is quite probable that manufacturers of present motion picture appliances would be apt to take such a stand because their interest, in fact, their very living, depends upon the continuation of the present methods of projecting; but this is no reason why a man of your knowledge should take that attitude without making any effort to investigate. Your main reason is, to quote your own language, simply because it would "bring chaos out of order." In other words, it will revolutionize the entire motion picture industry, and will, in all probability, be very inconvenient for some manufacturers now engaged in making their living under the present industry.

I propose to show you, if you are fair minded, that such a revolution of the motion picture industry is about to take place.

The most astonishing feature of your article is that part covering the motion picture camera wherein you say that "films cannot be made to project on a continuously running machine that are taken by such cameras," and that "those who are trying to invent a continuously running film projector must also build a continuously running camera."

Now, Mr. Saunders, this is absolutely and unqualifiedly wrong. I do not say false because I do not believe that you intended to make a misstatement, but the Vanoscope machine wherein the film is made to run continuously projects pictures from any standard film now on the market or made by any camera now in use.

There is no difference whatever between the films used on the Vanoscope and those used on other projecting machines now in use all over the world, so you see that instead of "butting against a windmill," or, in other words, a condition that has grown up with the industry, and for which conditions, every camera, and every projecting machine, has been designed for the sole purpose of giving clear pictures and steady projection" the Vanoscope does not change the present method of producing motion pictures one iota, except in this important fact that with the Vanoscope it is possible to take pictures intermittently with any standard camera at the rate of 8 pictures per second and project them on the Vanoscope at 8 pictures per second (using 6 inches of film per second instead of one foot as is now necessary), and produce perfect life-like pictures without flicker, which show continuous movements just as well as though the pictures were taken at the rate of 16 per second and were projected at the rate of 16 per second.

The reason why we are able to do this is very easily explained. In all of the intermittent machines now on the market about one-half of the time now used in projecting is taken up by an opaque shutter which cuts off the light from the screen entirely for approximately 50 per cent. of the entire time. Therefore, one-half of each of the 16 pictures is lost (or rather one-half of the period that each picture is projected). Now, the Vanoscope projects the pictures continuously, each successive picture dissolving into the one preceding it, while the volume of light is equal all of the time, therefore, through the use of one-half of the length of film by taking the pictures at one-half the speed now used the same results can be obtained with this additional, important improvement, that all flicker is eliminated in projecting with the Vanoscope.

Perhaps you do not realize what this means for the future of the Motion Picture Industry. It is easy to see that one-half of the cost of raw film can be saved and this cost now runs into many millions of dollars per annum.

The Vanoscope is not limited to projecting pictures at 8 per second, but can be run at any speed up to 50 per second, if desired, or if any advantage could be obtained thereby.

One more remark about the camera, and I will drop that subject. Your advice to investors, etc., has already been treated with, and then you proceed to remark, "Do not waste money on such wild cat schemes, it will never be returned unless manufacturers adopt a camera to take the film for such projection," and again, "How extremely foolish for an inventor to think that he is going to put every camera at present in existence and every projector now manufactured upon the shelf or the junkheap." And you go to the great pains to caution your readers as well as any of the interested public against such losses.

So, my dear sir, you see that your caution or your solicitation for your readers is entirely uncalled for, as they have not yet been offered an opportunity to invest one cent in this company; and again, the Vanoscope Company is not making any change in the present cameras or in the present methods of producing motion pictures, except when the Vanoscope machines come in general use, film producers will be able to supply the film service with one-half of the footage now used and cover the same subject, giving the same length of program, which will eventually save millions of dollars per year, and this will be done without creating "chaos out of order," except that the up-to-date theatres will be compelled to install Vanoscope projectors in order to keep up with the times and benefit by the cheaper film service which is sure to come.

We would be glad to have you see the machine if you come here at any time. We believe you to be fair and sincere in your statements, but like other good men you fail to comprehend that what seems to be impossible has been accomplished. This is nothing new to us, as we meet with very intelligent people daily who express similar views until they see the Vanoscope in operation, and then the usual emphatic opinion is expressed in the following well known phrase, "It seems too good to be true," and "We could not believe it until we saw it for ourselves."

The Vanoscope projects motion pictures continuously, from any film now in use, without flicker and without vibration or interval, each picture successively dissolving into the one preceding it; the film runs continuously without intermittent movement, without shutter, without jerk; there is no loss of light or any change in the volume of light upon the screen. The machine is compact, simple and easily constructed. All of the movements are rotary and therefore noiseless and durable.

Basic claims have been allowed on this principle of projection which do not infringe or interfere with any other patents now in existence.

We have on hand orders for a large number of machines, in fact so many that it will require a large manufacturing plant to fill them within a year if no further orders were received, and these orders are coming in, in large numbers every day, from motion picture houses all over the country.

Just as soon as we can begin to catch up with orders for Vanoscopes we will surely have some Vanoscopes in operation in New York City. In fact, we will undoubtedly establish headquarters there and will be glad to avail ourselves of your valuable pages to advertise our machine and products in; but we would have nothing to gain by beginning an advertising campaign at this stage because, as stated above, we have orders on our books that will take us probably a year to supply and until we can catch up with the demand already created there would be no object whatever in us beginning an advertising campaign.

You have a perfect right to your own opinion; but what we do object to is your making yourself an authority on a subject that by your own statements you know nothing about and have taken no trouble to investigate.

This letter is written in a very friendly spirit and merely with the object of placing you right in regard to some of the erroneous conclusions made in your recent article, which, we have no doubt, were made in good faith and probably merely from lack of proper data and information, which we are only too willing to furnish to you from time to time.

Assuring you of our sincere regards, we remain,

VANOSCOPE COMPANY,
By L. C. Van Riper, Secretary.

I wish to inform Mr. Van Riper that he was as far from my thoughts as the North Pole is from the South, when I wrote my editorial of the 17th of May. I had heard in a casual way from himself about his machine and had forgotten all about it; his letter reminds me of its existence. He also enclosed some printed matter taken from an obscure Chicago publication, which has practically no weight or importance in the industry. I wrote the editorial and am fully responsible for the statements made. The machine I referred to, does want money to push it on the trade, and is asking investors to put cash into its coffers. If the cap fits the Vanoscope, the Vanoscope can wear it, and for Mr. Van Riper's information the Vanoscope is not the only machine being manufactured to-day; there are four others to my knowledge, and claim to do all Mr. Van Riper claims for the Vanoscope. I never said there was a patent on the sprocket wheel. If the gentleman will carefully read over again my editorial he will find he is "straining at gnat and swallowing a camel." He quotes me correctly in the paragraph he reproduces on this subject.

Regarding the question of the Patents company, they are capable of taking care of themselves. It is not what I write, but what I do not publish, that is the most important news. All I care at this moment to say is, that if it had not been for the facts and the information "I" supplied the attorneys for the Independent Manufacturers, they could not have won their cases; and further, but for this knowledge of mine, given freely (without graft or reward), there would not be an independent film manufacturer in existence to-day. As to loss of light, any schoolboy going through a physics course in high or preparation school knows that any refraction of light, either by mirrors or reflectors of silver, or prisms, is a loss to a certain extent, easily measured by the old "candle power" test, and is not so good as going direct through one source of lenses. I have usually been looked upon as a fair-minded controversialist, hence my reproducing of this letter, and when I see it I will write so of it, but I went to Missouri once and since then you have got to show me the "revolution" of the projector without a similar revolution in the camera. Basic claims have been allowed on every other patent in existence. The proof of such claims is the law court. I congratulate the Vanoscope company upon having so many orders booked ahead and that the exhibitors are sending in such a large number of orders, and promise when I go to Chicago to call upon this firm and give my readers the benefit of my experience.

I am grateful to my correspondent in that he allows me the right to my own individual opinion.

Another correspondent takes me to task for my remarks on the Censorship Board. Here is his letter.

THE FAMOUS FEATURE FILM SERVICE
June 18, 1913.

Mr. Alfred Saunders,
Editor Motion Picture News,
New York City.

Dear Sir:

I note your scathing editorials on the Boards of Censorship and I think you have started something to cause more harm and inconvenience in the moving picture business than anything yet put over on that line. Your article in the issue of June 14th is particularly illogical. You say, "I wrote way back in 1908 and said that there was no need of a censorship board," and then your whole article goes on to criticize this board because of its leniency. A somewhat absurd position. If you think the dear public want nothing but battle pictures, cowboy pictures, kid pictures and old men pictures you are badly at sea. How many trust exhibitors went independent? I am pleased to say that the latter is the case out here.

In conclusion there will be censorships enough, you can be sure of that, but that any censorship will be a nuisance and accomplish no good in the long run is simply working out of a law of nature, which makes it impossible for a few people to dictate what is good for all the people. You have said only one sensible thing, that is the people themselves are the best censors and they speedily, though unconsciously punish a transgressor who oversteps the boundaries of decency.

Yours truly,
FAMOUS FEATURE FILM SERVICE,
H. J. Brown.

This letter from Mr. Brown is no doubt sincere and he needs the runner on his film with the legend "Passed by the National Board of Censorship." If a legal board with full plenipotentiary powers had passed on some of the films mentioned in the letterhead of my correspondent a few of them here reproduced give the reason for his cry.

"The Eelskin or the Black Scourge," "Zigomar," "Lieutenant Petrosina," "Salome," "The Gunmen of New York," "A Race with Death," and a few others which have raised a storm of protest against their production, and some cities refuse to allow their exhibition, even from the people themselves, which Mr. Brown acknowledges to be the supreme test.

Alfred A. Saunders.

EDISON COMPANY GIVES PRIVATE EXHIBITION OF THEIR POLO PICTURES

A private exhibition of the polo pictures was given by the Thomas A. Edison Company at their show rooms at 10 Fifth avenue, to some of the members of the Meadowbrook Club. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Herbert, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Griswold, Mr. Geo. Milburn, brother of Devereux Milburn, the famous "back" of America's Polo Team; Mr. W. A. Hazard, secretary and treasurer of the Polo Association; Mr. H. H. Holmes, manager of Polo Club; Mr. Hugh A. Andrews, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Mr. James Hare, the famous war correspondent of Collier's Weekly; Miss Cox, Miss Mearens and others.

Mr. Johnson, representing Mr. J. D. Spencer of Australia, Mr. Clements of the Morning Telegraph and Mr. Ennis of the Clipper, were also present. Everyone in the audience expressed themselves as highly pleased with the pictures and the remarkable clearness of the various plays, the ball being easily followed all through the action.

WOLVERINE FEATURE FILM COMPANY PURCHASES "THE FATAL GROTTO" FROM ITALA

W. B. Schram, who has been operating as a state rights buyer in Michigan, will henceforth do business under the name of the Wolverine Feature Film Company, with offices at Room 209, Equity Building, Detroit, Mich. This company has purchased "The Fatal Grotto" from the Itala Film Company and may handle the Itala output in the Wolverine State. Sam Benjamin, of Chicago, has purchased the rights for "Tigris" for Iowa. Alex Wall, of Birmingham, Ala., has purchased rights for "The Great Aerial Disaster" for Alabama and Mississippi. David Mundstuk, of the M. & F. Feature Film Company, of Chicago, has contracted for the Itala output for northern Illinois. W. E. Greene, of Boston, is now booking "The Dread of Doom" and "The Fatal Grotto," as are also the Emby Feature Film Company, of New York City; Attractive Feature Film Company, of Philadelphia; Golden Gate Film Exchange, of San Francisco; Monarch Feature Film Company, of Kansas City, Mo., and the Welland Feature Film Company, of Pittsburgh.

AMERICAN MUSEUM OF SAFETY TO SHOW PICTURES AT EXPOSITION

Purposing to gain the hearty backing of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in convention of the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art at the New Grand Central Palace, New York City, week of July 7th, the American Museum of Safety will show pictures illustrating the dangers of the street, especially to children. It is the purpose of the Safety Committee to get official confirmation from the Exhibitors' League of the movement to give free demonstrations to children in or out of school hours, in convenient motion picture theatres, of the dangers of mutilation and death arising from congested conditions in the streets. Those pictures will make clear to the most jejune intelligence how and how not to get off trolley cars and other vehicles, the dangers of stealing rides and how roller skates may roll them into the grave or the hospital via crushing wheels, etc., etc.

The American Museum of Safety has been assured of the hearty co-operation of local theatre owners to show these pictures at hours of recess or at other times. The purpose is now to make this co-operation, now principally confined to New York City, nation-wide in scope. Being sure of places to exhibit the films, the Safety Committee will then go after the respective Boards of Education and persuade them to allot time in which the pupils may see with their own eyes how their little comrades lose their limbs and lives. The Safety Committee already have films illustrating street dangers, and to this library they will add.

It is the purpose of the officers of the American Museum of Safety to extend this movement further than to children only. With the financial aid of corporations having plants with machinery which exposes their workers to injury or death, they will carry this educational movement to adult minds. This method will reduce the number of cripples and lower records of mortaltiy.

ENTERTAINMENT FOR EXHIBITORS

Entertainment of length and breadth sufficient to gladden the heart of every member attending the Third Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, in connection with the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art, is formally outlined by William H. Hilkemeier, Chairman Entertainment and Reception Committee.

Monday

By courtesy of the Universal Film Company sightseeing buses will run from the Grand Central Palace to the offices of the Universal Company, Mecca Building, where the directors of the Universal Company will be introduced. The buses will proceed to Fort Lee, N. J. where one of the Universal studios will be visited; from thence to Palisades Park. Joe Brant, assistant treasurer of the Universal Company, has arranged for a dancing and swimming contest.

Tuesday

The Thomas A. Edison Company will take visitors on sightseeing automobiles through New York City. The first section will start at 9 o'clock, the second at 11, and the third at 3.

Wednesday

The General Film Company will invite its friends to attend the baseball game at the Polo Grounds between the New York Giants and the Chicago Cubs.

Boost the Convention and Exhibition

Grand Central Palace July 7th to 12th

Thursday

The Kalem Company will entertain at their Aerodrome Studio, Cliffside Park, N. J.

Friday

This will be Vitagraph day, and the entertainment will be given at the Vitagraph Studios. Mr. S. M. Spedon, assisted by Mr. Victor Smith and "Pop" Rock, will assist in receiving. In the evening the New York exhibitors will give a shore dinner at the Shelbourne Hotel and Casino at Brighton Beach. Speakers will be Governor William A. Sulzer; Governor Cox, of Ohio, ex-Senator; Mayor Gaynor, District-Attorney Whitman, and other notables.

The Mutual Film Corporation have given toward the entertainment fund $550 for use of automobile hire during the week. The Warner Feature Film Company has also provided the use of two large automobiles for the week.

FAMOUS PLAYERS CONVENTION BALL

On the evening of July 10th, Thursday of Convention week, the Famous Players Film Company will give a ball in their big studio at 213 West Twenty-sixth street, in honor of the delegates of the First International Exposition of the Motion Picture Art in conjunction with the Third Annual Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of America. The studio of the Famous Players will be converted into a ballroom elaborately decorated and equipped with every possible agency for comfort and pleasure. Refreshments will be served, good music will be provided, and several leading stars of the day will entertain the guests. Every one in any manner connected with the exposition and convention will be welcome. Details will follow later.

COPY OF LETTER RECEIVED FROM GENERAL FILM COMPANY

200 Fifth Avenue

(Dated) New York, June 19, 1913.

Mr. Samuel H. Trigger,
136 Third Avenue,
New York City.

Dear Mr. Trigger:

I have been authorized by the officers of the General Film Company to say that we will be glad to contribute 1,500 tickets of admission to the baseball game between the New York Giants and the Chicago Clubs, on Wendesday afternoon, July 9th, and $2,000 towards the expense of tendering a banquet to the visiting exhibitors. This decision was reached after we had gone into the subject exhaustively and given due consideration to the other expense to which we are put in connection with the exposition and convention.

The convention of last year cost the General Film Company $2,000. It looks as if the New York Convention and Exposition held at the same time would cost us nearly $15,000. We have put $3,000 into space, $1,000 into the decorating of our booth on the ground floor, over $1,000 more into novelties, $100 into your official program; in order to make our theatre presentable we may have to spend $1,000 there; we will provide the tickets to the ball game and make the cash contribution towards the expense of the banquet, and even after all this we propose to group into small parties those of the visiting delegates to whom we feel particularly obligated, and to entertain them in our own way without making any special display of the method.

I hope you and your committee will consider the support we are offering as satisfactory, and remain,

Yours very truly,
GENERAL FILM COMPANY,
(Signed) L. W. McChesney,
Advertising Manager.

MR. F. J. REMBUSCH

President of the Mirror Screen Co., who will be at the Exposition and Convention to welcome his many customers and friends.

VITAGRAPH NOTES

Friday afternoon, July 11th, has been set aside by the Vitagraph Company of America for the reception of guests of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League, who wish to visit the studies and inspect its plant, where a cordial welcome will be extended.

The banquet and reception to be given by the Motion Picture Exhibitors League will be held at Reisenweber's Casino, Brighton Beach, in the evening. After visiting the Vitagraph studios, the visitors can take the Brighton Beach Railroad at the Elm Avenue station at any time, reaching the Casino in ample time for the evening's festivities.

On Wednesday evening, July 9th, the Vitagraph players will visit the Exposition Building, Grand Central Palace, where they will be pleased to meet all their friends and greet those who may wish to know them personally. This evening has been appointed for the Vitagraph players so that those desiring a personal introduction may be assured of their presence at the Exposition Building.

New Carlisle, Ind.—Don Graffort, of La Porte, will open a first-class moving picture show in the Stites Building.

San Fernando, Cal.—L. C. Brand states that the Mission Land Co. will soon begin the erection of an opera house on Brand Boulevard.

Clarence, Mo.—C. C. Culver has purchased the moving picture outfit from J. B. Rice and will continue the shows at the Culver Opera House.

Quincy, Ill.—W. H. Peterson, former proprietor of the Sixth street Colonial theatre, has taken charge of the Bijou theatre and will open same for business at once.

Turlock, Cal.—Architect W. H. Weeks, of San Francisco, has prepared plans for a $45,000 theatre to be built on Main street by a syndicate that will at once incorporate.

Philadelphia, Pa.—J. R. Jackson has been awarded the contract for moving picture theatre to be built at Fifty-fourth and Baltimore avenues for Forts and Smith. R. Werner, architect.

CHEMISTRY AND NATURAL PHILOSOPHY

By Wray Bartlett Physioc

In motion photography, as in other arts, are found two classes of persons—the artists and the mere mechanics. Whether the brush or the camera be employed, this distinction equally holds. The time is not far distant when the perfect handling of the latter will be acknowledged to be not less difficult than the former; and indifferent as the past repute of motion photography has been, and dishonored as it has too often been by ignoramuses and charlatans, I believe it will, ere long, be regarded as a sphere wherein the most artistic geniuses might find ample scope for their powers.

Motion photography is based upon chemistry and natural philosophy; and the camera man who would master all departments of his profession must be versed to a considerable extent in both these branches of knowledge. But to deal familiarly with sciences as boundless as the world, and to be able to pierce through the ofttime thick mass of material outward and discern the inner, spiritual self, and then to represent that self by such a delicate management of a single implement, as shall cast peculiarly tempered lights and shadows upon the face or form, adapted by an almost inspired idea of composition, with its assessories to receive them aright; are performances like these within the capacity of a dull and ignorant camera man? Or do they not rather demand both genius and talent—genius and talent, too, thoroughly instructed and disciplined by prolonged, careful study, observation and experiment? For a first class camera man, all these qualities and acquirements are, in my view, essential.

Unlike other artists, and even artisans, the camera men in the motion picture business have not formed associations for advancing their art and securing their own reciprocal benefit, but have maintained a selfish isolation, or, worse still, a semi-hostile attitude toward each other. In fact, to a degree unparalleled among other professions and callings within my knowledge, the camera men have been chargeable with bickerings and clashes; with covert attacks and contumelious insinuations of one against another, while they have rarely recognized each other's professional desserts or rightful standing.

Among the many camera men operating in this country there are very few genuine artists, and the number of motion pictures are scanty which win approval in photography from those competent to judge of their merits.

Now, all those who feel sincerely interested in motion photography must desire to see this deplorable state of affairs rectified. Let us attempt to ascertain from what causes it sprang, as such knowledge must precede all endeavors to amend it.

A principal cause lies, I believe, in the fact that, heretofore, a number of camera men have adopted this vocation from motives purely mercenary. Their desire is to make money more rapidly and avoid manual labor, which seems less easy and genteel than the practice of the artistic. This is discredible to many concerned. The impression has gone abroad that operating a moving picture camera is the easiest of all vocations. both to acquire and to practice. Hence, numbers, not merely of the illiterate and undisciplined, but of dullards without a spark of the artistic nature, have rushed into this profession from the exclusively mercenary impulses above named.

Other motives of a far different quality are needed to urge him forward and sustain him in the toils and sacrifices and endurances which the attainment of artistic recognition will certainly exact of him.

The principal motive, and an absolute sine qua non, is a love for the art itself. Without this, I would advise everyone who is not conscious of this intense and sustained love of motion photography. on its own account, to take up any other vocation than the practice of this, be such other as it may.

When camera men possessing these motives adopt the profession, and all besides abandon, or are driven from the field where they were not made to shine, then will motion photography and its camera men assume the honorable position which both ought to hold.

The most important thing, however, is that all camera men should love their art: and should strive to raise it to the highest possible standard, and when these exist and act all else desirable will follow in course.

MOTION PICTURES FOR COMMERCIAL PURPOSES

Much has been and is said about the educational features of the motion picture shows, but there is another feature which is rapidly gaining popularity, and that is the advertising feature. The motion picture way of advertising has far-reaching results inasmuch as the advertisements thrown on the screen reach many people and at a nominal expense.

Recently at a meeting of the Joliet, Illinois, Advertising Club an interesting lecture on cotton in its various uses was interestingly illustrated by moving pictures. C. D. Heller, advertising manager of Marshall Field and Company, of Chicago, who delivered the lecture, was greatly aided by a series of motion pictures, illustrating all phases of the work, through the various looms and other cotton mill machinery. Mr. Heller explained that the pictures shown were originally designed for the employees of the retail and wholesale store. However, the pictures had such great educational possibilities that they have been shown about the country and have been wonderfully popular. The pictures are shown in sections with a running fire of explanatory talk from the lecturer. There are many hundreds, possibly thousands of operations necessary in the production of cotton goods, ginghams, blankets, yarns, etc. There is a continuity in both the pictures and the lectures, so that the imagination is readily carried along in a comprehensive manner. A touch of human interest is also thrown upon the screen in the scenes of southern life, showing the colored people at play; also their home life, etc. The great mills of North Carolina are also depicted, both interior and exterior.

We were the first to score the picture dealing with the assassination of Abraham Lincoln. We have received many letters commending our attitude. In these days of easily accessible public libraries, there is little excuse for the filming of inaccurate historical subjects. When a historical script is purchased from an outside contributor it should be the editorial duty to verify the action by historical text-books. When the manuscript is true to history, it should also be the duty of the director to produce a picture true to the text. In several instances the director has changed the historical plot, introducing action that "appealed to him." Then when the historical release contains ludicrous blunders it is not the director who gets the censure —it is invariably the author and editor who have to shoulder the blame. Care and study should be taken in the writing, editing and producing of historical plots.

In Cleveland, O., Mayor Baker has taken great interest in moving pictures. It is an interest, however, that is foreign to knowledge of cinematography. It is said that the Mayor never attends a picture show. In eight years there has been no court record showing that films are not according to law. Yet the Cleveland exhibitors have been ordered around like slaves. When the three State censors get busy, the unfortunate exhibitors not only of Cleveland, but the entire State, will be caught between the upper and nether millstones. We see no reason to change our attitude taken at the very beginning of the lobbying at Columbus, O. The majority of Ohio exhibitors resent the foisting of three "Little Old Men of the Sea" upon their shoulders and they appreciate that it will not be the exchanges, but it will be the Ohio exhibitors, who will be obliged to pay about $12,000 yearly in order to keep three favored Democrats in soft political berths. Mayor Baker, the Cleveland enemy of motion pictures, is the chief political advisor of Governor Cox.

"The play's the thing" no longer. The picture's the thing. We remember that a few years ago, the theatrical promoter when interviewed asserted that the popularity of moving pictures was only transitory, just a flash in the pan, as it were. Alas, how a few years have changed that lordly opinion. Within the past few months there has been a scramble of theatrical magnates to get in on a good thing and even David Belasco has condescended to visit a moving picture studio and direct a picture. Truly, times have changed. Five years ago. had you invited the haughty Thespian to pose, he would have shrieked aloud about "defiling his art." To-day, all the twinkling luminaries in the theatrical orbit delight to do honor to Cinematography. And there is room for them all. Even a late conversion is better than none at all. New forms and faces have added interest to the moving picture screen, just as the filming of meritorious plays have added dignity and entertainment to the industry. And the moving picture theatre, long considered as a gaudy adjunct to the city streets, has come into its own. Side by side with the regular theatre of past grandeur, it entertains audiences of the highest class. Moving pictures are no longer "in their infancy." They have flourished like unto a green bay tree, and the end is not yet.

LOVE IN THE DARK

By VIRGINIA WEST

(Adapted from Kinemacolor Release)

A GREAT wall of jagged rocks arose from the side of the road near the Benson home. All day long the drills worked into the solid rock that the powder might do its greater work. Twice a day the fuses were lighted and the shattered rocks flew in every direction. The cries of the running workmen and the red flags stationed along the roads gave full warning of the coming blasts.

Bertha Benson was in the habit of walking through the fields at the top of the cliff. She was well aware of the time and methods of work in the excavation and of the danger at blasting time, therefore she was careful never to cross the fields close to the danger line at any time but when she knew it was perfectly safe.

One afternoon she left home to visit a friend across the field. "Have you time to go that way?" asked her mother.

Bertha looked at her watch and replied, "Oh, yes, it is an hour before blasting time. Don't worry, mother. There is no danger."

Bertha was just at the edge of the cliff when suddenly she heard a cry and immediately a deafening noise almost under her feet. The earth seemed to sink beneath her and the rocks whirled through the air around her head. An arm reached out and drew her to firm ground. Then she knew no more.

When Bertha returned to consciousness everything was dark and she was in bed.

"How long have I been here, mother?" she asked.

"You have been here three days, dear," was the mother's answer.

"What was the matter? What happened?"

"The engineer said that there was a misunderstanding with one of the men and the blast was set off too soon.

"Why is my head tied up, mother? Was it hurt?"

"Yes, Bertha, dear. If it had not been for the young engineer in charge you would have been killed. He drew you back just in time."

The young girl was quiet for a time before she added: "Why don't you light the gas? It seems a long time since I have seen you, mother."

It was the mother's time to be quiet. She did not answer.

Bertha insisted.

"It is daylight, dear," her mother answered, tremulously.

"Then my eyes are hurt! I have been blinded! Oh, mother!" cried Bertha.

"Have courage," comforted Mrs. Benson. "The doctor says he has no doubt that you will get your sight again if you will only do as he says."

"Oh, I will, I will. I will do anything he says if I only can be made to see again," sobbed the girl.

Every assurance was given the Bensons that Bertha should see as well as she ever did if she would only keep her eyes bandaged while they were undergoing treatment. This she promised faithfully to do.

So when Robert Andrews, the young engineer in charge of the excavating, came to call and ask concerning Bertha, she received him with her eyes covered.

"Tell me, Mr. Andrews, please, just how the whole thing happened. Mother tried to tell me but I want to hear it first hand."

"It was the fault of a stupid workman," he answered. "He thought I told him that everything was all right to light the fuse, when I simply said that his placing of it was all right. I thought he knew that it was not to be lighted for an hour."

"How did you happen to be so close to me?" she asked.

"I had gone back of those bushes on top of the cliff to see where a danger flag had better be placed, for the explosion was to be near the top where it had not been for a very long time, and I knew that people were in the habit of crossing the fields."

"Yes."

"I was returning and was just behind the bushes nearest the edge when I heard the cry of the man to those below. I ran and reached you just as the rocks gave way beneath your feet. If it had not been for that tough sod you would have gone down."

Tears ran down from beneath the bandage. "How can I ever thonk you, Mr. Andrews. You have saved my life.

"Don't try to thank me. It is enough that I was there to do it. I am so thankful for that. But you must keep the tears back," he added, "for they will hurt your eyes. My great regret is that I was not able to save you from every injury.

"They promise me that I shall see again soon," she told him.

"Thank God for that!" Robert Andrews exclaimed fervently. "You will let me come again, won't you?" he asked as he was leaving.

"I should be so glad to have you," she answered frankly. "It is rather lonely here in the dark."

Then I shall come often and not give you time to get lonely."

The young engineer came as he promised, and the visits grew more and more frequent. In the half light where they were obliged to sit on account of Bertha's eyes, they began to exchange confidences, until, one day, Robert confided to the girl the greatest secret of his life.

"Perhaps I seem too hasty," he said, "but there is something so intimate in the twilight. My love has only ripened more quickly. I knew that I would love you the day I carried you home. Can you love me, Bertha?"

She put her hand confidingly in his. "Yes," she answered, "and I haven't even seen you."

"When will you marry me?" he urged.

When I have my sight again. I do not know when that will be."

"I am content to wait."

They sat in silence for a time, happy in the knowledge of their love. Then Bertha turned toward Robert with a smile. "Are you handsome?" she asked.

"I have been told so," he laughed, "but I think it was flattery. Suppose you found me very ugly; what would you do?"

"You could not be ugly to me," she told him, "for in the darkness I have seen deeper than physical beauty."

A few days later Robert told his fiancee that he must leave her for a while. He had been called away on another piece of work, and he was obliged to go.

"I have brought you my photograph," he said, "and if your sight returns before I come back, you will know what I look like."

"It will be the first thing my eyes shall look upon," she promised.

This conversation was heard by one who had no right to hear it. Among the young engineers connected with the excavating work was one who had admired Bertha at a distance since before she was injured. On the day that Robert said good-bye to her Hendricks had come to her home to bring his chief a telegram which had just come for him. Hearing the conversation through an open window, and at once taking in the situation, his mind quickly formed a plan.

Hendricks did not enter the house, but waited outside to deliver the telegram.

When Robert had left town his subordinate acted quickly. Having watched his opportunity, he slipped noiselessly through a long window into Bertha's room and exchanged for Robert's picture one of his own. Then he waited for the time when Bertha would be able to see the photograph.

Of course, Hendricks knew that there was danger of Robert's return before Bertha received her sight, but he was willing to take the risk.

At last the day came when the doctor said the bandage might be removed. Robert had not returned and Berhta longed to gaze upon his picture. With fast beating heart she asked to be alone when she first opened her eyes.

Her request was granted. With her eyes closed she made her way to her desk. Holding the picture before her she looked upon what she thought to be the face of her lover.

"Robert," she whispered, but in her voice was a slight shade of disappointment.

Bertha put away the picture again, feeling that she did not wish her secret known yet, even by her mother.

From that day the injured eyes steadily improved, until, in a week, they were back again to their normal condition.

Bertha began to resume her walks through the woods and fields, taking care to keep away from the site of her injury. Especially did she frequent the woodland path by which Robert had been in the habit of coming to her home. Each day she hoped to meet him, for he had promised to return as soon as he possibly could.

One day she suddenly met here the man whose picture was in her possession. He stepped forward and took her in his arms. "Bertha, I am so happy that you are well again," he said. "Will you not kiss me, dear?"

But Bertha did not lift her head.

"Are you not glad I have come back?" he asked .

"Yes, I am glad."

"Then why don't you kiss me?"

"I—I don't know, Robert."

"You don't know?"

"No," she answered almost tearfully. "I don't know. Perhaps it is the strangeness of seeing you for the first time. Perhaps it will be different after awhile."

Why she felt differently in the presence of this man just because she could see him Bertha could not understand. She went over and over in her mind the way she had felt in Robert's presence before he went away and now.

Hendricks urged her to meet him in the woods each day, and because she had not yet told her secret, she consented to do so.

Every time they met the man tried to persuade her into a secret marriage. "I must go away again in a few days, and I do not want to leave you behind," he argued.

"I will tell you day after to-morrow when I will marry you," she promised.

But the next day was the turning-point in Bertha's life. She went as usual to meet her lover, and they strolled hand in hand along the path.

"Won't you tell me now when we are to be married, Bertha?" he pleaded.

She looked up and was about to answer when they heard a crackling of twigs as someone came along the path.

Then, face to face with them, came Robert Andrews. "Bertha!" he cried in surprise, "What does this mean? What am I to think when I find you with your hand in that of this man?"

Bertha was trembling violently. "What right have you to speak to me so? Who are you?" she asked weakly.

"I have every right. I have the right you yourself gave me. I am Robert Andrews."

"Then who is this man?"

"That is Sam Hendrickson. Why don't you speak, you cad? What have you done—pretended you were Robert Andrews? Bertha, did you not have my picture?"

"The picture I had was of this man. Oh, what has happened?" asked Bertha in distress.

Hendricks had remained silent until now. He turned to Bertha and said: "This man is lying to you. I am Robert Andrews. The fact that I gave you my picture should tell you that."

Bertha looked from one to the other in an agony of uncertainty.

"Bertha, dear," pleaded Robert, "does not your heart tell you the truth?"

"Oh, I don't know what I feel. I have had such strange mixed feelings since my sight returned that I almost wish I could not see. Oh!" she cried, brightening suddenly. "I will blindfold myself, and perhaps I can feel as I did then."

Robert quickly handed her his handkerchief and she as quickly bound it over her eyes. Both men stood silently watching her.

"One of you give me your hand, please."

Both men reached toward her at one time. For a moment she held the hand of each, feeling them gently and earnestly.

"Just a moment, please," she said, dropping Hendricks' hand. Then she made a thorough examination of Robert's. She felt it carefully on palm and back, finally rubbing it against her face.

"May I—may I please touch your face?" she asked, her voice trembling.

Eagerly Robert stepped close to her.

She felt his lips, his eyelids, his hair. Her lips trembled as she said "I—I—think I—know."

Robert seized her in his arms and pressed his lips to hers. "Oh, my darling, you must know, you must know."

"Now I know!" she cried. "If you had only kissed me at first!"

"But how could I with that scoundrel holding your hand?"

They turned to see how Hendricks was taking his defeat, but he had disappeared.

RODMAN LAW IN DEATH'S SHORT CUT

The sensational Reliance drama in which Rodman Law made his daring plunge over Still Water Falls in an open boat will be released on Saturday, July 5th, in one reel.

SCENE FROM "DEATH'S SHORT CUT"

Three alert camera men succeeded in catching him from different angles and the result is a splendid climax to a very unusual story of the Maine lumber camps.

MR. J. WILD WITH THE KINETO COMPANY

Mr. J. Wild, who was for some time assistant to Mr. J. D. Tippitt, manager of Union Features, is now connected with the American Kineto Company as assistant to Mr. S. H. Bishop, the manager.

This is a new company who are handling the following well known brands of European features: Peerless, Columbus, Ajax and Empress.

He came to this country last year as agent for the New Century Film Service of London, and left them to join the Union Features. Mr. Wild will be pleased to hear from all state rights buyers at Room 1018, Longacre Building, Broadway and Forty-second street. We wish him every success in his new position.

For Those Who Worry O'er Plots and Plays

About Literary Reputation

IN the world of fiction writing a literary reputation is much to be desired; it means money to the author. A story by Rex Beach, Sir Gilbert Parker or Rudyard Kipling, is worth a great deal more money than a yarn by John Jones, notwithstanding that John Jones may be writing just as good stuff. If John Jones writes good stuff he will be paid for it. But he will likely toil along for some years before his copy is as valuable to a magazine as the copy of Jack London and Sir A. Conan Doyle. The line: "A New Story by Rudyard Kipling," for instance, means more money to a publication than a line: "A New Story by John Jones." Jones has his literary reputation to make no matter high-class his work is. Of course, there are exceptions. Booth Tarkington left Princeton University, went home to Indianapolis, and submitted "The Gentleman from Indiana" to McClure's. It boosted him along the headliners almost immediately. The public fell head over heels in love with his charming novel. Now let us take Tarkington, Doyle, and the rest into the script-writing game. Their reputations as fiction writers will not, or should not, carry them so far in the art of pictureplay writing. The headliners in the fiction field may get fat prices for one or more picture plots, but if they fail to turn out the "reel" stuff, the film manufacturers will soon tire of paying them for doubtful material. The public, taught to look for something good, will quickly turn to an appealing pictureplay even if it does not carry the name of the authors of one of the six best sellers under the film title. In other words, the writer of pictureplays must stand by his own oars. He has a reputation to acquire and sustain, it is true, but that reputation for good script-writing must be made with the script editors and not the novel reading girl. In the averaging up of things, the obscure writer of pictureplay plots stands just as good a show of obtaining his price for consistently good scripts as would the Doyles, Londons and the rest. Maybe not right at the jump, but unless the fiction stars can make a creditable showing in the script-writing game, the editors necessarily must recognize and foster the other fellows. We know of a recent instance where a script editor opened an envelope and it contained the first script of a fiction writing luminary. His name is a household word. It was his first script because it bore the earmarks thereof, not needing his assertion to that effect, although the statement accompanied the script. Right underneath it was an envelope which contained the first offering of a woman unknown to the editor. Her script was strikingly original and had merit. It was purchased and the fiction writer's script was returned to him, much to his indignation. In conclusion, it is not what you have accomplished in other branches of literary work that counts for so much in the pictureplay writing profession. Nor is it what you have done in the past in the script-writing game that counts. It is what you are doing right now. Your work must be kept up to standard and you rise or fall by almost every script turned out and submitted. We favor crediting deserving authors on the screen. It pleases the author and gives him rightful credit for his ability. However, we have serious doubts whether this action will ever result in the unusual exploitation of any individual script writers. There are too many of them, and the writer of one or two successful plays may strike the popular fancy just as strongly if not more so, than the prolific writer. The writer of many plays is certain to have an individual method or field, that sooner or later may grow monotonous to the audiences when they learn to distinguish work by screen credit. There is little chance of any script writer becoming the Conan Doyle of filmland. But just the same, we should like to see a fair field and no favor. Work to get a reputation with the editors for uniformly good scripts. This is probably the only reputation you will ever have—and it is all that you need—if you sell your scripts. We know of one well-known script writer who recently concluded to try out for himself the problem of reputation. He has written and sold sixteen scripts the past sixty days using three assumed names and addresses. He asserts that it is not "pull" or "favoritism" that counts in the reputable editorial departments—it's the scripts. And he is dead right. He is getting the money, is free from any possible entanglements and is content.

Newspaper "Question Boxes"

"Question Boxes" are being conducted in certain newspapers for script writers. Of all the misleading information ever ladled out these "Question Boxes" are the worst. One seeker after information is given this advice: "Just start to writing; it isn't very hard to turn out a scenario. When completed mail to the General Film Company."

The Right Spirit

These letters show the right spirit for determination and augur for success sometime, somewhere. A Cincinnati correspondent writes:

"I am aboard the same boat with the brother writer from New Orleans; we are both destined for the same point called 'Success,' and we'll reach that point some future time if we follow your compass, the News. I have also a little motto: 'It's better late than never,' and we'll reach the famed city of Success or bust, by heck! I have written over twenty scripts with the same result, returned with marked rejection slip. I am pleased to tell you how good I felt when I read the letter from New Orleans, which told me that I was not the only one attempting to sail to the city of Successful Pictureplay writing, and when the boat of authorship is about to be dashed on the rocks of discouragement, Mr. Wright tugs at the ship's sides and steers us into the right path again."

Then comes the letter from Hohokus, N. J.:

"For the first time to-day I read an issue of the News and I certainly must say that I have missed something before to-day. Especially was I impressed with the 'personal' letter from a New Orleans reader. Perhaps it will be a balm to him to know that there are others who feel just as he does—some more novices waiting for a ray of sunshine to break through. I also have other occupations and write more for that 'something within' that calls for it—the fascination of achievement covers it. Be strong of heart, brother, we'll get there yet, if plugging will do it. I also read with delight the article by Miss Justice and believe me, she knows whereof she speaks. Be sure that you have acquired another constant reader."

There are thousands of writers like the above correspondents, who are toiling along the path of literary endeavor. They compose the rank and file of the great script writers' army. We admire the man or woman of pluck. The never-say-die spirit is certain to win sooner or later. Keep on trying to excel! Spurn discouragement! Be optimistic! Here's hoping, yes, predicting future success for many of the rank and file!

Quo Vadis

A successful script writer went to see Quo Vadis. She writes in: "It is without question the biggest picture ever staged. I have seen it twice. Each time it inspired me. Every writer of scripts should make it a point to see this picture and others of real worth. One returns to work with renewed ambition to write that which is elevating, clean and refined." This is mighty good advice; that is why we publish the statement.

The "Loose Screw"

"As yet I have been able to find a market for but one story and, though I feel there must be a 'screw loose' somewhere as the reason I am not able to sell more, yet the notice you have taken of me has made it possible for me to keep at it in an untiring effort to locate, if possible, the 'loose screw,' dig it out, and replace it with one that will stick and hold my narratives firmly together until the end that they will be able to endure the severe test of the editorial departments." A Chicago beginner writes the above. Is there a "screw loose" in your work, dear reader? Honestly, is there? Maybe you carefully follow out the accepted script form with your title, cast, synopsis and scenic action. Then you send in the script and it is rejected. Ah, there's a "screw loose." But where is it? The editors have no time to explain, and you can only struggle along the best you can. Every writer has an occasional screw loose in a plot. The beginner is the more frequently troubled. When we have a "screw loose" in an otherwise good plot, we take that plot structure carefully apart. We carefully examine the structure from "cellar to attic." If the first floor is firm, perhaps we find a board loose in the second story or frequently a shingle is faulty right at the top of the building. You build your script something like a house. There is the beginning and the ending. There are the connections within the structure which must be right. Then the embellishments, the location, the architectural form, all must be consistent and perfect. Maybe your technical form is correct, but you have no story to tell; maybe you once had a story but have tried to become too technical and have lost the idea in a maze of inserts, subtitles and "visions." Maybe the plot is too ancient, action too lengthy, text too verbose; maybe—oh, there's a hundred little things that in the aggregate may spoil the sale of a script! Take it apart; try and discover the imperfections; try a new angle on that plot you thought the best ever; work until you discover that "loose screw." If you look carefully you will find it, and tighten it, and the labor will be of great benefit to you.

Pertinent Pointers

Tact is also a mighty good acquisition for the playwright.

Don't write scripts especially for Billy Quirk, John Bunny or Maurice Costello. Maybe they will not prove available. Write with the general market in view.

A three-hundred-word synopsis should cover a two-reel script. However, be clear, even if more words are essential. We wrote and sold a two-reel script recently with a ninety-word synopsis.

In writing two-reel stuff we number our scenes consecutively right through the script separating the two-part script with the caption "Part Two."

Dialogue and description are only for the writer of fiction. You build pictureplay plots.

Ideas are everywhere if you know where to go after them. When you get an idea for a plot write it down immediately in your notebook. Do not trust to memory.

Too much technique is worse than too little. Many a good script has been ruined by too close adherence to a book of rules. Theory is all right but practice is better.

Don't attempt literary work when physically exhausted. Why not change about? Do your plot building before you start in with your daily occupation, if you have one? Brain work is a queer proposition, and ideas refuse to come after a hard day in the shop, store or factory.

Seven days have passed and we have not received a letter from some author complaining that his or her idea was stolen by some conscienceless producer. Two times out of three the idea you think so original is not original at all.

The lost memory plot has come into its own again. Selig released one the other day, and it was written by an author supposed to know better. Avoid the loss of memory angle. It was used in the time of King David.

Do not submit costume plays. Do not write on both sides of the paper. Do not send your scripts out without a stamped self-addressed envelope. Do not write personal letters to the editor, particularly insincere letters of flattery. Do not—but what's the use?

There are many kinds of plots; surprise; problems; mystery; emotion; contrast; symbolism. A good plot consists of simplicity; plausibility; originality; climax and interest.

Scripts are considered the day they arrive by several editorial departments. Vitagraph, for example, has two trained readers other than Mrs. Breuil, the editor, and they can judge a great many plots in the course of a day. A promising script relieves the monotony of reading and causes joy in any editorial department.

Don't turn everything you ever heard or read of into pictureplay plots, and rush them over the circuit. Too many do this in the first flush of enthusiasm. Work slowly and carefully, avoid hasty development; choose your ideas deliberately and try and study out the cause for your rejection slips. Script-writing is not a profession to plunge into haphazardly.

Do not join any "association of pictureplaywrights."

EDITORIAL ETCHINGS

R. D. Armstrong, the American's first script editor, is back again. He asks for one, two and three-reel stories.

A. W. Thomas is in charge of the pictureplay departments of the rejuvenated Photoplay Magazine.

Frederick Isham and Forrest Halsey are the latest fiction writing stars to enter the pictureplay writing profession. Reliance put 'em up to it.

E. J. Hudson, editor and author, has left the Universal Weekly and Joe Brandt will assume the paste and shears once again.

It is hinted that Hal Reid, now editor of the Animated Weekly, will resign that position and embark more largely in the script writing game. Report not verified, however.

B. P. Schulberg, Famous Players Company editor, recently left with a charming bride for Niagara Falls, that mecca for Newlyweds.

Calder Johnson is taking hold in the Universal Clearing House, and doing the best he can despite arbitrary rulings from the Higherups. He is being ably assisted by C. B. Hoadley, who is always there with the goods. Then Jack Byrnes is with Universal, and Captain Leslie T. Peacock, an old and experienced script writer, is proving valuable to Universal. George Hall has left the Universal script department for a director's berth.

Mrs. Brandon, who has been a reader in the Universal script department, has left that concern.

Walter MacNamara, well-known editor and author, who has turned out some of the best Easter stuff lately, may reconsider his determination to embark in the manufacturing end of the film game and return to authorship. There is a general demand for his services.

An Excellent Record

"My stuff may be worthless but it possesses at least the virtue of being original with myself and out of my own brain," writes one of our readers. Such stuff is not worthless. It is almost certain to hit the bull's-eye some time. A plagiarist is devoid of originality.

Can Cite a Few

A very successful author of pictureplays says: "I try and be a good observer, keep my mouth shut, attend to business, and study what the directors and editors wish for. Not enough attention is paid to the stories of releases published in trade journals. These are invaluable to me. All roads lead to production in this business. But if you can pave the way with tact, so much the better. However, the time must come when the producer will follow the finished script of the author and the editor. With one or two exceptions here and there in a script, I have been unusually fortunate in this respect—but I can cite quite a few film companies whose producers' individualities stand out in every play they produce—and they have begun to sink in a rut." This is a fact that has been noticed by other students of the screen. In fact the trade marks of some two or three directors are indelibly stamped on almost every picture they turn out. These pictures lack individuality and show the well known characteristics of these directors over and over. A new deal all around is essential.

Dusting Them Off

We hear that the winning scripts in the Powers prize contest have been dusted off and read over again. Produce them and give the authors credit, as promised, or it is up to Universal to admit that the contest was not conducted fairly.

Essanay Needs

Mrs. Louella O. Parsons, editor script department of the Essanay Film Mfg. Co., Chicago, writes that the company is in the market for comedies of five hundred and a thousand feet; for strong dramatic stories of one and two reels; and for original melodramas. Essanay does not care for costume plays or scripts with foreign settings. Contributors are afforded courteous attention from Mrs. Parsons and her assistants, but only the highest class work is acceptable to the Essanay Company.

What It Costs

Those who think they can "borrow" a plot from some copyrighted novel, story or play should take notice of this little occurrence. W. A. Brady and George Broadhurst have brought suit against a film company over the alleged infringement of the copyright of "Bought and Paid For." Federal authorities have taken possession of a film which the plaintiff said made use of situations from the Brady play. Brady seeks to recover $5,000. Maybe the film company was not to blame for the reason that some contributor wrote the plot which was accepted in good faith. However the case may be, let this prove a warning to others to stay clear of any possible litigation.

WM. LORD WRIGHT.

JUST GOSSIP
By The Mahoney

"Man's inhumanity to man makes countless millions mourn."

While we are ready to admit that the responsible heads of any enterprise, employing numbers of auxiliaries, have much to contend with, after sane and thoughtful consideration we can find no reasonable excuse for them to entirely forget that their own previous existence, in many cases, was not always a garden of roses, and that just a little consideration, on the part of those in power, for the feelings of others less fortunate, would save many a heartache.

Apropos of the above, we happened into the office of a manufacturer of motion pictures a few days ago, where a vast assemblage of theatrical folk were congregated, eagerly awaiting to be called upon to participate in a picture about to be filmed, under the auspices of an actor fairly well known.

Among the waiting throng of thespians was a stage director who, only a few years back, was in great and constant demand, and could name his own price to the magnates controlling the theatrical situation, when they required the services of a responsible and inventive stage director, who could take a manuscript, analyze it, and make it possible for production. This man, like many others who have failed to keep abreast of the times, is now in the sere and yellow of his histrionic career, and has fallen behind his more progressive and resourceful followers, who lack in every way the ability and cleverness of their predecessor.

The actor above mentioned, who was about to film the picture, and this stage director had known one another quite intimately in days past, and it had been a privilege for the latter to place the former in one of the first important engagements he ever held.

Trading on the principle of a slight obligation, he applied to his erstwhile protégé for employment in his contemplated picture, and received the positive assurance that he would be placed. He was told to call the next day, which he did. He waited for several hours and accomplished nothing. The same condition of affairs prevailed the following day, and for several days after, without result.

The picture had been filmed in the meantime, and his old friend, the director, entirely overlooked.

How soon we forget.

Of John Bunny it can truthfully be recorded he is in the golden era of his life.

It has been said that every old thing becomes useful at some time if we will only keep it long enough.

John realized this, and nurtured, cherished and treasured that laughter provoking "mug" of his, waited with patience and resignation, until at last it has proven a veritable mine of ingots.

In the past engagements came to him at only intermittent periods. Not because John is not an accomplished, gifted and versatile follower of Momus, for his performance some years ago of "Bottom," in "Midsummer Night's Dream," stamped him as a master of the classics, and one of the most intelligent readers of blank verse it has been our privilege to listen to.

But John was hard to fit in dramatic work, and "Bottoms" are scarce in the comedy market. Besides, John's peculiar personality requires a certain species of comedy "Bottoms" not always obtainable.

The Cinematography art has been most generous to John, for idleness is now unknown to him, and his "phiz" is in such great demand that he scarcely has a moment to use it for anything else but exhibition purposes.

A master of any profession, trade or calling can readily be recognized by his fellow experts.

Herman Schlicker, whose image is presented herewith, is recognized and acknowledged as a master of the technique of Cinematography by all of his fellows when they speak truthfully and without prejudice.

Mr. Schlicker is of German birth and lineage, his early education being accomplished in the severe technical institutions of the Kaiser's domain.

After matriculating in the primary schools of his birthplace, from which he graduated with highest honors, he entered the Technical Gevverbe Schule at Berlin, where he acquired distinction.

Mastering the gamut of the various severe tests of the Berlin institution of learning, he registered at Die Technicum, Ilmenau, from which world-famous college of mechanical and scientific training he was immediately selected, over a score and more applicants, to succeed to a prominent position in the great mechanical industry of Alfred Duskes.

His skilled efforts here were productive of various mechanical appliances and improvements of great value to the house of Duskes, giving more prominence to this already famous industry in the world of science and mechanics.

Hampered by his surroundings, his environment grew irksome, so he transferred his faculty for invention to the Deutsche Bioscope, and later to the Vitascope of Berlin.

His fame as a technician next attracted attention of those in control of the industry in England, whither he journeyed, and his master hand was soon strongly in evidence.

Four years ago, comparatively unknown and unheralded, he came to America, where he entered the field of the Cinematography art, and is now admittedly one of the true experts of the scientific and mechanical departments.

He is a perfect wizard of the camera, and as an operator is without a peer. He can detect at a glance any fault in its delicate mechanism and remedy it, no matter how puzzling.

Since his advent here he has designed, arranged and constructed four of the most complete and perfect plants in this country and there is no question relating to problems in photography, no matter how intricate, he cannot answer.

Keen, observant, a tireless worker, he has found leisure since his arrival to master the English language, which he writes and speaks fluently.

Fred Mace, we've never written much about you, for we don't think you care a "continental," but to The Mahoney you're one "big scream." In fact, to be accurate, you have handed me "stunts," more potently impressive in silent comedy, than all of the popular comedians rolled into one.

You are the real "hokum" dispenser of the Cinematography art, the true delineator of "slapstick" classics; and you occupy the same relationship to the world of filmdom as that represented by Fred Opper, Tom Powers and "Tad" in the realms of "cartoondom."

RELIANCE LEADS THE MOVING PICTURE ACTORS' LEAGUE

Irving Cummings' Hit Wins Reliance-Pathe Game in the Ninth Inning

The Reliance baseball team won its sixth successive victory on Lenox Oval, Saturday afternoon, defeating Pathe by a score of five to four. Following Pathe's previous victory over Lubin, this puts the Reliance team at the top of the list.

The game was a hard fought one from start to finish, and excitement ran high in the bleachers from the call of "play ball" to the last half of the ninth inning, when Irving Cummings stood at the bat for Reliance with a man on third base, two men out and the score a tie.

The rooters had been disturbing the atmosphere with a will for eight innings and a half, but a sudden silence fell upon the crowd as the Reliance leading man took his place before the plate. Twice he fanned the air trying to meet one of Lefty Miller's tricky balls, and the Reliance supporters held their breath. But he met the next one squarely, and as it sailed into the bleachers in right field, Captain Cummings had the satisfaction of knowing that he had piloted his men to another well-earned victory.

The first run was scored by Reliance in the opening inning. Then a pitcher's battle was begun which was broken in the fifth inning by Reliance crossing the plate twice more. The sixth inning proved disastrous for Reliance. The Pathe players pounded the ball until four runs had been scored and it looked as if they were going to stampede the home team. But another run for Reliance tied the score in the last half of the inning, and the result was a neck and neck battle to the finish of the game.

The feature play of the day followed a beautiful swing on the ball by Lefty Miller, which would have been a clean two-bagger winning the game for Pathe, but the Reliance's second baseman, Sam Smith, made a spectaular leap into the air, catching the ball in his bare right hand and getting it to first base in the nick of time.

Reliance plays Solax at Lenox Oval on Saturday, June 28th, and on the following Saturday meets Lubin at Philadelphia.

ISIDORE BERNSTEIN TO BECOME MANAGER OF PACIFIC COAST STUDIOS OF UNIVERSAL

Isidore Bernstein has resigned from the managership of the Monopol Film Company to become manager of the Pacific Coast Studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. He will leave New York on Saturday, June 28th, joining Mr. J. C. Graham, general manager of the Universal Film Company, the latter returning to New York within a week or two. Mr. Bernstein has been in the picture business a number of years, and will be remembered as publicity man of the Republic and Yankee film companies. For fourteen years he was in the employ of the Christian Herald and for seven years was superintendent of the Boys' Institute, a charitable and educational institution.

KINEMACOLOR FILMS S. S. IMPERATOR

Kinemacolor captured the S. S. Imperator on her arrival in New York harbor, and on the same evening showed motion pictures of the gigantic German steamship in natural colors at the Proctor theatres. This is pretty near a record in motion picture news reporting, and certainly the first time that natural color photographs have been taken, developed, printed and exhibited with such speed and satisfactory results.

The Kinemacolor Company operator, Olsson, was taken aboard by the Hamburg-American tug as soon as the Imperator arrived at Quarantine, and all the way up the bay motion pictures were taken of different sections of the ship. On the bridge Commodore Hans Ruser and the four captains of the great steamship were posed, with a group of German and American directors of the line on the promenade deck. Especially interesting views of the steerage were taken by Mr. Olsson, who speaks most of the Continental languages, and directed the scenes accordingly.

The steamship docked about noon, and the films were rushed to the Kinemacolor factory at Whitestone, L. I., where they were developed and printed in record time. At 6 p. m. they were shown at the Kinemacolor exhibition theatre, in the Mecca Building, 1600 Broadway, for the approval of the Hamburg-American directors, who expressed themselves as highly pleased.

THE ANTARCTIC EXPEDITION IN PICTURES

For an authentic record of the heroism of men, one that has the sign manual of the Royal Geographical Society and of the British Government, and whose efforts are being well supported by the public and whose funds are being placed at the disposal of the widows and orphans of the Expedition victims, I can heartily commend my readers to visit Captain Scott's South Pole Expedition. There is no fraud about this; there is no working under assumed names and assuming honors which are not granted to them, but the pictures are the acknowledgment of one of the greatest tragedies of the age. To my mind, when I look back upon two other explorers who risked their lives to find a certain equatorial point of the earth and whose acrimonious discussions in the newspapers sickened the heart of every scientist or every man who wished to see truth well displayed, it is patent to my readers that one explorer came back with proofs galore and was honored by everyone from the evidence that he gave. As soon as the papers were ringing with this discovery there came another explorer, jealous, overbearing, who immediately cried, "Liar, liar; thief, thief. You stole my thunder; you stole my records; you stole my instruments—and now you tell lies by saying you did what was not possible for you to do," and so on ad infinitum. Which of these two is correct time will show.

The great contrast with Captain Scott's Expedition was the pathetic acknowledgment of the great feat of another man. The pictures show Captain Scott with the records, the papers, the flag, and the indubitable evidence of the South Pole having been discovered by Captain Amundsen, that intrepid explorer who returned and has lectured throughout the country, and gives the highest encomiums to the work and researches of Captain Scott and his brave party. Contrast these two pictures, and when history is written, I would wish for the pen to inscribe on the records my opinion of these two incidents The pictures of the Captain Scott expedition are such as will live in the archives of the various historical associations so that posterity may know and see through living pictures the work accomplished. The pictures, as has been reported in these columns previously, are a marvel and the highest praise must be accorded to Mr. Ponting for the work he did under such extremely hazardous conditions.

A thought comes into my mind, and I am inclined to say quo bono are the results obtained at such an immense sacrifice of life. It seems to me that the work accomplished was not worth the immense hazards undertaken. It was flying in the face of nature, who wished her secrets unrevealed, and when one looks back upon the records that have been brought they are fair reading. At the same time one asks again, what real good has been accomplished except the empty honor at the loss of life with all that life holds dear.

When the Terra Nova was allowed to start, 3,000 men of the highest chivalry of the world volunteered for the service. It started out in 1910, and when the word came back in February, 1913, the world was shocked. Such a pathetic story had never been written in the world's history, and the records of this visit are shown in the films Messrs. Gaumont secured through Mr. Ponting and are now showing the world what stuff heroes are made of.

A. H. SAUNDERS.

The authentic Captain Robert Falcon Scott motion pictures of the Antarctic will be presented in Toronto, Canada, the home of Mr. Wright, the Antarctic explorer who accompanied Captain Scott to within 100 miles of the South Pole and was the man who first discovered the dead bodies with the rescue party.

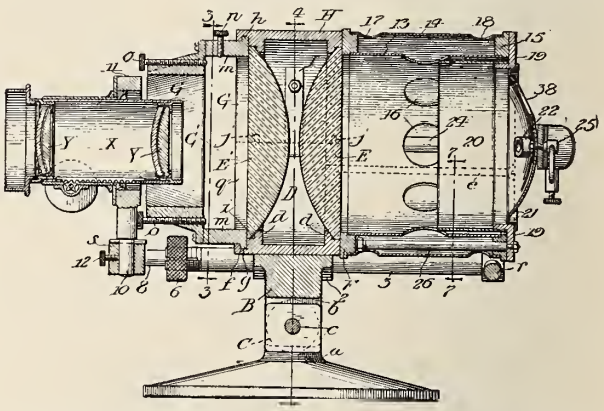
MIATT-PATENTS DEPARTMENT

Recent Inventions, Letters Patent, Trade-Marks, Designs, Copyrights, Etc., Relating to the Art, Digested and Reported Exclusively for the Moving Picture News by Geo. Wm. Miatt, Patent Lawyer and Expert, Temple Court, cor. of Nassau and Beekman Streets, New York City

The decision of the U. S. Supreme Court in the "Sanatogen" case, noted herein week before last, is of such importance as a leading case, especially to those interested in the Cinematographic Art, that we deem it expedient to "file" herewith a string of excerpts giving the gist of the text, for the convenience of readers of the News.

"The right to make, use and sell an invented article is not derived from the patent law. This right existed before and without the passage of the law and was always the right of an inventor. The act secured to the inventor the exclusive right to make, use and vend the thing patented, and consequently to prevent others from exercising like privileges without the consent of the patentee. It was passed for the purpose of encouraging useful invention and promoting new and useful improvements by the protection and stimulation thereby given to inventive genius, and was intended to secure to the public, after the lapse of the exclusive privileges granted, the benefit of such inventions and improvements. Yet while this principle is generally recognized, care should be taken not to extend by judicial construction the rights and privileges which it was the purpose of Congress to bestow. The question therefore now before this court for judicial determination is: May a patentee by notice limit the price at which future retail sales of the patented article may be made, such article being in the hands of a retailer by purchase from a jobber who has paid to the agent of the patentee the full price asked for the article sold? The question has not been determined in any previous case in this court, so far as we are aware. It was dealt with under the copyright statute, however, in the case of Bobbs-Merrill Company vs. Straus. It was there held that the statute, in securing to the holder of the copyright the sole right to vend copies of the book, conferred a privilege which, when the book was sold, was exercised by the holder, and that the right secured by the statute was thereby exhausted. The sale of a patented article is not essentially different from the sale of a book. In each case to vend is to part with the thing for a consideration. The jobber from whom the appellee purchased had previously bought, at a price which must be deemed to have been satisfactory, the packages of Sanatogen afterward sold to the appellee. The patentee had no interest in the proceeds of the subsequent sales, no right to any royalty thereon or to participation in the profits thereof. There was no transfer of a limited right to use this invention, and to call the sale a license to use is a mere play upon words. Upon such facts as are now presented we think the right to vend secured in the patent statute is not distinguishable from the right of vending given in the copyright act. In both instances it was the intention of Congress to secure an exclusive right to sell, and there is no grant of a privilege to keep up prices and prevent competition by notices restricting the price at which the article may be resold. This being so, the case is brought within that line of cases in which this court from the beginning has held that a patentee who has parted with a patented machine by passing title to a purchaser has placed the article beyond the limits of the monopoly secured by the patent act.

Another aid in reading the book of Nature. Minute X-ray photographs of the internal structure of diatomaceæ and other infinitesimal specimens, have been obtained by M. Perre Goby by placing the objects directly upon a photographic plate and allowing a perfectly vertical beam of the rays to fall from a bulb above, through a special tube so as to concentrate the rays on the subject. By this means he has succeeded in obtaining very minute photographs disclosing the internal structures of animalcula, and the enlargement of these views by a well-known means reveals clearly internal organisms and mysteries heretofore beyond our ken. Thus advancement in one branch of science is dependent upon and stimulated by collateral evolution in other lines, as has been clearly demonstrated for instance in the development of the art of Cinematography.



The objects of the invention of Alexander Ferdinand Victor, of Davenport, Iowa, as set forth in Patent No. 1,062,622 are to support all of the parts of a stereopticon concentric to the focal axis upon one base; to provide for the adjustments of all of said parts in order to properly project the pictures on the screen without disturbing the focal alinement thereof; to accomplish all of these adjustments easily and conveniently, and to provide a light which will always be in alinement with the focal axis, which will always be exposed to the view of the operator and readily manipulated by him, and which has a casing that allows for the escape of the heat generated thereby and affords a protection to the operator. The accompanying figure, which is one of ten, represents a central vertical sectional elevation of the device and gives a pretty clear idea of the construction and arrangement of parts, comprising projecting lens, a slide holder and condensing lenses, a casing inclosing said holder and condensing lenses, a rear end for said casing that is supported by and is telescopically adjustable into and out of the same, insulated carriers having suitable bores mounted in said rear end on either side of the center thereof, carbon electrodes mounted in said carriers, means that press laterally against said electrodes and retain them in their adjusted positions within the bores of said carriers, said bores having their axes arranged at an angle and intersecting at the focal axis of said lenses, said electrodes being adjustable longitudinally and rotatably in said bores, and other features claimed specifically in twenty-seven claims, and described in a specification of 650 folios.

Are two affirmatives equal to a negative? It would seem so in the case of Yess vs. Yess, 99 Northwestern Reporter.

Apropos to the decision of the Court of Appeals in re. Karback, noted last week, in which the issue was the old one of invention as distinguished from the use of obvious expedients or the exercise of mere mechanical skill, and ruling that all doubts in such respect should be construed in favor of the inventor, instead of against him as heretofore, it must be understood that so-called mechanical expedients or equivlents which seem obvious enough after utilization are not always primarily apparent to either the inventor or skilled artisan. Not so many years ago Edison regretted exceedingly he did not have the aid, while expending many thousands of dollars and much time in experimental investigation in order to attain a certain result, of the judges who afterward declared the invention an "obvious expedient," or obvious to them on sight, but not to Edison and his skilled associates until after they had succeeded laboriously in solving the riddle.

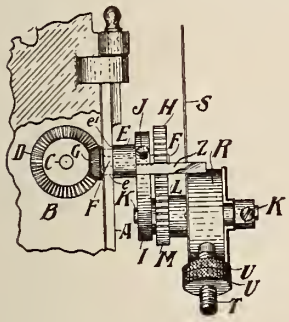
The Exhibitors Film Service Company, of San Francisco, Cal., has applied for registration of the subjoined trade-mark for films, claiming use since October 1, 1912.

To the Cinematographist the subject of light is always one of interest. Hence we note that it is claimed that the Allgemeine establishment of Berlin has produced new electrical searchlight projectors capable of throwing a beam several miles and still affording light enough to read by. They are supposed to be the most powerful yet produced, of a candlepower too great for measurement, and computable only in hundreds of millions.



To those skilled in the art it is well known that the photographic film is exposed to considerable heat produced by the light in the lantern when in the moving picture machine; that such film is made of inflammable material, and when allowed to remain at rest is set on fire, or at least injured by the heat, in a very short time. It is the object of the invention of William B. Moore and Thomas H. Armstrong of Chicago, Ill., assignors, to Thomas Edison, Inc., to obtain a moving picture machine in which a screen will be automatically interposed between the photographic film and the lantern whenever the film is not in motion and automatically removed from between such film and the lantern when such film is moving at the rate of speed required to obtain a motion picture effect. The drawing is a side elevation of a portion of a moving picture machine with the screen in position to be interposed between a film in the machine and the lens of the stereopticon. C is a shaft rotatably mounted in frame B to which door A is hinged. The balance wheel is mounted on shaft C, as is also a beveled gear wheel D. E is a bearing attached to door A by making part e smaller than the remainder of the bearing, to obtain shoulder *e*1 and inserting such part e in a corresponding hole in the door. F is a shaft mounted in bearing E, and G is a gear secured on shaft F to engage with gear D when door A is closed against frame B as illustrated. H is a gear wheel rigidly secured to shaft F. I is a support mounted on bearing E, carrying a lower bearing and secured in an adjusted position by set screw J. K is a non-rotatable shaft in the bearing of support I. L is a sleeve rotatably mounted on shaft K and provided with gear M. S is a screen rigidly secured to spring barrel R. The weight U, U, returns screen S to position illustrated, and also acts as a counterbalance for the screen when the latter is maintained in its open position during operation of the machine. Z is a stop on support I to limit the movement of screen S. Nine views and forty-two claims the principal of which is for the combination of a main frame provided with means for imparting a progressive movement to a film, a door hinged thereto, a movable screen carried on said door, and means under the control of the firm moving mechanism operable to move said screen when the door is closed and inoperative for this purpose when the door is open. Patent No. 1,063,207.

A distinctive innovation is the passage of a new German law which provides for the registration by association of manufacturers or merchants of distinctive trade-marks used exclusively in connection with goods of members of the association. This new form of trademark (Verbandszeichen) is available where associations carry on no business of their own—entire municipalities or provinces, for instance, within which is produced a special and direct line of articles closely associated with the name of the municipality or the province.

England, the birthplace of "Letters Patent," boasts of 30,089 applications for patents in the United Kingdom for the year 1912, as against our 69,236 in these United States for the same period. They beat us, however, in the matter of design patents, and the registration of trade-marks. We only had 1,775 applications for design patents, as against their 43,014; and as for trade-marks, they evidently think them of more importance than we do for they had 10,014 applications for registration as against our 7,239. The preponderance of design patents, however, is remarkable. But for mechanical skill and achievement, America, like the famous original Cup lifter of that name, is out of sight of all competitors. "There aint no second."

We shall be pleased to answer pertinent questions propounded by readers of The Moving Picture News.

INCREASING COMMERCE FUNCTIONS

As announced in the last issue of The Nation's Business, a special Committee on the Department of Commerce has been organized. The most hearty good will relative to this plan has been expressed by Hon. William C. Redfield, Secretary of Commerce.

It is realized by those who have studied governmental functions closely in Washington that at this time when by law the Department of Commerce and Labor has been divided, it is appropriate to discuss functions that could be added and the general subject of a rearrangement to secure greater efficiency in the two departments. The gentlemen who to date constitute the Special Committee on the Department of Commerce are the following: John H. Fahey, Boston, Mass.; C. M. Smyth, Philadelphia; A. H. Mulliken, Chicago; Charles C. Jenks, Detroit; C. Herbert De Fosse, Worcester; Philip B. Foulke, St. Louis; Lewis W. Parker, Greenville, S. C.; Walter H. Cottingham, Cleveland; Ira E. Bennett, Washington, D. C. (representing the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce).

A call for a session of this committee has been sent out. Secretary Redfield will receive the committee on the afternoon of June 23rd. Careful consideration has already been given to the possibilities of broadening the scope of the Department of Commerce. This is in keeping with Secretary Redfield's own desires and with expressed opinions of his predecessors, who have realized to what a comparatively limited extent the important field of the promotion of commerce both at home and abroad has been stimulated by the government.

As will be seen elsewhere in the Budget article, the amount appropriated for commerce and commercial development is trifling compared with that devoted to agriculture, yet agriculture in its highest productivity represents even now less than 50 per cent of the value of manufactured goods produced in the United States. The question, therefore, of reaching out to wider world-markets is one that is receiving earnest consideration. In this and other directions the Committee on the Department of Commerce will have practical suggestions to make.

San Diego, Cal.—A. S. Hollowbush will erect a moving picture theatre on the north side of M street, between Twenty-fifth and Twenty-sixth streets. Architect Robert Halley, Jr., has plans.

PICTURE MUSIC

By ERNST LUZ

No! Not among the missing, only on a short vacation, during which time I have been endeavoring to prove the practicability of my picture music views, as suggested in my previous articles, to my own further satisfaction. Under the present unsatisfactory conditions it is possible to greatly improve, assist and add an appreciated tone of class to the "Picture Theatre." It is certainly a pleasure to cater to an intelligent audience and hear them laugh (not snicker) at comedy that is comedy, and see tears in their eyes when well acted pathos is thrown on the screen.

Let us hope that the producer of film will soon realize that the public at large demands pictures which show contrast in scene setting as well as action. It is difficult to get the full value of a pathetic situation unless it is surrounded by more or less frivolous action. A picture which most beautifully illustrates this is the Biograph release, "The Mothering Heart," to which I give musical suggestions this week.

It is a fact that all pictures which have a telling effect on the audience are those which naturally suggest musical temperaments.

In the past it was thought that the dramatic accompaniment was the more important in picture playing, and while I know it to be a factor, nevertheless I know from actual experience that pictures showing good acting, with no violent dramatic action, do not only afford the best musical opportunities but are the most appreciated by the audience. To further substantiate this I have a request written on my theatre program reading as follows: "Please play the music written for the accompaniment of the picture plays like Edison's 'A Concerto for the Violin,' which was applauded more than any selection." The Edison Company follows with a new one, "Love's Old Sweet Song," which was applauded as much as the first mentioned.

Both picture plays show contrast and are suggestive of good music. I mention this knowing it to be a universal habit in picture playing to ignore a temperamental setting of music in such picture plays, wherein there is no violent dramatic action. The most pertinent reason for this is the ridiculous endeavor of many picture players to follow the picture action with numbers of suggestive titles. Having personally met with greater success in accompanying the pictures of less violent action, I shall write a series of articles giving illustrations (or plots), of which "The Mothering Heart" is the first. While dramatic accompanying is very effective, there is a counteracting tendency on the part of the producer to draw this excitable action to such length that the picture story as well as the music becomes tiresome, for melody in music rules over all.

Since my last mention of the "Talking Picture" in these columns I have been thrown in contact with the production of them, and from what I have seen I can assure my readers that they will be an inducement to good music in the picture theatre showing them. They may replace vaudeville, not music, requiring music for their more perfect projection and capable musicians for its rendition.

The Biograph two-reel release of June 21st, "The Mothering Heart," is not only an excellent picture production, but is very suggestive of music, and can be helped by a proper musical setting, for which reason I give the program I selected, although any numbers of similar character would answer as well.

1. "Kroll's Ball Klange Waltz"—Intro. Waltz and Coda—until after husband meets with success. 2. "A Frangesa," until after dancer swings girl partner overhead. 3. "Butterflies" (Jos. W. Stern), until husband and Coquette exterior cabaret. 4. "La Guapa" (Jos. W. Stern), until dancers bow to applause. 5. "Gold and Silver" Waltz (Jos. W. Stern), connects parts 1 and 2 until wife returns home after seeing husband enter auto with Coquette. 6. Barcarolle, "Tales of Hoffman." Once through slowly until wife lays head on bed with baby. 7. "Malmaison" Waltz," lively, until husband and Coquette exterior cabaret after flirtation. 8. "Alita" (Carl Fischer), until baby sick and husband's advances rejected by wife. "Abenlied," by Schumann, to end. These numbers will naturally connect themselves, none are difficult and all good repertoire for picture playing.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

Le Poeme, by S. Romberg. Pub. by Jos. W. Stern, 102 W. 38th street, New York City. A Valse Lento with a predominating minor theme. Excellent relief number to follow a serious number in picture wherein pathetic action is long drawn out. Tempo can be effectively changed without marring composition. Indispensable in serious pictures.

Hearstease, by Niel Moret. A beautiful pathetic number, well suited for the serious moments in romantic dramas. Is most beautiful when played with shadings suitable to picture action. Is of sweet tone and theme. Entire number in major key. Pub. by Jerome H. Remick, 219 W. 46th street, New York City.

After Vespers, by Niel Moret. A beautiful number, less serious than "Hearstease," with a beautiful theme that will attract. Your audience will want to know the name. The introduction has excellent preparatory movement for the leading to semi-pathetic love scenes. The number proper is very effective in gavotte tempo. Pub. by Jerome H. Remick, New York City.

Bees, by Stephen O. Jones. A 6-8 number excellent for opening descriptive or introductory action in pictures void of violent action. A good number to take the place of the eternal waltz so much overworked in picture playing. Pub. by J. H. Remick, New York City.

Night Song, by R. M. Stults. A Reverie of Lullaby or Barcarolle effect that is very necessary in the accompanying of pictures, wherein a baby rôle is prominent. Catchy number and will be appreciated. Not difficult. The Chimes, by Harry Armstrong. A Reverie that is true to its title. Opens with excellent chime or bell opportunities. Opens in 3-4 with an expressive common time strain that is of serious vein. An excellent semi-pathetic number. Introduction and Coda is arranged for chime effect. Both numbers pub. by M. Witmark, 144 W. 37th street, New York City.

Dramatic Music for Piano, by Theo. Tobani and Theo. Bendix. A new publication of dramatic numbers known as Series No. 3. Contains 30 numbers, all selected from the 18 books of dramatic music published for orchestra. Contains excellent agitatos, hurries, mysteriosos and pathetic themes. I can personally vouch for the picture value of Nos. 9, 11, 13, 14, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 24, 28, having used them with orchestra and piano. All are well arranged and not difficult. Short term instructions are placed at the beginning of each number. Pub. by Carl Fischer, 6-8 Cooper Square, New York City.

STUDIO BREEZES

The capacity of the drying room of the American Film Mfg. Co. has been increased to twice what it formerly was. This was necessitated by the large and steady increase in business during the past several months. Other improvements are also being installed so as to insure an even better photographic quality than has heretofore been deemed possible.

Signor E. Guazzoni, one of the best known of the Cines directors, was the victim of an odd accident recently according to advices from Rome. Guazzoni was the director of "Quo Vadis," and while making a scene from a multiple-reel subject of Oriental setting, had much difficulty in making a huge python remain within the lines of the camera. While stooping over the body of the giant snake, a setting close by collapsed and fell with a crash, startling the snake so that Guazzoni received a severe glancing blow which broke his right arm and stunned him. Guazzoni was taken to a neighboring hospital where his condition was reported serious. This is the first accident of any consequence that has befallen any members of the Cines Company.

Kathlyn Williams has purchased, from the Selig Wild Animal Farm, a full-blooded leopard cub, which she will attempt to make a house pet of. The cub is two months old now, and Miss Williams has taken the fuzz- ilttle cat to her California bungalow where it will be accorded the same treatment as would fall to the lot of a pedigreed Persian kitten or lapdog.

Phillips Smalley is such a stickler for realism that he has adopted genuine music for all cafe scenes that he will take in the future. The Universal director recently tried the real thing, and he says he finds it advantageous in more than one particular. In the first place music gives the right atmosphere and assures dancers an even step. Then, too, it costs no more to employ musicians than to get actors to fake the music.

Edwin August's popularity with the theatre-going public was demonstrated the other night in Los Angeles. Ben Lind had just finished the rendition of the song "Nobody Loves A Fat Man" at the Orpheum when the spot-light was turned on the Universal leading man, and Lind sang "Why I Not Like That Man?" Mr. August was compelled to bow a dozen times in recognition of the applause that followed.

Fred Mace, director and comedian-in-chief to the Majestic forces and president of the Photoplayers Club, had a rare stroke of luck. He paid out fifty cents for a lottery ticket, and to his surprise was summoned to San Francisco to draw his money, twenty-five hundred dollars. No, good readers, there is not a spark of press agency work in this, the evidence, barring traveling expenses, was in Mace's pocketbook when he returned, among it two crisp $1,000 notes which made our mouth water. Everyone is glad. What about that new auto, Mr. Mace?

The latest addition to the Powers Photo Plays, Inc., plant is the erection of a fine and large property room, the firm having quite outgrown their old one in a very short time. Tom Evans plans all the time but goes ahead with business caution; there is a wonderful alteration in the old Monopol plant since he took hold of it.

The Pilot Company now has two directors at work. Travers Vale, who has been with the company from its inception, is working on a three-reel feature, "The Streets of New York," and expects to continue turning out large features for the company, which will be sold on a state rights basis. Robert Goodman, formerly with Melies and Majestic, is turning out "one-reel features" for the company. His first picture, written by himself, will be released July 10th, "Sanitary Gulch," and is one of those comedies that keeps one laughing all the time. His next picture, "Granny," is a heart-interest drama, in which Lottie Pickford plays the lead. The scenario for this picture was written by Lottie Pickford.

Eddie Shulter took up more than half of Tuesday night's regular Reliance meeting of heads of departments talking about his plans for the carpenter shop, property rooms and paint frames to be installed in the new studio. Eddie knows what he wants, and as Manager Ritchey says the sky is the limit, why, Eddie is happy.

With a clever eye for combining business with pleasure, Al "Kinemacolor" Lowe has installed Kinemacolor in a summer resort circuit comprising the Idle Hour Theatre, Far Rockaway; Arverne Pier Theatre; Happyland Theatre, on Staten Island; Ocean Theatre, Asbury Park, and Ocean Theatre, Long Branch. Looking after these theatres provides "week-end" excursions for the entire summer, and between times Mr. Lowe can attend the big open-air Burland Theatre, in the Bronx.

TRADE NOTES

C. Lang Cobb, Jr., manager sales and publicity, of Ramo Films, announces that he has just completed arrangements and signed contracts with the General Film Agency, Ltd., of London, England, for the distribution of Ramo Films in Europe and the Continent. Mr. E. Seville Williams, managing director of the General Film Agency, has been in New York for the past ten days, consummating this deal. Mr. Cobb has done well in contracting with this agency, inasmuch as they will handle no other American product, through their various offices in Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Moscow, Turin, Barcelona and Sydney, Australia. Mr. Williams is to be congratulated in procuring such a good brand of films.

The American Film Manufacturing Co. will release a two reel subject every other Monday. "The Ashes of Three," a recent two reel release, met with such tremendous approval and created such a demand for more multiple "Flying A" releases, that in future the one reel subject of every second Monday is to be replaced by a two reel subject.

Plans for the new office building which the Selig Polyscope Co. are erecting in Wardour Street, London, West, are now before the city authorities in completed form. The plans call for one of the most modern and substantial structures in London, and when completed the offices will undoubtedly be the finest film offices in the world. Every convenience, including model projection theatres, show rooms, lounges, etc., are provided for. The building will cost over fifteen thousand pounds. The old buildings on this location are now being razed.

THE CHINESE INTERESTED IN PICTURE SHOWS

There are three Cinematograph shows at present in the city of Canton. These shows cater to the Chinese taste, and the films come principally from France and Germany, although a few have been manufactured in the United States and Great Britain. The former two countries, however, monopolize this business, such as it is, which in the main is not very extensive. The films are rented to exhibitors for a short time from a firm here who imports them direct from Europe. There is a small Cinematograph show in the foreign settlement, usually once a week, for foreigners who choose to patronize it. To a firm who desires to enter this business it must be borne in mind that it must cater entirely to the Chinese, for it would not pay to undertake to cater to the foreigners here, on account of the limited population.

To give an idea of the prices at the three establishments in the Chinese city it may be stated that all the shows are open generally from 6 p. m. to midnight. Two of the establishments have two performances and the prices of admission are: Box seat, 30 cents; first-class seat, 20 cents; second-class seat, 10 cents; third-class seat, 5 cents. In one of the ather establishments prices are the same, with the exception of the box seat, which is 25 cents. In one of the other shows there are three performances given, and the prices are: Box seat for 6 persons or a family $1.50; box seat, 25 cents; first-class seat, 20 cents; second-class seat, 10 cents; third-class seat, 5 cents. These prices are all in Canton currency, $1 of which is worth about 50 cents in United States currency.

THE MINNEAPOLIS FEATURE FILM EXCHANGE

The Minneapolis Feature Film Exchange, 100 Temple Court, Minneapolis, have a better and bigger stock than ever to offer patrons, and they invite inquiries. Under the new management their exchange has branched out till every detail has been taken care of to insure absolute satisfaction to customers. They will soon be taking over the Feature Film Sales Company releases, and will offer the public some thrillers.

STATE RIGHTS WITHDRAWN

The demand for "One Hundred Years of Mormonism" from leading theatres has decided H. M. Russell to suspend sales of state rights and continue the exploitation of this picture in the East upo nthe same basis that is cleaning up big money in the West.

Offices have been opened at seventh floor, Candler Building, and Ernest Shipman, well known to the theatrical managers throughout the country, placed in charge of the bookings. Mr. Shipman has deferred his trip abroad for a few weeks, will arrange the bookings of the various companies, remain here for the international convention week of July 7th, and then go to London in the interests of his other enterprises. No time will be lost in booking these various routes, and managers with desirable open time should communicate at once.

THE CODE OF THE U. S. A.
Pilot Release July 3rd.

ROY E. AITKEN, OF LONDON, IN NEW YORK

Roy E. Aitken, managing director of the Western Import Co., Ltd., London, England, is now in New York City, looking over the local situation and incidentally making a host of new friends by his sunny personality and charming manners. Mr. Aitken is very optimistic regarding the outlook on the other side of the water. He declares that the Keystone, Broncho and Kay-Bee films, for which his company is sponsor across the pond, are absolutely creating a sensation and fully living up to their American reputation.

AN UNUSUAL FEATURE DRAMA

The Great Northern Special Feature Film Co. is announcing a feature photo drama entitled, "The Grain Speculator," which is said to be one of the most thrilling and convincing of the many feature subjects which have been released by this company. The uncontrollable desire of an otherwise respectable member of society to control the wheat market forms the basis of the play and in its unwinding there are many thrilling and exciting scenes. For instance, the elevator in a fashionable metropolitan hotel drops from the fourth floor to the bottom, and after other exciting incidents, the grain speculator by accident falls from the top of one of the magazines into the wheat bins below. An extended review will be given later.

FEATURE PHOTOPLAY EXCHANGE

This exchange with offices at 219 Sixth avenue, New York City and 665 Washington street, Boston, Mass., owns the state rights for the New England States for "The Yellow Man," a three-reel Ambrosio feature dealing with the Japanese Secret Service in America; "New York's Society Life in Under World" in three parts, featuring "Chuck" Conners; and "Cast Up by the Sea," a two-part drama of a fisherman's life.

New England exhibitors desiring to secure these features should get in connection with this exchange. They also supply a wide range of posters and heralds for these thrilling feature films.

Mr. Henry E. Rieff, of the Lyric Theatre, and Mr. H. C. Kliehm, of the Lawrence Theatre, both of Pittsburgh, Pa., while attending the convention of the Motion Pictures Exhibitors' State League of Pennsylvania at Philadelphia, May 27 and 28, made a flying trip to New York on Monday and spent most of the day at the Edison studio, seeing "how it is done." They thoroughly enjoyed their glimpse "behind the scenes" and meeting in the flesh many of their screen favorites. The League elected Mr. Kliehm, vice-president, and Mr. Rieff, treasurer, for the coming year.

Ford Sterling was once known as "Keno, the Boy Clown," and the smell of sawdust and the noise of the band heading "the grand free outdoor pageant" down the main street still retain their old charm for the well-known comic. Recently a small "one-ringer" struck town and held forth for three days on the local grounds. The Keystone force were working overtime at the studios, finishing up a film in which Ford played the lead, but Sterling was nowhere to be found. A search was started which finally ended on the circus lot, where the erstwhile boy clown was found, coat and hat off, striving to teach the white-face comedian of the show some of his old laugh-getters.

Nothing gives greater delight to Mabel Normand than to do the part of a diving girl in the Keystone productions. She is possessed of a figure which would cause Venus de Milo and Annette Kellerman "to go some." and could give the latter young lady the race of her life in the water. She has medals galore for swimming and high diving and has handily beaten may contenders, both male and female, for championship honors, and when the Keystone Company was producing at Coney Island last summer the fair Mabel was the cynosure of all eyes.

RELIANCE

HER FINAL CHOICE (June 30).—May Wolcott, living in a Pennsylvania mining town, has two lovers, Tom Hodges and Jim Hastings, both of whom work as miners in one of the great collieries of the town. She has always regarded them with equal favor, but one day the men quarrel and agree to put the matter plainly to May and let her decide between them. She is unaware of Tom's real character and as Jim has been somewhat backward in his attentions to her, she chooses Tom. Jim is heartbroken.

That evening a neighbor rushes into the house of May's family and announces an explosion and cave-in at the mine. May is almost overcome by the thought that Tom is in the mine but recovers and rushes out to the shaft in company with all the rest of the village. Here she meets Jim and begs him to go down into the mine and save Tom. Jim refuses at first but finally gives way to her entreaties and enters the shaft. Instead of going to work that evening, however, as May thought, Tom has stopped on the way at a saloon, where he is drinking and gambling. He and his companions are not moved by the news of the disaster but continue their game. Finally Tom goes broke and quits. He goes to the mine, where he meets May. May begs Tom to go down and rescue Jim. He pushes her aside with a sneer and refuses. She is shocked at his intoxicated condition. Just then Jim appears, borne on a stretcher. The contrast is enough to show May which man is worthy of her love and, falling on her knees beside Jim, she begs his forgiveness, and it is freely granted.

DICK'S TURNING (July 12).—Dick, only a boy in years, is married to Millie, sixteen. He is able to support her until the big strike comes and his job is taken away. Unable to get another he is forced to see their little bits of furniture taken away—and himself and wife put out of the poor rooms. The girl has to go back to her father's home and he accompanies her. At the door her father calls him a loafer and sends him away. In the park Dick sits and thinks. Work is hard to find—Milly is being cared for and, since they think him a loafer, he will be one. He decides to be a hobo. At this point a kitten jumps on his knee. Before he goes he will take it to Milly—for he knows she will like it. On his way to his wife the kitten gets away from him and he follows it into an alley leading into the courtyard of a rich home. A boy in this house has just been given a new rifle and, seeing the kitten on the fence, he aims at it but hits Dick instead. Dick is carried into the house, where the rich boy's mother, touched to the heart by this pathetic story, cares for him and sends for Milly. And when he is all well again she gives him a position in her household as a chauffeur and the young couple resume housekeeping. And in this new household the kitten holds an honored place—for it was through him that all their good luck came.

SOLAX

AN UNEXPECTED MEETING (July 2).—Bob and Jim find the weather very warm and decide the best means of refreshing themselves is to get away to the seashore together. But they have wives and think that alone they will feel the heat less. With one of their friends, Dr. Smith, they concoct a scheme. Bob goes home and pretends to have a terrible fit. His wife calls for Dr. Smith, who comes and prescribes "the fresh air cure" in the mountains with only a male companion, Jim. So our two friends go off and leave their wives behind. They decide, however, that Atlantic City is preferable to the mountains and they are next seen enjoying themselves on the sands. Their wives, however, also find the weather very warm and decide to go to Atlantic City to refresh themselves. Bob and Jim meet their wives in very embarrassing situations from which they are finally allowed to withdraw, refreshed but rueful.

TRUE HEARTS (July 4).—Little Jack, orphaned by the death of his mother, is taken into the humble home of the Simpsons. Jack and Sue grow up together, childhood sweethearts. When Jack is grown to manhood they take a comfortable little farm and it is taken for granted by everyone that the two young people will some day marry. Helen Morrison, the beautiful petted daughter of a New York financier, is injured in an auto accident in company with her fiance and father, who escape practically uninjured. She is brought to the Simpson cottage nearby and not permitted to be moved. Sue sees Jack falling in love with the beauty and her gentle heart mourns in silence. But the girl's pretty ways win her friendship in spite of herself. Helen finds herself growing to care for the handsome youth, but when she learns by accident the unhappiness her coming has brought into the life of tender-hearted Sue, she remembers the duty she owes her benefactors as well as her father and fiance, and crushes the growing love in her heart. She confides in Sue her coming marriage to Dick and returns to the city during Jack's temporary absence, leaving no message for him. Dick's true devotion makes her ashamed of cherishing thoughts of another in her breast on the eve of her marriage and she resolves to be worthy of his love and trust. Lonely and lovelorn, Jack follows her to the city, only to learn of her marriage to another. At home the gentle-hearted Sue waits and prays for his return, and one day he does come back and the realization of her true-hearted devotion brings back the old love to his heart and Sue forgives and forgets.

THE WRONG HAND-BAG (July 4).—Mrs. Hanson reminds hubby that it is her birthday as he is about to leave for his office. And on the way he stops in a jewelry store and purchases for her a silver hand-bag, which he sends home by a messenger. When Mrs. Hanson receives the bag she cannot resist the temptation to show it to her next-door neighbor, Mrs. Jones, who at once becomes jealous. When Jones returns home she makes him promise that he will buy her one. This promise she persuades Jones into with the aid of a broom. Jones buys his wife a bag exactly like the one which Mrs. Hanson has. Mrs. Hanson mislays her bag and, seeing Mrs. Jones with one, she immediately decides that the one Mrs. Jones has is hers. She attacks Mrs. Jones and quite a fight ensues. The husbands, arriving on the scene, become involved. In the meantime the maid of the Hanson family discovers the hand-bag in the exact spot where Mrs. Hanson had laid it. During a lull in hostilities the maid informs Mrs. Hanson of her find. Mrs. Hanson, anxious to straighten the matter out, rushes to the Jones' house and arrives just as the husbands are about to be arrested. She makes explanation, and everything is satisfactorily adjusted. The two husbands look as if they had gone through a threshing machine. But in these days of women's rights what does a poor husband amount to.

KINEMACOLOR

DISILLUSIONED.—A strong story showing the power of money to pervert the best natures. John Graham and his wife live in a small village, content with their modest home and the love of their little girl. Sweet home life that appeals to every heart permeates the start of the film.

A rich uncle dies and leaves the entire estate to John.

The scene changes to gorgeous rooms, fashionable people, card playing and reckless spending and speculation.

The fever of money-making attacks John, and while he hangs over the ticker studying stocks, the wife drifts into a flirtation with a man about town.

The story swings along with a speed that seems to lead to destruction.

Just at the most exciting point of the story John becomes bankrupt, their child's life is despaired of, the wife's flirtation has reached the danger line. There is a nervous tension to this film which never relaxes until the child recovers, and then husband and wife leave for their village home.

Quaint comedy rushes through the film, involving the love of middle-aged Aunt Ruth for bashful Bill.

Much beautiful scenery is shown, adding by its wonderful natural colors a charm to a very powerful story.

A FAMILY AFFAIR.—A rollicking farce; one laugh following another, from the first to the last scene.

Dan lives on the bounty of his uncle, who supposes his nephew is married and the father of a baby. Uncle telegraphs he's coming. Dan explains the situation to the spinster landlady and servants, forgetting to mention the baby. He goes to his sweetheart, begs her to pose as his wife for the afternoon, and she consents. In his absence the uncle calls; the old maid declares herself Dan's wife. The uncle is horrified when Dan comes home and introduces the servant girl as his wife. The mystified uncle points to the old maid, but Dan declares she is the man-servant's wife. The old maid is furious, the servant girl jealous, and the man-servant wild. The uncle demands to see the baby. The old maid gets one from an orphanage, the servant girl gets a child from a friend, and Jobson steals one from a baby carriage. In turn these babies are brought on, to Dan's horror and the uncle's delight; but the last baby, when unveiled, proves to be black.

Meanwhile, Dan sends a message to his sweetheart not to come, but the messenger boy passes her on the street. She arrives and proclaims herself the wife. The negro mother enters and demands her child, and the wildest confusion reigns. Dan confesses, Sallie goes to her Jobson, and the negro woman gets her baby. Uncle grants his forgiveness and blessing when he is freed from the attentions of the old maid, who is left with two babies in her arms.

CUPID'S SCORE (June 28).—Cyril is a manly young chap who is deeply in love with Florrie, who is as pretty as she is charming. The young girl's mamma, however, is not inclined to favor the match and their meetings, in consequence, are clandestine. Cyril sends a note to his lady love inviting her to attend a fancy dress ball, but the missive falls into the hands of Florrie's mamma, who decides to attend the ball without her daughter's knowledge. About this time Cyril's uncle Joe, who is a jolly old sort, enters the apartment of his nephew and, finding a fancy masquerade costume on the couch, decides to appropriate the same in revenge for some little joke played upon him by Cyril. Florrie's ma and Uncle Joe meet at the ball and when the time arrives for unmasking, they recognize each other and an old love affair is renewed. Mamma is a widow and Uncle Joe is a bachelor. The evening is enjoyably spent, but Cyril and his sweetheart are unable to attend because of Uncle Joe's sly action in appropriating his nephew's fancy dress costume. On the following morning the uncle is discovered on a couch in Cyril's apartments clad as as a knight of old. At first the young man is inclined to have revenge, but upon second thought he decides to wait. In a fashionable cafe uncle and mamma keep their first rendezvous and it so happens that Cyril and Florrie are partaking of refreshments in an adjoining booth. The sounds of merriment attract the attention of both parties and after much peering over the partition, Uncle Joe and mamma and Cyril and Florrie decide to make it a one-party affair. The partition is removed and the two generations of lovers make merry while pledging their individual good health for the future.

MAN AND WOMAN (July 9.—(First Part)—James Clark, an ambitious young lawyer, is too engrossed in business affairs to attend a social affair with his wife. The young wife feels she is being neglected and her friends persuade her to attend the reception regardless of her husband's wishes.

While there she meets Carl von Liebchen, a musician; and a too friendly intimacy springs up between the young wife and the musician. Affairs like these are dangerous. The husband is too busy to notice any change in his wife's actions. One evening the musician gives a supper party in his apartments and the young wife attends. After the supper the young wife is detained by the musician and it is then that she realizes the follies of her actions. The musician avows his love—and the young wife, frightened into sensibility, hastens home. She now realizes her own love for her husband.

The musician broods into despondency. He sends the wife a message that since she has refused his love, he will seek consolation in death. The wife hurries to the musician's apartment—but too late to prevent his death. Out of the dead man's hand she takes a note. From small trivialities great tragedies are enacted. The musician is dead and the young wife escapes unseen from the house. The police enter upon the scene. A strange man is seen leaving the house. He is caught and brought to the house where the dead musician is discovered. All indications point to him as the murderer, and the man is arrested.

(Second Part)—The affair has caused considerable comment. The young husband has been engaged to defend the accused man's case. The ambition of the young lawyer spurs him into the realms of fame. His wife has possession of the two letters that would vindicate the accused man. The lawyer's case is a hard one. Circumstantial evidence is too strong against the prisoner. On the day of the great trial the wife attends and listens to the evidence, which points to the accused man's conviction. The great ordeal and strain of this conviction prompts her to her better self and she confesses all to her husband. It is then that the great scene is enacted. The young wife takes the witness stand and tells all. The audience is amazed at this sudden change of affairs. The prisoner is free and the lawyer's ambition is realized at the expense of the wife's reputation.

IN GOD WE TRUST (July 3).—The night before Christmas the child of well-to-do parents, Harry Bewell, receives from his rich uncle a miniature safe that contains $5,000, which is to apply toward his education. The cogging butler learns the combination of the safe, and at once tells some of his "yeggmen" friends. They in turn prevail upon Bill, out of work and the head of a starving family, to assist them and do the actual robbery. Over the door of his poor home is tacked a little sign, "In God We Trust," and, as he goes forth with malice flaming in his heart, it catches his attention and continues to impress him. When he eventually faces the little safe, as an expert steel worker, he observes the same inscription, and it checks him in his nefarious task. The child hears the noise, gets out of bed to investigate, and discovers the burglar. The father is aroused, phones the police and covers the gang with his automatic. They are caught "hands-up"; but the father becomes interested in poor Bill, and stands sponsor for him. He hears his sad story and, remembering the time, sends him home with money in his pockets, a load of toys and a Christmas dinner.

AMERICAN

THE FOREIGN SPY (July 10).—The army engineer and his daughter are deeply interested in each other, but, of course, the will of the father predominates. As a result the girl experiences many heartaches because it does seem as though she is about to lose her sweetheart because he is not an army man.

The issue is brought to a climax by the presence of a spy in the father's home. Plans for the border fortifications are stolen and the impending disgrace and ruin drive the officer to the verge of despair, from which he is rescued by the daughter and her sweetheart, who rescue the plans and apprehend the spy. Depicted in an easy strain with many thrilling climaxes. Beautiful photography and splendid acting.

THE SONG OF THE SOUP (July 12).—A cowboy in the realm of society is almost as ludicrous, if not more so, than society in chaps.

A Western comedy that is sure to please. A group of city folk visit the country in an automobile and the girl of the party strikes a fancy for the daring deeds and accomplishments of a cowboy. This arouses the jealousy of her suitor and the chagrin of her parents. A society affair in the city undeceives the girl and clears the domestic realm of impending storm.

To appreciate this story you must see it.

THE LIFE WE LIVE (July 3).—Joe Mackley, out of employment, enters his cabin in the far West, where his wife is lying ill, only to tell her the same old story, that he had been unable to secure work. Out of food, Mackley's wife offers him her wedding ring to pawn. Sam Sheppard, an express messenger on the D. L. & D. Railroad, is given a money package to deliver to W. B. Scott, superintendent of the Tropical division. Sheppard places the valuable package in the inside pocket of his coat, but when he reaches his destination he discovers that the package has disappeared. Mackley, in the meantime, tries to pawn the ring, and is rewarded by finding the money package on the railroad tracks. Mackley's wife makes him return the money to the proper authorities and he is rewarded for his honesty, which saves Sam Sheppard from going to the penitentiary.

REX

THROUGH STRIFE (July 13).—In one of the mining districts there lived a young and faithful wife, whose finer sensibilities were suffered to tolerate the abuse of a brutal husband. Longing, as every woman does, for sympathy and heart affection, she responds to the warmth of friendship affectionately extended by a neighboring miner of corresponding youth and understanding.

The story opens and closes in the highly dramatic scene wherein she stands over her wounded lover and answers the accusation of the vigilantes, who have come upon the scene to ascertain the cause of death of her husband. Before their accusing gaze she relates the cause, which is depicted as the action follows.

"Upon the stream there was a man who loved me. Learning of the abuse which my ties as wife made necessary that I should suffer, he pitied me. One day a bottle brought a message down the stream to me, asking that I go away with him to new lands—with words of love and appeal to my hungry heart. But I remembered the oath which bound me to this brute and signaled 'no' by a single shot. My husband grew suspicious at the sound of my gun and questioned me. I was silent; I would not lie. The next day I went again to the stream. His message came as before, bidding that I signal twice if I cared a little—that he might come and say 'good-bye' forever. I told my husband that I wanted flour from the mill and watched him depart for the village. I answered the dictates of my heart and signalled twice. He came to say 'farewell.' My husband must have forgotten something, for as our hands were clasped in parting my husband fired from ambush and Paul fell wounded at my feet. I tried to explain. My husband only sneered, and with an oath drove me before him toward the cabin. Paul, fearing for my safety, followed in pain to my window—and fell exhausted. My husband mocked his piteous call for water and in my suffering I begged that he would kill me with a knife I had quickly taken from the table. To this he only laughed—a brutal laugh—and in answer to my pleading, gathered me roughly in his arms. I struggled and broke away from him. As we stood facing each other across the table, with fury in our eyes, he made a quick lunge at me with the knife. His weight knocked the table over and, as he fell, the knife intended for me buried itself deeply in his side."

The vigilantes, with bowed heads, slowly go, leaving the two in fuller understanding and happy anticipation.

A MODERN WITNESS (July 11).—James Morgan, a blind author, dictates his stories to his sister, Gertrude. She takes one to a magazine office, and, the editor being out, leaves the story on his desk. Wilson Manning, an unsuccessful author, steals it, changes the title slightly, and sells it to the editor as his own. The story is published and is very successful. Cooley, a detective, is in love with Gertrude. He brings her a copy of the magazine. She sees the story and recognizes it as her brother's. But the detective, the author and the girl are unable to expose the thief.

Manning, who is elated over the success of his stolen story, gets a letter from the editor offering him five hundred dollars for another of equal merit. He disguises himself by shaving off his beard, goes to the house in which Gertrude and Jim live, and rents a room adjoining theirs, in the hope of stealing another story.

But Manning is unable to hear through the intervening wall. So he seizes an opportunity while Gertrude and Jim are out and installs a dictagraph between the rooms—appears through the wall. Cooley conceals himself and sees Manning steal into the room, attach the disk of the dictagraph to the wall, and conceal it with a picture.

Realizing the meaning of this, Cooley goes out and intercepts Gertrude and Jim. He gets Jim to dictate a completed story to Gertrude and allow Manning to steal it. This is done. Cooley brings the magazine editor to the house and he witnesses Manning's stealing of the story. The next day Manning goes to the editor's office with a manuscript of the second stolen story. The editor shows him Jim's manuscript, which is identical with his. Manning is then confronted by the blind Manning confesses, restores some of the money he received for the first story, and leaves in disgrace. The editor purchases Jim's manuscript. Cooley and Gertrude are left alone, and he winds the wires of the dictagraph about them both. They are thus drawn together by an ancient sentiment—love, and a modern witness—the dictagraph.

IMP

THE WOP (July 10).—Luigi is employed by Cramp, the millionaire contractor. He is a widower and lives alone with his daughter Rosie. There is a strike and Luigi tries to return to work but is hustled away by the labor pickets. The strike continues, and Luigi is reduced to abject poverty. Cramp is arrested for stealing a large sum of money but is treated as a gentleman. Grace, the daughter of the judge, devotes her time to charity in the poor quarters. Luigi and Rosie are freezing and Luigi goes to the railroad yards to pick some coal. He is arrested and dragged to jail, leaving Rosie at home waiting for his return, suffering from the cold. He tries to expostulate with the officer, but to no avail.

Cramp is released on alibi and when the trial comes up he receives a fine, while Tony is sentenced to two years at hard labor. He breaks down and, wild with rage, he curses the judge and threatens to get even. His sentence served, he hastens to his late home in search of Rosie, of whom he has heard nothing. He finds the house he lived in occupied by strangers who can tell him nothing of Rosie. He wanders forth on the street, asking every one he meets to tell him of Rose. He passes the house of the judge and sees the man who had sentenced him come out of the house with his daughter. Luigi is possessed of but one idea: to kill the child of the man who was the cause of his misery. That night he gains access to the house. In the bed is the form of a girl. Luigi enters and, the moonlight streaming in on the bed, he approaches it with drawn knife, stoops over and is about to plunge his knife into the bosom of the sleeper when she awakens, rises and looks at him—it is his daughter Rosie, who has been cared for by Grace. Luigi drops the knife and takes his beloved Rosie in his arms.

CRYSTAL

TRUE CHIVALRY (July 8).—Major Morgan makes an impassioned speech denouncing Colonel Allison, who is seeking the nomination for Governor of the State of Georgia. His son Dick saves the life of Georgia, the only daughter of Colonel Allison, by stopping her runaway horse. The colonel goes to the major's home and seeks to quarrel with him, but serious trouble is prevented by the major's wife. He returns home and is introduced to Dick by Georgia. He thanks the young man for saving his daughter's life, but orders him from the house, saying that in view of his strained relations with the major he could be friends with none of his family. The young couple, however, have fallen in love, and think it wrong that they should suffer for the personal quarrels of their parents. Unknown to her father Georgia attends a party where she knows she will meet Dick. Her father follows her there and takes her home. The following week a grand dance and affair is given by a matron of the country and the young couple are invited. Georgia's father finds out that she intends to meet Dick there and prevents her going. Dick attends and Georgia tells him over the telephone that her father has learned that they are not to be kept apart and intends taking her to California so as to be away from him. Dick immediately hastens to Georgia's home where he is let in by her. Jackson, the old butler, sees him passing a window on the porch and thinking him a burglar, tells Colonel Allison. The colonel hastens upstairs and discovers the young couple in each others arms. He immediately sends Georgia from the room and handing Dick a pistol insists on fighting a duel, claiming that his family's good name has been besmirched and a scandal raised by Dick's midnight visit to his daughter's boudoir. Dick refuses to shoot and Georgia re-enters the room. Her father insists that to avoid a scandal the young couple must be married immediately and they give an only too ready assent. The colonel telephones for a minister and, unknown to either, Georgia goes out and telephones to Dick's father to come over to the house. He arrives just as the ceremony is finished and is induced to shake hands with the colonel and forget their feud.

WHEN HE WORE THE BLUE (July 11).—Wifey wants Mac to go to the Suffragette meeting, but naturally Mac wants to get out of it and affects the gout. Wifey goes, and in answer to an urgent call from the Club, Mac unties the foot bandages and blithely sets forth. He and his companions have a bully game of cards, which is interrupted by some officious cops who proceed to arrest everyone in sight. Mac is not in sight, for he disappears through the window. Policeman 23 is on the alert and sees him and there is a lively chase up the fire escape, into a bedroom window, up the stairway and out on to the roof. Ha! Ha! cries Policeman 23; but he reckons beyond his host, for Mac is husky and overcomes the cop and borrows his costume, leaving him securely tied in an extremely draughty position. He is eventually rescued, but in the meantime Mac has his troubles. He is called upon to regulate the traffic and to quell a family disturbance. He is interrupted during a really pretty capture when his victim Policeman 23 appears on the scene. Mac makes explanations and his peace, and is enabled to get home before Wifey, having had an exciting time.

FRONTIER

THE FRONTIER TWINS START SOMETHING (July 10).—The beginning of this story is the ending of the twins' punishment for the pranks they played upon their luckless uncle, the professor, in their former appearance. They have been locked up in jail, behind ranch that big bluff Joe, who loves Vic, has had mercy upon them and brought them some good things to eat. Naturally he gives Vic more than Dot and right then the trouble begins. Dot and Vic have a small tussle as to which shall consume the eatables and Joe gets his face plastered with jelly as his share of the feast.

Father and mother come to visit their erring youngsters and are so impressed by their promises to be good that they release them. Mother thinks that young ladies should learn to cook and she has Dot and Vic peal apples and potatoes as a handy first lesson. When she has left them to the pursuit of their respective occupations the girls throw apples at their uncle until he is forced to forego his afternoon nap in the hammock. Wun Lung, the cook, takes his place and the girls unwittingly tie him in the hammock instead of their uncle.

They create so great a disturbance throwing apples and potatoes at Mammy and the cowboys and the burro that the entire ranch organization appeals to mother for protection, Father and Joe having gone to town on business. This fond parent is helpless to control her offsprings and the delegation decides to take vengeance in its own hands. Headed by Mammy with the butcher-knife, the pursuit is begun.

Meanwhile the twins have taken their supposed uncle, hammock and all, down to the irrigation ditch and souse him in the mud and water. This treatment failing to have the desired results, they tie the luckless Chinaman to a tree and heave apples at him until they grow weary. Then they leave him and hide out. The pursuit is continued, but soon this changes to a search, for the twins have effectually disposed of themselves in some place unknown.

Nobody misses the cook and the twins are asleep so things naturally return to their former place at the ranch while the youngsters dream of their next batch of mischief.

"101 BISON"

THE POWDER FLASH OF DEATH (Two Reel War Drama) (July 8).—Three pals—Reid, Neilan and Kirkland, breast the breakers of their roving life, with but one condition of creed—nothing was to come between them to sever or impair the sincerity of their ties of friendship. Regardless of what extremity of life they encountered, they religiously respected their one law of sharing alike; that is, until—

With the fall of Sumter, when the call to arms invaded homes and divided brother against brother, that same loyalty to their country's cause creates a triangle of sentiment that calls one of the pals to the South, one to the North and the remaining one to the more roving life of the guerilla.

For three years the blood of the nation is spilled in bitter strife. The same three years spared the three former pals and each in his peculiar lot has reached the office of captain. As the war raged, and each fought for his own respective people's cause, through the irony of fate their lines gradually converge toward a common point south of the Dixie line where dwells a Southern lass, one unconsciously destined to play a part in romance where tragedy was to unite for a brief moment the sundered ties of friendship, then call in death the three who once had been pals.

Her home was marred by the stain of war when a company of guerillas enter. And while she suffers the terror of that invasion, a Northern company and a Southern company likewise each skirmish for victory—each of the three common enemies commanded by three men who had during the reign of peace lived as pals.

And "She" is the prize for which a personal battle is waged—more bitter than that fought with shot and shell by the three common enemies. As their companies fight, the three captains agree (knowing that "she" would be had by but one) to stand backwardly to the points of an angle, lay a fuse to a charge of powder in the center, and at the flash turn to meet and begin firing—the winner to claim the prize.

And while the preparations are being made, "She" stands in terror to watch the ending. At the flash, three shots ring out. The Guerrilla captain falls and lies motionless, the Southerner staggers to his Northern pal with the dying words, "A woman bust us up after all." The Northerner clasps his extended hand as his pal falls, then, with an ever gathering stain on his own breast, he doffs with a valorous deference his own hat to the "Cause" and "joins in eternity" the two who were once his pals.

MAJESTIC

ONE ROUND O'BRIEN COMES BACK (June 29).—Times were hard for "One Round" O'Brien, the once famous pugilist. The proprietor of a theatre also felt the pinch of poverty, for the audiences which gathered in his auditorium were very small.

O'Brien suggested to the theatrical man that a sign be posted outside the theatre offering $50 to the man who could beat "One Round" in a boxing bout. The idea was adopted and the theatre was crowded with men who came to see the bouts. All who tested the prowess of O'Brien were quickly worsted. Frequently a sponge came hurling through the air in the thick of the conflict, and "One Round's" antagonist soon became helpless. The sponge contained chloroform which the ingenious pugilist used to secure the "sleep producing" punch.

Sad to relate the wrong man got the sponge one evening, and O'Brien himself took the count. The enraged theatrical owner kicked "One Round" into the street, and this time "One Round" did not come back.

GAFFNEY'S GLADIATOR (July 5).—Jack's rich uncle sends many and large remittances to perfect his nephew in sculpturing, which art he is supposed to be pursuing. Jack, however, spends all his remittances with his chum and together they have a glorious time with fellow artists and models. Jack, writing uncle that he is engaged on a statue of Apollo receives another remittance which is quickly squandered. Uncle sends word unexpectedly, that, accompanied by a friend, an art connoisseur, he is on his way to inspect the statue. Jack, never having started work, is in a quandary, but finally induces his chum to pose as Apollo. Uncle and friend admire Apollo's lifelike appearance and the friend desires to purchase the statue. Jack refuses but uncle insists on the sale, so in spite of the statue's frenzied gestures of dissent behind uncle's back, has to submit, only stipulating upon packing and delivering the statue himself personally.

The supposed statue is placed in the friend's house and much admired, but at the first opportunity rushes from the house, shivering and hiding from pedestrians until he reaches the studio where a merry party is awaiting his return. Meanwhile the friend and uncle find the pedestal empty and the front door open, so thinking that the statue has been stolen, invoke the aid of police and rush to the studio to tell Jack. There they interrupt the party, where Apollo, wrapped in a bathrobe, is pledging the merry crowd. Uncle sees through the scheme; Jack has to return the purchase money to uncle's friend and is marched off from studio life and artistic surroundings to remain under uncle's watchful eye.

THANHOUSER

A MODERN LOCHINVAR (June 29).—His family tree contained proof that Percy Lochinvar was descended from the bold Scotchman who won his sweetheart despite all opposition. Percy was proud of his ancestry, but privately admitted that he himself would be more likely to swim the East River to get away from a girl than to get one. For Percy was bashful.

He was deeply in love, but up to date had actually been afraid to propose. The girl liked him and showed it, but the young man could never nerve himself up to pop the question.

The girl's mother was an ardent suffragist, and she often referred to Percy as the meek type of man that should be controlled by woman, his rightful ruler. Another suitor, a bold, self-reliant man, noted as a lawyer, artfully protested his loyalty to the cause of suffrage and won the mother's heart. The girl did not like the lawyer nearly as well as her timid suitor, but when the orator was selected to deliver a speech at the suffrage parade in New York City, it seemed as though Percy was hopelessly out of the race for the girl's hand.

Poor Percy was a melancholy spectator of the beginning of the parade and saw the girl he loved ride by in an auto with his hated rival. Then Percy went home and gloomily decided that life had lost all its charms. Fortunately for him, he glanced at the portrait of his bold ancestor, which was hanging on the wall. The spirit of days gone by revived and nerved him. What one Lochinvar had done, Percy decided, another Lochinvar would do; then he seized his hat and started out to make history repeat itself.

When he arrives at the grand stand he found the young orator completely surrounded by his own eloquence. The girl's mother was listening with admiration, and already had decided that he should be her son-in-law. The girl was weary and inattentive. Young Lochinvar appeared and with an imperious gesture bore her off. They returned later just as the orator had concluded his speech, and blithely informed him that they had "just stepped out and got married."

Thus did the Twentieth Century Lochinvar vindicate the traditions of his race.

HER TWO JEWELS (July 4).—The wealthy widow lived a selfish life, with little regard or consideration for anybody except her son. He was her idol and she was blind to all his faults.

The young man gave his mother a handsome jeweled pin, and the woman proudly wore it on her dress. But that very day an inkwell on her desk upset and her handsome gown was stained. A girl from the dress cleaners arrived to take the dress away, and the owner, who had now changed to another gown, took the soiled dress to the window, where she showed the stains to the messenger.

After the girl had gone the woman discovered that the pin had disappeared and a careful search revealed no trace of it in her room. She decided, although she did not know positively, that the girl must have taken it. The pin was not in the gown when it reached the shop, the girl was accused of theft by the woman, and was sent to prison. A short time later it was proven that the pin fell from the window while the widow was showing the gown to the girl and was found by a little Italian boy. The girl, her innocence established, was released from prison, but the woman made no effort to atone for her error.

A few years later the woman received a shock when her son informed her that he was going to marry a girl for whom he cared very much, although he admitted that she was a manicurist. The mother argued with him, but could not change his mind, so she decided to call on the manicurist herself and bribe her to renounce her son. But to her surprise and consternation the manicurist proved to be the little cleaner girl whom she had so grievously wronged. The manicurist was no longer as light-hearted as she had been in the days gone by, and she scornfully told the mother that she could not buy her off and she intended to marry her son. The woman pleaded, but she found no mercy in the girl whom she had given none.

The manicurist married the son, and it is generally conceded by those who knew him in the past that she made a man of him. The widow sees very little of her son and lives alone, revengeful and unforgiving.

PATHE

PATHE'S WEEKLY (June 30).

THE MIRACLE OF THE ROSES (July 1).—Forced to desparation by the hunger of his starving wife and child Hughes, a woodchopper, steals a lamb from a neighboring shepherd. He is arrested and brought before the Margrave of Thuringe. Under the ancient Germanic law he is sentenced to death. but Elizabeth, the wife of the Margrave, pleads so eloquently with her husband that the woodchopper's life is spared and instead he is sentenced to work his own way out of his poverty and his neighbors forbidden to help him under penalty of death. Her heart touched by the plight of Hughes, Elizabeth defies the law and with an apron full of edibles she goes to the home of the woodchopper. She has just arrived there when the soldiers of the Margrave enter and demand to know what the apron contains. Elizabeth with a nerveless hand, drops her apron and there falls at her feet a shower of roses.

THE MISSIONARY'S TRIUMPH (July 2).—Into the rough life of a mining camp comes Miss Hazel Meredith, gentle, kind and good, and determined to implant religious fervor in the hearts of the miners. Sizing up the situation, Miss Meredith realizes that to win she must help the men overcome their passion for alcoholic liquors supplied by a band of Moonshiners. With the help of her beauty and charming personality and the assistance of Bob Fordham she accomplishes her purpose, but the Moonshiners, blaming Bob for wrecking their nefarious trade, plan vengeance. Bob would have been killed, in all probability, but for the quick wit and bravery of the missionary, who summoned Bob's fellow workers. Thoroughly indignant, the miners rise as one man and force the Moonshiners to leave hastily for other parts.

THE JOY RIDE (July 3).—Harry, the chauffeur for James Van Cliff, the banker, while driving over a manhole, spattered Flossie Footlights with mud. He was alone in the car and to make amends he took Flossie for a joy ride. Flossie found Van Cliff's card in the car and asked Harry if he was Van Cliff. "Yes," said Harry, shyly, and Flossie fell in love immediately. So engrossed was Harry that he forgot the speed law. In court the next morning he was sentenced to a month in prison. After getting into prison he got into a fight and then got into the hospital. After getting out thirty days later, Harry met Flossie and Harry's wife met them both. Harry hasn't been joy riding since.

PATHE'S WEEKLY (July 3).

CONSECRATION OF A BUDDHIST PRIEST (July 4).—The strange and rather weird ceremony incidental to the consecration of a Buddhist priest. Preceded by a crops of musicians the future priest marches with his family to the temple and there the musicians, personifying the evil spirit take turns at tempting the young candidate, thus allowing him an opportunity to show his strength of character. Finally, he is presented with his sacred vestments which he accepts after a curious ceremony.

PISA, ITALY, AND ITS CURIOUS MONUMENTS.—A tour through the city of Pisa, stopping before its landmarks, which are all very old, and culminating with a view of the Leaning Tower, the most famous structure in the world.

A MODERN GARRICK (July 5).—Garrick, in the heyday of his popularity, was a super compared to Hamspiel, the famous matinee idol. Hamspiel was playing Romeo when first Gwendoline Martin saw him from a box seat. That was enough. Immediately Gwendoline fell in love and a mania for playing Juliet possessed her, leaving no room for affection for her old sweetheart. This young fellow enlisted the services of a hypnotist and with the assistance of the clever Hamspiel himself Gwendoline lost all ambition to be his leading lady.

LOVE'S QUARANTINE (July 5).—In his love affair with Dot Hogan, Cutey meets with an insurmountable obstacle; her papa absolutely forbids him to meet or speak with her. Reading in the paper of a family quarantined because of small-pox, Cutey is seized by what he considers a bright idea and sees a way out of his difficulties. Making a clandestine appointment with Dot, he explains his scheme to her and they enlist the help of the cook and two of Cutey's friends.

That evening the cook is apparently seized by violent illness as she is bringing up the dinner and has to be carried to her room. Dot, who is sent to fetch the doctor, quickly rushes to Cutey's house and tells him to hurry along. She finds him disguised in a Vandyke beard and made up to look like a physician, while with him are two of his friends dressed as policemen. Cutey returns with her and is taken to Bridget's room.

After feeling her pulse, listening to her heart, looking at her tongue, and so on, he pronounces her case to be one of small-pox and says that he must inform the authorities. He telephones to his two friends, who come right along. The two fake police officers tell Pa Hogan that his house is quarantined and that no one may pass either in or out.

Cutey and Dot remain in Bridget's room, ostensibly to look after the sick woman, while Pa and Ma Hogan sit by the window of the drawing-room on the first floor. They overhear the conversation of the two "policemen," who are sitting on the grass below, and the whole plot becomes clear to them. Rushing upstairs to Bridget's room and looking through the keyhole they see the cook enjoying a glass of wine while Dot and Cutey are making the best of their time by cuddling one another.

Pa Hogan gets his dander up and, entering the room, snatches off Cutey's beard and then proceeds to throw him downstairs. Finally the "doctor" is thrown out of the drawing-room window and lands on top of his astonished friends, the police, below. They all beat it hastily, fearing to stay for further interviews with the infuriated Hogan. Poor Dot goes into tears for it is now evident that she has seen the last of Cutey for quite some time to come.

SAUCE FOR THE GOOSE (July 1).—Partly from its position and partly from the lack of enterprise on the part of its owner, "Cutlett's Cafe" on Canine avenue is in pretty bad shape from a business standpoint. More frequently than not it is the staff which consumes the delicatessen and other dainties set out on the menu, hence the desire of the proprietor to sell out. When the agent informs him that a prospective buyer is coming around to view the property but is afraid there will be "nothing doing" because of the lack of customers, Mr. Cutlett hits upon the brilliant yet simple expedient of giving free lunches at the time the buyer is due. The result is a fast-increasing crowd necessitating the forming of a long queue of customers waiting for the places of the early arrivals. The buyer arrives on a very busy scene indeed, and goes away apparently delighted. Next morning the hills for the supplies begin to pour in, but although the sums are enormous Mr. Cutlett is so optimistic about the sale of the restaurant that he receives all his debtors with a smile of assurance. Imagine the poor man's feelings when he is informed that his friend the buyer was looking for a quiet little place with about a dozen steady customers, and will have none of "Cutlett's Cafe." We leave the deluded Cutlett to the tender mercies of his creditors and a crowd of people looking for another free lunch.

On the same reel:

ATOM LIFE IN THE DEEP.—The surface layer of the sea is peopled with an infinite number of little creatures to which the name "plankton" is given, who rely chiefly upon sea currents for movement. It is upon plankton that shoals of sardines, herrings, mackerel, etc., depend for nourishment. The film gives a highly interesting description of these tiny denizens of the sea, showing the catching of specimens in a silken net so finely woven that 20,000 meshes are enclosed to the square inch. Inspecting plankton under the microscope, one is struck by the remarkable structure of these minute creatures, they having the strangest shape imaginable, whilst such movements as they possess are weird in the extreme, and the tiny fish vary in size from a thousandth to a fourth of an inch in length. The specimens shown include infusoria, pagures, copepodes, the obelia jellyfish and the porcellan crab. This film is an interesting and valuable study and should earn the appreciation of all classes.

THE CODE OF THE U. S. (July 3).—At an eventful lawn party in Washington, Ned Burton, of the United States Diplomatic service, becomes attracted by the wiles of Nedda Baroff, an adventuress.

Oti Noji, an emissary of the Japanese Government, recognizes Nedda and proposes that she steal the cipher code book of the Diplomatic Service.

Burton is plainly infatuated with Nedda, and in a diplomatic office Nedda manages by a clever ruse to obtain possession of a code book.

Burton discovers his loss and he tracks Nedda to a rendezvous with Noji by a ruined mill, just as Nedda is telling the Japanese how she has fooled Burton. Ned breaks in the door and endeavors to gain possession of the hook. He is attacked and in the struggle the lamp is overturned and the mill is in flames. Burton is struck down by Noji and he is left to die in the flames. By a superhuman effort he manages to escape and tracks the conspirators as they are leaving their hotel en route to Japan.

Burton follows their automobile and while in transit manages to jump on the machine, opens their package, securing the coveted book, and leaves a dummy in its place.

The conspirators arrive in Japan to claim their reward from the Government when, to their intense surprise, they discover that the supposed code book has been substituted by a useless one.

OBSERVATIONS OF AN EXPERT.

Simplex

led all other projectors in quality and appearance at the recent Exposition at Olympia in London, England. We quote the following from a man you all know:

The Precision Machine Co., Inc., April 14th, 1913.
317 E. 24th Street, New York.

Gentlemen:—As per your request, while in London recently, at the Cinematograph Exposition at Olympia, I interested myself in looking after the exhibition of the Simplex machine. Without doubt, it is the greatest and most solid looking projector exhibited at Olympia. In talking with exhibitors, it was generally conceded that the Simplex led all other machines at the Exposition, and in all new theatres that were being installed the Simplex was accepted as the up-to-date machine.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) F. E. Samuels, Secretary,
International Exposition Motion Picture Art.

Will the Simplex lead at the Exposition at Grand Central Palace in New York, July 7th to 12th? Come and judge for yourself. See the Simplex and other machines and draw your own conclusions. You are cordially invited to visit our factory. Nothing pleases us more than to show our wonderful equipment to an expert mechanic. It is interesting to the layman as well as the expert. To those who cannot come, catalogue B will furnish much information.

FILMS WILL SHOW HOW TO FIGHT TUBERCULOSIS

A novel method of fighting tuberculosis will be instituted in Mount Morris Park, when moving pictures will be used to educate the public in methods of its cure and prevention. The Department of Health is conducting the exhibitions, assisted by the Committee on the Prevention of Tuberculosis. Last year the attendance was more than one hundred thousand, and it is expected that the moving pictures will be even more popular this year.

The moving picture show in Mount Morris Park is the first of a series of twenty-four to be given this summer in the parks, and on the recreation piers of this city.

The exhibitions, which begin promptly at 8 o'clock, are scheduled as follows:

June 16—Mount Morris Park, 120th street and Madison avenue.
June 17—Thomas Jefferson Park, 112th street and First avenue.
June 18—East River Park, 84th street and East End avenue.
June 19—St. Gabriel's Park, 35th street and Second avenue.
June 23—Madison Square Park, 23d street and Fifth avenue.
June 24—Stuyvesant Square, 16th street and Second avenue.
June 25—Tompkins Square, 10th street and Avenue A.
June 26—Hamilton Fish Park, East Houston and Willett streets.
June 30—Corlears Hook Park, Jackson and Cherry streets.
July 1—William H. Seward Park, Essex and Division streets.
July 2—Mulberry Bend Park, Baxter and Bayard streets.
July 3—Battery Park, Battery Place and State street.
July 7—Hudson Park, Hudson and Leroy streets.
July 8—Washington Square, 7th street and Fifth avenue.
July 9—Alexander Hamilton Park, 27th street and Tenth avenue.
July 10—De Witt Clinton Park, 52d street and Eleventh avenue.
July 14—Recreation Pier, West 50th street.
July 16—Recreation Pier, East 112th street.
July 18—Recreation Pier, East 24th street.
July 19—Recreation Pier, East 3d street.
July 21—Recreation Pier, Market street and East River.
July 22—Crotona Park, Tremont and Third avenues, The Bronx.
July 23—Claremont Park, 170th street and Webster avenue, The Bronx.
July 24—St. Mary's Park, 149th street and St. Ann's avenue, The Bronx.

ATTENDANCE AT CHICAGO THEATRES HAVE INCREASED SINCE ONLY CLEAN PICTURES ARE ALLOWED

According to the Record-Herald, Chicago is a moral city. Patrons of nickel theatres appreciate clean pictures and clean songs. The only reason they tolerated the other kind was because they had to have some amusement and had to take what the managers offered.

These are the conclusions reached by Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, second deputy superintendent of police and guardian of the city's morals. He has based his conclusions on facts, too, for he has received private reports that the fusiness of the moving picture theatres has increased from 25 to 50 per cent since his censorship board got into action.

Major Funkhouser has laid down four fundamental rules which he requires owners of moving picture theatres to observe. They cannot show films which depict crime, show degradation of women, ridicule constituted authority or make heroes of criminals.

The censorship board is now condemning an average of 6,000 feet of films a week, and the result(according to Major Funkhouser, is that, especially in residential districts, the patronage of the theatres is steadily increasing. Parents are no longer afraid to allow their children to go to the theatres. The guardian of public morals is making his rules on censorship on the theory that four-fifths of the patrons of the moving picture houses are children, and films that would be all right for older persons are cut out on that account.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Permit for the erection of a moving picture theatre, to be built on the southwest corner of Twelfth street and Girard avenue, was granted to George Hogg, contractor. Kahn & Greenberg, the owners, will erect buildings to cost $12,600. Stuckert & Sloan, architects.

Racine, Wis.—Walter M. Burke signed the contracts for the erection of a show house on the north side of Elizabeth street, just west of Howland avenue, Kenosha.

OPERATORS' CHAT

MOVING PICTURE MACHINE OPERATORS' UNION OF GREATER NEW YORK, INC., LOCAL No. 1

President—Robert Goldblatt.
Vice-President—James Daisie.
Secretary-Treasurer—Robert Levy.
Recording Secretary—George Epstein.
Sergeant-at-Arms—Ed. Spinola.
Business Representative—J. A. LeRoy.
Telephone—Stuyvesant 619
Office—133 Third Avenue.

The attendance at the last open meeting of the M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 was excellent, between 250 and 300 operators from the five boroughs of this city being present, and it was most gratifying to note that the majority were strangers. The many friendly discussions of the operators' craft were attentively listened to and heartily applauded. The effect of the speeches was apparent when over a dozen operators who were not members of any organization went to the treasurer's desk, put down their fee and made application for membership in M. P. M. O. U. No. 1. Quite a number who did not have the fee with them pledged themselves to appear at the office and pay their application fee there. After the regular routine of business of an open meeting all those who were present were invited to the large dining room, where refreshments in the way of eatables and liquids were dispensed in a generous manner to satisfy the inner man.

The meeting and lunch closed at 4 a. m. with every one well satisfied that they had a beneficial time, both mentally and physically.

* * * * * * *

The past week witnessed an awakening on the part of many operators who appeared at the office and made application for membership in M. P. M. O. U. No. 1. From last Tuesday until Sunday the average was five a day. Twenty-eight applicants for membership in six days is quite a record for the present organization, which is not quite a year old. It seems to be quite a lively youngster for its age and is steadily growing.

Now, as has been noted in previous issues of the Moving Picture News, the welfare of the operator is one of the main points of this organization. During the last six months many complaints have been made by operators that in addition to unsanitary operating rooms (usually called coops, hooths and many other names not fit to print) the operators had trouble with their eyes, and several cases of temporary blindness have occurred. The writer has, during the last few weeks, taken this matter up with the purpose in view to find out a safe and sure method to eliminate this eye trouble, and has been in touch with prominent oculists and others who are versed in such matters. In next week's Chat a brief resume of these eye troubles will be given and the latest and most efficient remedy for same will be disclosed and so enable all operators to receive a sure and simple remedy which will benefit the eye and cause no injury.

Well, boys, our chairman of the Moonlight Excursion Committee is reporting rushing business, and tickets are being snapped up like hot cakes, and it is our belief that at the present rate there may be a necessity of chartering another big side-wheeler to accommodate the throng of pleasure seekers.

That this affair is the novelty sensation of the season is the consensus of opinion, not only of the general public but of the staid rivermen who make it a business of chartering boats for excursions. These men say that they never in all their experience have heard of or remember an affair of this sort, that is to say, a combination moonlight excursion, dance and cabaret entertainment, and they themselves have asked the chairman to furnish them with tickets so as they could sell them to people we cannot reach, and they believe that they would enjoy this strange but novel experience.

For the benefit of the operators who fear that they will not be able to enjoy this affair let it be stated that, although the boat will be moored to the dock at 8 o'clock in the evening she will not sail until 12 o'clock midnight, so as to give those who desire to attend a chance to enjoy themselves. And besides, there will be dancing on board ship commencing at 9 o'clock so that the time may pass pleasantly for those who are coming in the earlier part of the evening and are waiting for the boat to leave the pier.

Last but not least: Remember the date, SATURDAY, AUG. 2, 1913. Tickets—Gentlemen $1.00, Ladies 50c.

The McAllister Co.'s three-decker Starina will leave foot of East 24th street, Recreation Pier, East River.

J. A. LE ROY,
Business Representative.

Next regular meeting of M. P. M. O. U. No. 1 will be on Monday, June 30, 1913, at 12 p. m., at Teutonia Hall, 66 Essex street.

* * * * * * *

Don't fail to make your application for membership NOW at the low rate, at the office, 133 Third avenue, New York City, 10 a. m. to 5 p. m. daily.

FILMS STOLEN

The following films were stolen from Twenty-third street and Sixth avenue on Monday, June 23d: "Rival Engineers" (two reels), "House of Darkness," "Love Before Ten," "The Portrait," and "House in Suburbia." They were being taken from the General Film Company to the Progress Theatre, 1894 Third avenue, Manhattan. The manager, Mr. Stern, offers a reward of $50 for the return of same.

THROWING "MORE LIGHT" ON THE SCREEN

Otis-Renner Amusement Company, operating the Lyric Theatre, Hackensack, N. J., have remodeled the building and will soon open. To get the best possible results and brilliant pictures they will instal a Hallberg A. C. to D. C. Economizer. Mr. J. H. Hallberg reports that he has received some very flattering letters from users of these devices, and any exhibitor not satisfied with his picture should write him for full particulars of this apparatus.

JAMES K. HACKETT AGAIN FACES THE CAMERA

In the powerful character of "Jean Valjean," the convict in "The Bishop's Candlesticks," Mr. James K. Hackett will make his second flight into filmland, concluding a contract entered into between Ernest Shipman and his business associates in the Golden State Motion Picture Company of California, which was made last October.

The pronounced success of "The Prisoner of Zenda" has decided the directors of the Golden State Company to release this subject at once, which, duly protected by copyright, as the Hackett acting version, will be made under the personal direction of Mr. Hackett.

THE EDISON KINETOSCOPE

an unsurpassed moving picture machine from every point of view. Once used always used.

You're losing money every day you keep the old, cheap picture machine on the job. People don't want to tire their eyes on flickering pictures or wait while you entertain them with an "intermission for repairs." That's why they're flocking to the show in the next block. Get them back—with an Edison Kinetoscope.

The rock-steady, brilliant pictures thrown by the Edison are the kind they want to see. The repair money saved by the Edison is the money you might as well save. The Kinetoscope is Thomas A. Edison's machine—the one he invented and perfected—the one that will do you the most good. Write us today for Catalog 500 and a copy of the Edison Kinetogram.
